New York, May 26. The Herald's Washington despatch says prompt efforts have been made to reinforce Gen. Banks, and it is supposed that by to-day Gen. Miles will have reinforced Banks with a considerable force.

The World says the immense rebel armies which made their appearance so suddenly in Western Virginia, give color to a rumor from a Kentucky paper, that it is the intention of the rebel leaders to withdraw from the coast and invade Northern States, if possible, in two columns. One by way of Pennsylvania under Gen. Joe Johnson, and another under Gen. Lee marching from Cumberland Gap to Louisville, and if possible, crossing the Ohio to Cincinnati.

We have no fears but a few days will turn the tide of victory in the right direction.

Cincinnati, May 24. Col. Heth with 3000 rebels attacked our forces under Col. Crook yesterday, at Lewisburg. After a severe fight the rebels were completely routed. Our loss was ten killed, 40 wounded and 8 missing. The rebel loss was much greater. We captured four cannon, 200 stand of arms, 100 prisoners, a Lieutenant Colonel, one Major, several Captains and Lieutenants.

Fortress Monroe, May 24. It is reported that Gen. Burnside has taken Raleigh.

The Ellen Terry arrived from Newbern this afternoon. She reports that the American flag was raised in Raleigh some three or four days ago by the citizens.

The Volunteer Militia Called Out.

The general and special orders issued this morning by His Excellency the Governor and Commander-in-Chief are startling in their nature, as well as in regard to their object. It will be seen that all the available Volunteer Militia force of the Commonwealth is called out instanter, without the interruption of the customary military forms. No doubt Governor Andrew will be justified in his declaration that "Massachusetts will repeat the patriotism, enthusiasm and glory of April '61."

A PROCLAMATION.

By the Gov. and Commander in-Chief.

MEN OF MASSACHUSETTS—The wily and barbarous horde of traitors to the People, to the Government, to our Country and to Liberty menace again the national capital. They have attacked and routed Major General Banks—are advancing on Harper's Ferry—and are marching on Washington.

The President calls on Massachusetts to rise once more for its rescue and defense. The whole active militia will be summoned by a general order issued from the office of the Adjutant General to report on Boston Common to-morrow.

They will march to relieve and avenge their brethren and friends, to oppose with fiery zeal and courageous patriotism the progress of the foe.

May God encourage their hearts and strengthen their arms, and may he inspire the Government and all the people.

Given at headquarters in Boston, at eleven o'clock of this Sunday evening, May 25th, A. D., 1862. JOHN A. ANDREW.

Washington, May 26. The following is the latest dispatch received at the War Department from General Banks:—

WILLIAMSPORT, May 26.

Hon. Edwin M. Stanton, Sec. of War.

We believe that our whole force, trains and all, will cross in safety. The men are in fine spirits, and crossing in order.

The labor of last night was fearful. The enemy followed us last night on our march, but has not made his appearance this morning.

The news of your movements South has unquestionably caused them to look out for their safety.

Your dispatch was read to the troops this morning amid the heartiest cheers.

N. P. BANKS, Major Gen. Commanding.

Washington, May 26. The excitement of yesterday has subsided, and all seem convinced that if Gen. Banks is properly reinforced, he will not only be able to check any advance of the enemy, but to drive them back.

The dispatches received by Gov. Andrew last night from the Secretary of War, show that the Government is aware that an important military movement was necessary to preserve the Federal Capital.

The first dispatch stated that Gen. Banks had been defeated, and the enemy were marching in full force on Harper's Ferry.

The second dispatch stated that reliable information had been received from various sources that the enemy were also marching on Washington in great numbers, and the Governor was ordered to forward without delay all the troops that could be raised, with militia and volunteers.

At two o'clock, two dispatches were received from Gen. Banks, one dated at Martinsburg, and the other between Martinsburg and Williamsport, in which he said that he had saved his baggage train and most of his command, and should without doubt cross the river in safety.

New York, May 26. Special dispatches from Washington state that it is rumored that Jackson is retreating more rapidly than he advanced.

A balloon reconnoissance from Gen. McClellan's headquarters, disclosed the fact that the rebels were evacuating Richmond.

ITEMS.

☞ The state of Europe is thus described by the paragrapher of the Boston Post:—

"Hungry workmen, in procession, parade the streets of Liverpool and Paris, in the French Legislative body, a serious quarrel is springing up with the Emperor, which may ere long lead to another coup, at Rome, all was alarm, under an apprehension of a 'popular demonstration,' in consequence of which the French garrison had been placed under arms, Corso closed, and the Papal troops confined to the barracks. In Greece, a rebellion is in full blast, and in Turkey, its next door neighbor, the Turks and Christians have just been having a free fight, resulting in the sacrifice, some reports say, of a thousand lives. With troubles thus all round in the old world—we do not know that even with rebellion on our hands, the United States is not, after all, about the quietest place on earth for a Peace-Society man to dwell in."

RENUNCIATION OF SPIRITUALISM.—Rev. O. D. Miller of Nashua, N. H., who says he has been a spiritualist medium for nearly eleven years, writes to the Christian Freeman of the 31st ult., that seeing no prospect of good resulting from spiritualism, and that it has been the source of a great deal of suffering and harm to him, he has thought it his duty to renounce it, and hopes others may profit by his sad experience. Further, he enters his solemn protest against it, as fraught with much evil to the community.

FRENCH NAVAL CONFERENCE.—A conference of naval officers is reported to have met recently in Paris at the house of a vice-admiral, to consider the great question raised by the Merrimac and Monitor encounter, and they are understood to have resolved unanimously that France can build as many Monitors in a month as she has arsenals, and that in a year she could fit out a fleet equal to any that the utmost efforts of England could oppose to her.—London News, C. W.

DISTRESS IN MANCHESTER.—According to the returns of the chief constable of Manchester, England, made up to Tuesday, April 8th, upwards of eight thousand workmen are totally out of employment in that city alone, while nearly double that number are on short time.

THE EMPRESS.—Of late the Empress does not join in the Ministerial deliberations. The reason generally given is, that she was blamed for everything that appeared like a favor extended to the Pope, and this unconsciously, and perhaps undeservedly, makes many bitter enemies.—Paris Letter.

☞ Recent excavations in Rome have disclosed the magnificent entrance to the palace of the Cæsars, called the Olivus Palatinus. It is the same width as the ordinary Roman roads, and like the Appian Way, is paved with huge blocks of stone.

To Brethren indebted for Tracts.

I have said nothing to you for a good while. I am now almost entirely out of tracts. I want to publish more—also books. I do not intend to get in debt, but pay as I go. I am hoping immediately to make important changes in my business, so as to furnish more books for less money than heretofore. Now all who owe for books will confer a favor by paying up what they owe if they CAN, or if they are unable to do that, let me know the fact. All the books I have sent you have cost me the money, and I wish to send out more when I can. Those who wish for books or tracts can send their orders as usual. They are FREE to the poor. Let us hear from you. Direct to H. L. HASTINGS, Boston, Mass.

P. S. Persons indebted to the Crisis office for books, should send the pay to Bro. Grant as soon as they can conveniently. H. L. H.

Notice.—The Tract Fund.

Tracts of the old approved sorts are soon to be manufactured in large quantities for the Christian Publication Society. Churches or individuals who have contributed to the $500 Tract Fund, can have a portion of their donations returned to them in tracts, if they wish; and they can have the tracts printed with a notice of their place of worship on each one, at a small cost, (say 50 cts.), provided they wish for not less than five hundred copies of any one tract, and will send me immediate directions about it. The price of tracts to contributors will be about 1800 pages for $1.00.

As the $500 Fund is now made up, subscribers who have not paid will remit their subscriptions to MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass., as soon as convenient. Persons still wishing to contribute can do likewise, for "yet there is room." H. L. HASTINGS, President.

Boston, April 21st, '62.

Subscription to the Tract Fund of the C. P. S.

Amount pledged from Oct. 22d, 1861, to May 1st, 1862, $505.74

| Emilie Ayres | 25 00 |
| A Friend in New Bedford | 2.00 |
| H. B. Cross | 1.00 |

☞ Let others who wish to aid in this work send their pledges or subscriptions to MILES GRANT, Editor of the World's Crisis, Boston, Mass." Any amount is acceptable, from a talent of gold down to a widow's mite. H. L. HASTINGS, Pres. C. P. S.

The Crisis for the Soldiers.

We will send a FEW copies of the Crisis FREE to soldiers in camp, if it is desired, and ordered by them, or by their friends. Any persons wishing to send the Crisis to their friends in the army, can have it sent for half price, or 50 cts for six months, or $1.00 per year. Send orders to Miles Grant, Boston, Mass., and keep him notified of all changes in location, etc.

H. L. HASTINGS, Pres. C. P. S.

Notice.

For the brethren at Machias Port, Me.

I have found a Brother that will come and stay a few weeks in that vicinity, in July, if the brethren wish him. They must notify him soon, so that he can make arrangements to go when some one comes to Boston that will take him on board. Direct to J. W. White, Portsmouth, N. H. This is the man you want. HIRAM MUNGER.

Notice.

The Lord willing, there will be a conference meeting in Buchanan, Mich., to commence on the evening of the 26th of June, and continue over the following Sabbath. We hope to see a general gathering of our scattered friends at this meeting. Let us make this meeting a subject of prayer, that much good be accomplished. Bro. Israel Dammon is expected to be present.

D. R. & M. S. MANSFIELD.

Grove and Camp Meeting.

Good news to the happy souls who gathered last year at Tremont, Mass., for divine worship in the grove. There will be another grove and campmeeting in the vicinity of the Tremont Depot, West Wareham, Mass., commencing Tuesday evening, June 24th, 1862, and continuing over the following Sunday. Eld. M. Grant, H. L. Hastings, if possible, and others will be present to preach the word. Many things promise to make this an interesting and profitable meeting. First, the blessing of God upon us last year. Those who were there will welcome us again, and bring others with them. Second, its location—easy of access to many churches. It is situated on the Fairhaven and Boston, R. R., at its junction with the Cape Cod R. R.; fare reduced on this road from Middleboro and New Bedford. We expect a good representation from New Bedford, Mattapoisett, Plymouth, Carver, Middleboro, Taunton, and perhaps from Boston. Third, its accommodations, a beautiful grove, in the midst of an orderly people; good board provided cheaper than by ourselves, lodging in private dwellings near by, or in tents, as chosen. Fourth, the cheering evidences that we are nearing our eternal home, cannot fail to awaken an unusual interest in every believing heart. Come then, one and all, prepare for a good meeting, pray much about it, come to labor for precious souls, come full of the blessing of Christ, come early, come to stay through the meeting, come, and may many kind friends in Tremont bless the day of our coming. In behalf of many brethren,

H. F. CARPENTER.

Annual Conference.

The Western New York General Association will hold their annual conference at Seneca Falls, N. Y., commencing on Thursday evening, June 5th, 1862. This is an important gathering, and all the brethren and sisters within the limits of the association, who possibly can, should endeavor to be present, and aid both by their counsel and means in advocating the cause of our Master. Let us have at least one delegate from every church within the association limits, or beyond, if such church should wish to be recognized among us. A general invitation is extended to all, both ministers and laymen. Come up to the "Feast of Love." By order of the committee of appointments.

E. BURR, Secretary.

Conference Notice.

The next session of the Maine Central Quarterly Conference will be held in Belgrade (Baptist meeting-house) commencing Thursday, June 12th, at six o'clock, P. M., and continue over the Sabbath. Brethren from abroad will call on Bro. David Rockwood (Rockwood's Corner.) We hope to see a full meeting, and the power of God in our midst to save sinners. Come, brethren and sisters. This is a new place. The hearts of the people are open to feed man and beast, and let us try to feed them with the word of life.

Per order, H. B. SEVEY.
I. C. WELLCOME, Scribe.

Wilbraham Campmeeting.

I find many have got the idea from Bro. Boutell's notice, a few weeks since, that the Wilbraham campmeeting was removed. This is a mistake. The meeting will commence as last year, the last week in August. I was on the ground last week, and the tent frames are all in good order, and the inhabitants are looking forward with more anxiety than ever for the time to arrive when they can hear something on the signs of the times. In due time you will see the appointment from the committee. HIRAM MUNGER.

H. L. HASTINGS' BOOK LIST.

☞ A LIBERAL DISCOUNT is allowed on Books when ordered by preachers, or by those who buy largely, either to distribute or to sell. Fifteen dollars' worth of books will be sent by express for TEN DOLLARS. All orders should be accompanied by the CASH. Any book on the list will be sent by mail, PREPAID, on receipt of the price.

Thessalonica: or, The Model Church. A Sketch of Primitive Christianity. 24 1OMO. Paper, 25 cts. Cloth, 40 cts.

[illegible]

The Great Controversy Between God and Man: Its Origin, Progress and End. A Sketch of Man's "Secession and Rebellion." 24 1OMO. Paper, 25 cts. Cloth, 40 cts.

A well-meant and well-written book. Banner of the Cross. [illegible] I read it with much satisfaction. Bishop J. H. Hopkins. [illegible] The most gifted and eloquent of those who, in this country, maintain this view. Prof. C. F. Hudson.

Reasons for my Hope, and the Tokens of its Speedy Realization. 24 1OMO. Paper, 25 cts. Cloth, 40 cts.

Containing an exposition of the hope of the Church—abounding in facts pertaining to Prophecy, the signs of the times, the increase of knowledge, spread of the Gospel, Missions, Tracts, Bible translations, Bible societies, &c. The Statistics alone are worth many times the price of the book.

Retribution; or, The Doom of the Ungodly, after the Resurrection of the Dead, Just and Unjust. Paper, 20 cts. Cloth, 30 cts.

A solemn and earnest argument in proof of the resurrection of the dead, just and unjust, the punishment of the ungodly in the lake of fire, the second death; and a refutation of the notion that wicked men have no resurrection, judgment, or conscious punishment after death. Judging from the reception it meets with, it hits the nail on the head!

Pauline Theology; or, The Scripture Doctrine of Future Punishment, as taught in the Epistles of Paul. 12th 1000. Paper, 15 cts.

This work contains the passages on future punishment found in Paul's FOURTEEN EPISTLES. His words are quoted and defined in Greek and in English. Many, upon reading it, have given up their sectarian theology to embrace the theology of Paul. The wide circulation of the work, which has never been refuted, indicates its value and interest.

The Old Paths; or, The Primitive Doctrine of a Future Life. 5d 1000. Paper, 15 cts.

Beginning where Pauline theology closes, this treatise exhibits the teachings of all the Apostolical Fathers, as found in the writings bearing their names, such as Barnabas, Clement, Hermas, Ignatius, and Polycarp, giving large quotations illustrating their opinions upon the questions of Life, Immortality, Future Punishment, and the Kingdom of God.

Tracts on Immortality: containing Pauline Theology, The Old Paths, Milton on the State of the Dead, and other minor tracts. Bound in cloth, 30 cts.

Tracts on Prophecy: containing more than Twenty pointed, stirring, and earnest Tracts on Prophetical and Practical subjects. Bound in cloth, 30 cts.

The Perfect State; or, Forever with the Lord. A Book of Instruction and Consolation. PREPARING. $1.00.

This work contains a statement of the Scripture teachings concerning how men shall come to be forever "with the Lord;" including lengthy and critical discussions of Paradise, Hades, Sheol, the Intermediate State, and other matters of interest; while it serves to cheer the heart-stricken and sad with the hope of glory when Christ, who is our life, shall appear.

The Voice of the Church on the Coming and Kingdom of the Redeemer; or, a History of the Doctrine of the Reign of Christ on Earth. By D. T. Taylor. Edited and prefaced by H. L. Hastings. 6th edition. 420 pp. Price, $1.00.

This is the ablest work extant on this subject. It proves that the common notion of the world's conversion was unknown to the Church of Christ for 1500 years. It quotes the views of some four hundred of the greatest theologians known, giving an account of each, and presenting their statements on either side, in their own words. Multitudes of commendatory notices from preachers and papers of all kinds, might be quoted. Read it and be satisfied.

Spiritualism a Satanic Delusion and a Sign of the Times. By William Ramsey, D. D. Edited by H. L. H. Price, cloth, 40 cts. Paper, 25 cts.

A masterly expose of the grand delusion of the age, which has shielded many and recovered some from this snare of Satan. The author, a profound scholar, long conversant with spirit manifestations among the heathen, while a missionary in India, has shed much light upon the question of this strong delusion.

Wayside Gleanings. By Fannie Parry. The gathered Memorials, in Prose and Verse, of one who fell asleep in early life. Elegant cloth binding, 60 cts.

Prophetical and Practical Tracts.

[illegible]

Practical Gospel Tracts, for Distribution.

[illegible]

Leaflets for Letters. (Envelope size.)

Peace in Christ, &c. (4 4-page Tracts.)
Lost! Lost! (Awakening.)
Home. (For Saints and Sinners.)
Life Insurance.
Talks to Children. (3 4-page Tracts.)

Tracts on Immortality and Future Punishment.

SALT AN ANTHELMINTIC.—It is now less than a week since our attention was called to the case of a child, the son of a vegetarian, who eschews salt—strangely enough regarding its influence as little if anything less than that of an active poison. We were told the child had little appetite except at times; food distressed the stomach, &c., with other symptoms, which clearly pointed out what we pronounced a case of worms. (Ascarides.) We respectfully suggest to the reader to put our statement and the following from the Scientific American together, and then draw their own conclusions.—M.

"Animals that are permitted to roam in the salt marshes are generally the most healthy, as they consume a large amount of saline material. The antiseptic property of salt is too well known and appreciated by most husbandmen, and the farmer might as well think of entirely dispensing with food as to fail in seasoning food with salt. No animal can long exist without salt; in the stomach it operates favorably, and has a healthy action on the liver, it also prevents the food from running into fermentation, and is death on intestinal parasites."

Correspondence.

From C. F. Churchill.

DEARLY BELOVED:—I am yet in a world of death, but striving for the kingdom of God. Were it not for the sweet prospect of soon coming redemption, my breaking heart would despair. But very soon the opening heavens will be lit up with the glory of the descending Redeemer. Then those loved ones that now sleep in the dust of the earth will awake and sing, spring to immortal life beyond the grave.

Then in the new creation, beyond the dismal tomb,
We'll meet our friends and loved ones, robed in immortal bloom;
Beyond this world of dying, death's cold, dark chilling flood,
Yes, we shall meet in glory, in the paradise of God.

O yes, we shall meet again; not as when we parted, in tears and groans, and bitter wailing, but with songs and everlasting joy, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away. As we last gazed on those lovely countenances they were changed. The crimson glow of health had given way to a death-like palor. Those once beautiful eyes were sealed up in the dreamless repose of death. The grasp of that friendly hand—how weak! The last good by—how faint! As we take a last long look at that dear face, breathe a last good by, oh! what heart-rending agony is ours. But thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ, for the hope set before us in the blessed gospel. Master Jesus has the keys of death and the grave, and lives to die no more. Ere long he will open death's prison doors, throw down his mighty bars, and bring his loved ones, all beautiful with immortality—eternal life—all lovely beyond conception with the image and glory of God, from the land of the enemy. Glory to God! we shall meet again, but O how changed! In the grasp of that friendly hand shall be immortal friendship. That dear face, once pale in death, now blooms with immortal loveliness. We shall meet the fond gaze of those love-lit eyes, once dim in death, glittering not with sorrow's tears, but with the mild radiance of undying youth. That sweet voice now hushed, shall gush from immortal lungs in strains of matchless sweetness, shall mingle in that mighty, triumphant song of victory, Alleluia! the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth!

Dear brethren and sisters, pray for me, that God would preserve me blameless unto his heavenly kingdom.

Washburn, Aroostook, Me.

From Eld. Wm. Sweet.

BRO. GRANT:—I left home about the 1st of Feb. Preached at Pekin three times, and left there to hold a series of meetings in Canton, six miles north of Hesper, Iowa, near Bro. Nichols', where I preached twice to full houses of attentive hearers, but am sorry to say I had to leave there so soon. The E. P. Methodists had appointed a protracted meeting, to be continued some days. At Hesper, found our much esteemed Sr. McKee was dead. Bro. Ross' family had been sick, and others not able to attend meetings, so I preached once, and left for Howard Co., Iowa, some thirty miles. Found Eld. Philips' settlement, some four miles north of the centre. He is an able christian preacher, with a church of some thirty members, all quite friendly to our views. Went to Bro. Pilcher's, near Riceville, Michel Co. He is a good Brother; lives all alone as to church privileges. His house is a home for preachers. From there I went to Floyd, where I preached in all some eight times; had good meetings; but the great trouble was, the E. P. Methodists had been holding a series of meetings, day and night, for some five weeks; they stirred up all the opposition they could, and kept up opposite meetings all the time I was there; at the same time there fell some fifteen inches of snow, which blew into large drifts, making the roads impassable; so I left the brethren, praying God to bless them, and reached home the 12th of March, thinking I had done but little good.

Utica, Minn., March 31st.

Obituary Notice.

Fell asleep in Jesus, at Southbridge, Mass., April 1st, 1862, my beloved wife, MARY E. BRACKETT, aged thirty-two years, daughter of William and Matilda McKinstry. Her disease was scrofula.

We were buried in baptism Nov., 1849, by Eld. Charles McReading; since that time it has always been her joy and delight to meet with the children of God, and to join in testimony and song with those that love the Lord. In her loss I feel that I have been deprived of my best earthly friend. Whenever the world went hard with me, she was always ready with words of cheer and encouragement; but her cheerful voice is hushed in death, and we are left to mourn, but not as those "that have no hope." By the grace of God she could say, "Yea, though I walk through the valley and shadow of death, I will fear no evil; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me." And glory to God, they were her comfort and support when all things earthly failed.

A few days before her death she broke out singing these beautiful lines—

"What's this that steals, that steals upon my frame?
Is it death? Is it death?
That soon will quench, will quench this vital flame,
Is it death? Is it death?"

As the family, including her aged parents, stood by her bedside, she exhorted us to prove faithful. Said she, "I expect to sleep quietly in the grave until the resurrection, and then we shall all go into the kingdom together." At another time she sung those familiar words which we had often sung together—

"Come, Holy Spirit, heavenly dove,
With all thy quickening powers," etc.

Her funeral was attended in the Methodist Church. Bro. David Pratt spoke to the friends from 1 Cor. 15th chapter. He was assisted in the services by Eld. N. B George. The blessed hope of the resurrection was brought to view.

GEORGE BRACKETT.

FOREIGN NEWS.

The steamship Scotia brings news from Liverpool to the 10th inst., and from Queenstown to the 11th.

The Independence Belge asserts that the object of Lavallette's recent visit to London was to induce England to consent to common intervention in America, and England agreed, on condition that the Roman question was first settled. The French Government gave ear to this, and it has led to a conference relative to intervention.

The Paris correspondent of the Morning Herald says it is beyond question that a reorganization of the South is seriously contemplated by the French government.

Rumors of the approaching solution of the Roman question are becoming more and more general.

It is reported that the Papal Government are prepared for a sudden departure.

The ex-King of Naples has left Rome. His destination is unknown.

A Paris correspondent says, in explanation of the present attitude of France: "If the truth must be told, the decided ill will of a large and powerful party in France toward the Union cause dates from the admission of the Orleans Princes into the Federal service."

LATER.

By the arrival of the Kangaroo, and the Hibernian, we have news from Liverpool to the 14th inst., and Queenstown to the 15th.

The Times says that the capture of New Orleans is a hard blow to the South and a great triumph for the North and is another proof that the North can do the Confederates more harm than the Confederates can do them.

It is reported that there has been a military conspiracy in St. Petersburg in favor of Poland.

French political news is unimportant.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

Attack on Gen. Banks.

Washington, May 25. Dispatches received by the War department state that General Banks was attacked at Winchester this morning, and has fallen back towards Martinsburg and Harper's Ferry. The enemy are reported to be in large force, and many reports state that the rebel force has left Richmond and moved North to take the offensive.

A dispatch received to-night states that Gen. Banks has made good his retreat across the Potomac at Williamsport. Gen. Rufus Saxton is in command at Harper's Ferry.

The city is intensely excited by the intelligence, and mere rumors increase the excitement.

The enemy under Generals Ewell and Johnson with a superior force gave battle to Gen. Banks this morning at daylight at Winchester.

Gen. Banks fought them six hours and then retired in the direction of Martinsburg, with what loss is not known.

GEN. BANKS' OFFICIAL REPORT.

Headquarters, Martinsburg,
May 25—2-40, P. M.

To Hon. E. M. Stanton:—The rebels attacked us this morning at daybreak in great force. Their force was estimated at 15,000, consisting of Ewell's and Jackson's divisions. The fire of the pickets began with the light and followed by the artillery until the lines were fully under fire on both sides.

The left wing stood firmly, holding its ground well, and the right did the same, when two regiments broke their lines under the fire of the enemy. The right wing fell back, and we were ordered to withdraw, and the troops passed through the town in considerable confusion. They were quickly re-formed on the other side and continued their march in good order to Martinsburg, a distance of twenty-two miles. Our trains are in advance and will cross the river in safety. Our entire force engaged was less than 4000, consisting of Donnelly's brigades with two regiments of cavalry under Gen. Hatch and two batteries of artillery. Our loss was considerable, as was that of the enemy, but cannot now be stated. We were reinforced by the 15th Maine regiment, which did good service, and a regiment of cavalry. A prisoner captured this afternoon says the rebel force in our rear is to be strengthened, and that their purpose is to enter Maryland at two points, Harper's Ferry and Williamsport. He confirms all we have heard in regard to the rebel force here. We all passed the Potomac safe—men, trains and all. I think of making a march of 35 miles.

N. P. BANKS,
Major General Commanding.

Washington, May 25. The President takes military possession of all the railroads in the United States, by virtue of the authority vested by an act of Congress, from after this date until further orders, and directs that the respective railroad companies, their officers and servants, shall hold themselves in readiness for the transportation of troops and munitions of war as may be ordered by the military authorities to the exclusion of all other business.

By order of the Secretary of War.
M. C. MEIGS, Quartermaster General.

New York, May 26. The Herald's Washington despatch says prompt efforts have been made to reinforce Gen. Banks, and it is supposed that by to-day Gen. Miles will have reinforced Banks with a considerable force.

The World says the immense rebel armies which made their appearance so suddenly in Western Virginia, give color to a rumor from a Kentucky paper, that it is the intention of the rebel leaders to withdraw from the coast and invade Norhern States, if possible, in two columns. One by way of Pennsylvania under Gen. Joe Johnson, and another under Gen. Lee marching from Cumberland Gap to Louisville, and if possible, crossing the Ohio to Cincinnati.

We have no fears but a few days will turn the tide of victory in the right direction.

Cincinnati, May 24. Col. Heth with 3000 rebels attacked our forces under Col. Crook yesterday, at Lewisburg. After a severe fight the rebels were completely routed. Our loss was ten killed, 40 wounded and 8 missing. The rebel loss was much greater. We captured four cannon, 200 stand of arms, 100 prisoners, a Lieutenant Colonel, one Major, several Captains and Lieutenants.

Fortress Monroe, May 24. It is reported that Gen. Burnside has taken Raleigh.

The Ellen Terry arrived from Newbern this afternoon. She reports that the American flag was raised in Raleigh some three or four days ago by the citizens.

The Volunteer Militia Called Out.

The general and special orders issued this morning by His Excellency the Governor and Commander-in-Chief are startling in their nature, as well as in regard to their object. It will be seen that all the available Volunteer Militia force of the Commonwealth is called out instanter, without the interruption of the customary military forms. No doubt Governor Andrew will be justified in his declaration that "Massachusetts will repeat the patriotism, enthusiam and glory of April '61."

A PROCLAMATION.

By the Gov. and Commander-in-Chief.

MEN OF MASSACHUSETTS—The wily and barbarous horde of traitors to the People, to the Government, to our Country and to Liberty menace again the national capital. They have attacked and routed Major General Banks—are advancing on Harper's Ferry—and are marching on Washington.

The President calls on Massachusetts to rise once more for its rescue and defense. The whole active militia will be summoned by a general order issued from the office of the Adjutant General to report on Boston Common to-morrow.

They will march to relieve and avenge their brethren and friends, to oppose with fiery zeal and courageous patriotism the progress of the foe.

May God encourage their hearts and strengthen their arms, and may he inspire the Government and all the people.

Given at headquarters in Boston, at eleven o'clock of this Sunday evening, May 25th, A. D., 1862.

JOHN A. ANDREW.

Washington, May 26. The following is the latest dispatch received at the War Department from General Banks:—

WILLIAMSPORT, May 26.

Hon. Edwin M. Stanton, Sec. of War.

We believe that our whole force, trains and all, will cross in safety. The men are in fine spirits, and crossing in order.

The labor of last night was fearful. The enemy followed us last night on our march, but has not made his appearance this morning.

The news of your movements South has unquestionably caused them to look out for their safety.

Your dispatch was read to the troops this morning amid the heartiest cheers.

N. P. BANKS, Major Gen. Commanding.

Washington, May 26. The excitement of yesterday has subsided, and all seem convinced that if Gen. Banks is properly reinforced, he will not only be able to check any advance of the enemy, but to drive them back.

The dispatches received by Gov. Andrew last night from the Secretary of War, show that the Government is aware that an important military movement was necessary to preserve the Federal Capital.

The first dispatch stated that Gen. Banks had been defeated, and the enemy were marching in full force on Harper's Ferry.

The second dispatch stated that reliable information had been received from various sources that the enemy were also marching on Washington in great numbers, and the Governor was ordered to forward without delay all the troops that could be raised, with militia and volunteers.

At two o'clock, two dispatches were received from Gen. Banks, one dated at Martinsburg, and the other between Martinsburg and Williamsport, in which he said that he had saved his baggage train and most of his command, and should without doubt cross the river in safety.

New York, May 26. Special dispatches from Washington state that it is rumored that Jackson is retreating more rapidly than he advanced.

A balloon reconnoissance from Gen. McClellan's headquarters, disclosed the fact that the rebels were evacuating Richmond.

ITEMS.

☞ The state of Europe is thus described by the paragrapher of the Boston Post:—

"Hungry workmen, in procession, parade the streets of Liverpool and Paris; in the French Legislative body, a serious quarrel is springing up with the Emperor, which may ere long lead to another coup; at Rome, all was alarm, under an apprehension of a 'popular demonstration,' in consequence of which the French garrison had been placed under arms, Corso closed, and the Papal troops confined to the barracks. In Greece, a rebellion is is full blast, and in Turkey, its next door neighbor, the Turks and Christians have just been having a free fight, resulting in the sacrifice, some reports say, of a thousand lives. With troubles thus all round in the old world—we do not know that even with rebellion on our hands, the United States is not, after all, about the quietest place on earth for a Peace-Society man to dwell in."

RENUNCIATION OF SPIRITUALISM.—Rev. O. D. Miller of Nashua, N. H., who says he has been a spiritualist medium for nearly eleven years, writes to the Christian Freeman of the 31st ult., that seeing no prospect of good resulting from spiritualism, and that it has been the source of a great deal of suffering and harm to him, he has thought it his duty to renounce it, and hopes others may profit by his sad experience. Further, he enters his solemn protest against it, as fraught with much evil to the community.

FRENCH NAVAL CONFERENCE.—A conference of naval officers is reported to have met recently in Paris at the house of a vice-admiral, to consider the great question raised by the Merrimac and Monitor encounter, and they are understood to have resolved unanimously that France can build as many Monitors in a month as she has arsenals, and that in a year she could fit out a fleet equal to any that the utmost efforts of England could oppose to her.—London News, C. W.

DISTRESS IN MANCHESTER.—According to the returns of the chief constable of Manchester, England, made up to Tuesday, April 8th, upwards of eight thousand workmen are totally out of employment in that city alone, while nearly double that number are on short time.

THE EMPRESS.—Of late the Empress does not join in the Ministerial deliberations. The reason generally given is, that she was blamed for everything that appeared like a favor extended to the Pope, and this unconsciously, and perhaps undeservedly, makes many bitter enemies.—Paris Letter.

☞ Recent excavations in Rome have disclosed the magnificent entrance to the palace of the Cæsars, called the Olivus Palatinus. It is the same width as the ordinary Roman roads, and like the Appian Way, is paved with huge blocks of stone.

To Brethren indebted for Tracts.

I have said nothing to you for a good while. I am now almost entirely out of tracts. I want to publish more—also books. I do not intend to get in debt, but pay as I go. I am hoping immediately to make important changes in my business, so as to furnish more books for less money than heretofore. Now all who owe for books will confer a favor by paying up what they owe if they CAN, or if they are unable to do that, let me know the fact. All the books I have sent you have cost me the money, and I wish to send out more when I can. Those who wish for books or tracts can send their orders as usual. They are FREE to the poor. Let us hear from you. Direct to H. L. HASTINGS, Boston, Mass.

P. S. Persons indebted to the Crisis office for books, should send the pay to Bro. Grant as soon as they can conveniently.

H. L. H.

Notice.—The Tract Fund.

Tracts of the old approved sorts are soon to be manufactured in large quantities for the Christian Publication Society. Churches or individuals who have contributed to the $500 Tract Fund, can have a portion of their donations returned to them in tracts, if they wish; and they can have the tracts printed with a notice of their place of worship on each one, at a small cost, (say 50 cts.), provided they wish for not less than five hundred copies of any one tract, and will send me immediate directions about it. The price of tracts to contributors will be about 1800 pages for $1 00.

As the $500 Fund is now made up, subscribers who have not paid will remit their subscriptions to MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass., as soon as convenient. Persons still wishing to contribute can do likewise, for "yet there is room."

H. L. HASTINGS, President.

Boston, April 21st, '62.

Subscription to the Tract Fund of the C. P. S.

Amount pledged from Oct. 22d, 1861, to May 1st, 1862, $505.74.

☞ Let others who wish to aid in this work send their pledges or subscriptions to MILES GRANT, Editor of the World's Crisis, Boston, Mass." Any amount is acceptable, from a talent of gold down to a widow's mite.

H. L. HASTINGS, Pres. C. P. S.

The Crisis for the Soldiers.

We will send a FEW copies of the Crisis FREE to soldiers in camp, if it is desired, and ordered by them, or by their friends. Any persons wishing to send the Crisis to their friends in the army, can have it sent for half price, or 50 cts. for six months, or $1.00 per year. Send orders to Miles Grant, Boston, Mass., and keep him notified of all changes in location, etc.

H. L. HASTINGS, Pres. C. P. S.

Notice.

For the brethren at Machias Port, Me.

I have found a Brother that will come and stay a few weeks in that vicinity, in July, if the brethren wish him. They must notify him soon, so that he can make arrangements to go when some one comes to Boston that will take him on board. Direct to J. W. White, Portsmouth, N. H. This is the man you want.

HIRAM MUNGER.

Notice.

The Lord willing, there will be a conference meeting in Buchanan, Mich., to commence on the evening of the 26th of June, and continue over the following Sabbath. We hope to see a general gathering of our scattered friends at this meeting. Let us make this meeting a subject of prayer, that much good be accomplished. Bro. Israel Dammon is expected to be present.

D. R. & M. S. MANSFIELD.

Grove and Camp Meeting.

Good news to the happy souls who gathered last year at Tremont, Mass., for divine worship in the grove. There will be another grove and campmeeting in the vicinity of the Tremont Depot, West Wareham, Mass., commencing Tuesday evening, June 24th, 1862, and continuing over the following Sunday. Eld. M. Grant, H. L. Hastings, if possible, and others will be present to preach the word. Many things promise to make this an interesting and profitable meeting. First, the blessing of God upon us last year. Those who were there will welcome us again, and bring others with them. Second, its location—easy of access to many churches. It is situated on the Fairhaven and Boston, R. R., at its junction with the Cape Cod R. R.; fare reduced on this road from Middleboro and New Bedford. We expect a good representation from New Bedford, Mattapoisett, Plymouth, Carver, Middleboro, Taunton, and perhaps from Boston. Third, its accommodations; a beautiful grove, in the midst of an orderly people; good board provided cheaper than by ourselves; lodging in private dwellings near by, or in tents, as chosen. Fourth, the cheering evidences that we are nearing our eternal home, cannot fail to awaken an unusual interest in every believing heart. Come then, one and all, prepare for a good meeting; pray much about it; come to labor for precious souls; come full of the blessing of Christ; come early; come to stay through the meeting; come, and may many kind friends in Tremont bless the day of our coming.

In behalf of many brethren,
H. F. CARPENTER.

Annual Conference.

The Western New York General Association will hold their annual conference at Seneca Falls, N. Y., commencing on Thursday evening, June 5th, 1862. This is an important gathering, and all the brethren and sisters within the limits of the association, who possibly can, should endeavor to be present, and aid both by their counsel and means in advocating the cause of our Master. Let us have at least one delegate from every church within the association limits, or beyond, if such church should wish to be recognized among us. A general invitation is extended to all, both ministers and laymen. Come up to the "Feast of Love." By order of the committee of appointments.

E. BURR, Secretary.

Conference Notice.

The next session of the Maine Central Quarterly Conference will be held in Belgrade (Baptist meeting-house) commencing Thursday, June 12th, at six o'clock, P. M., and continue over the Sabbath. Brethren from abroad will call on Bro. David Rockwood (Rockwood's Corner.) We hope to see a full meeting, and the power of God in our midst to save sinners. Come, brethren and sisters. This is a new place. The hearts of the people are open to feed man and beast, and let us try to feed them with the word of life.

Per order, H. B. SEVEY.
I. C. WELLCOME, Scribe.

Wilbraham Campmeeting.

I find many have got the idea from Bro. Boutell's notice, a few weeks since, that the Wilbraham campmeeting was removed. This is a mistake. The meeting will commence as last year, the last week in August. I was on the ground last week, and the tent frames are all in good order, and the inhabitants are looking forward with more anxiety than ever for the time to arrive when they can hear something on the signs of the times. In due time you will see the appointment from the committee.

HIRAM MUNGER.

Grove Meeting Appointments.

2. Am to hold a four days discussion with a Methodist minister, on the immortality of the soul and doom of the wicked, in a grove near Centerville, (Milroy P. O.) Victoria Township, Knox Co., Ill., beginning June 4th. Those who come from abroad may inquire for Ambrose King. (Will Bro. King meet me at the conference?) A grove meeting will be held on the ground after the discussion is over.

3. A grove meeting will be held in or near Lambs' Point, Madison Co., Ill., (as Bro. W. A. Wyatt may arrange) to begin on the 13th of June, and continue over Sunday.

4. A grove meeting is to begin at Cascade, Iowa, (fourteen miles from Dubuque) on the 20th of June. Inquire for Bro. H. Allyn.

5. A meeting will be held in Dorchester, Alamakee Co., Iowa, commencing on the 27th of June, as Bro. J. Sturdevant may arrange.

6. A grove meeting is to be held in Hesper, Iowa, as Bro. J. McKee may arrange, commencing on the 4th of July. Inquire for John McKee.

7. A grove meeting will be held in Enclaire, Enclaire Co., Wis., beginning on the 11th of July, as Eld. W. B. Putnam may arrange.

8. A grove meeting will be held in Sauk Co., Wis., where Eld. G. W. Barnes may appoint, to begin July 18th.

The above meetings will begin at 10 1-2 A. M. About a score of meetings are wanted that I have not time to hold, therefore let none feel slighted. Let us have a general rally at these meetings. Several preachers will attend the most of them. Each meeting will hold over Lord's day.

Thessalonica: or, The Model Church. A Sketch of Primitive Christianity. 3d 1000. Paper, 38 cts. Cloth, 60 cts.

A stirring volume—evangelical and scriptural. Amer. Presb.
In pungent style—abounding in strong points. Chicago Times.
Very interesting—ably treated. Albany Evening Journal.
Earnest and ably written. Boston Evening Transcript.
Written in a good spirit—in earnest. Boston Recorder.
A strong and vigorous work. Godey's Lady's Book.
Many brilliant passages—a vigorous writer. N. Y. Times.
I have read it with great interest. C. F. Hudson.
Every minister should get a copy. Philad. Christian Chron.
Contains a good deal of truth. Boston Atlas.
Many good and sound ideas. Boston Congregationalist.
Abounds with good, sober truth. Hillsboro Heritage.
Modern Christians will prize it. Delaware Inquirer.

The Great Controversy Between God and Man: Its Origin, Progress, and End. A Sketch of Man's "Secession and Rebellion." 3d 1000. Paper, 38 cts. Cloth, 60 cts.

A well-meant and well-written book. Banner of the Cross.
Touching and impressive. Christian Chronicle.
I read it with much satisfaction. Bishop J. H. Hopkins.
Great ability—vigorous and spirited. E. Winthrop, M. A.

Reasons for my Hope, and the Tokens of its Speedy Realization. 3d 1000. Paper, 25 cts. Cloth, 40 cts.

Containing an exposition of the hope of the Church—abounding in facts pertaining to Prophecy, the signs of the times, the increase of knowledge, spread of the Gospel, Missions, Tracts, Bible translations, Bible societies &c. The Statistics alone are worth many times the price of the book.

Retribution; or, The Doom of the Ungodly, after the Resurrection of the Dead, Just and Unjust. Paper, 25 cts. Cloth, 40 cts.

A solemn and earnest argument in proof of the resurrection of the dead, just and unjust; the punishment of the ungodly in the lake of fire, the second death; and a refutation of the notion that wicked men have no resurrection, judgment or conscious punishment after death. Judging from the reception it meets with, it hits the nail on the head!

Pauline Theology; or, The Scripture Doctrine of Future Punishment, as taught in the Epistles of Paul. 12th 1000. Paper, 15 cts.

This work contains the passages on future punishment found in Paul's FOURTEEN EPISTLES. His words are quoted and defined in Greek and in English. Many, upon reading it, have given up their sectarian theology to embrace the theology of Paul. The wide circulation of the work, which has never been refuted, indicates its value and interest.

The Old Paths; or, The Primitive Doctrine of a Future Life. 3d 1000. Paper, 18 cts.

Beginning where Pauline theology closes, this treatise exhibits the teachings of all the Apostolical Fathers, as found in the writings bearing their names, such as Barnabas, Clement, Hermas, Ignatius, and Polycarp, giving large quotations illustrating their opinions upon the questions of Life, Immortality, Future Punishment, and the Kingdom of God.

Tracts on Immortality: containing Pauline Theology, The Old Paths, Milton on the State of the Dead, and other minor tracts. Bound in cloth, 50 cts.

Tracts on Prophecy: containing more than Twenty pointed, stirring, and earnest Tracts on Prophetical and Practical subjects. Bound in cloth, 30 cts.

The Perfect State; or, Forever with the Lord. A Book of Instruction and Consolation. PREPARING. $1.00.

This work contains a statement of the Scripture teachings concerning how men shall come to be forever "with the Lord;" including lengthy and critical discussions of Paradise, Hades, Sheol, the Intermediate State, and other matters of interest; while it serves to cheer the heart-stricken and sad with the hope of glory when Christ, who is our life, shall appear.

The Voice of the Church on the Coming and Kingdom of the Redeemer; or, a History of the Doctrine of the Reign of Christ on Earth. By D. T. Taylor. Edited and prefaced by H. L. Hastings. 6th edition. 420 pp. [illegible] Price, $1.00.

This is the ablest work extant on this subject. It proves that the common notion of the world's conversion was unknown to the Church of Christ for 1500 years. It quotes the views of some four hundred of the greatest theologians known, giving an account of each, and presenting their statements on either side, in their own words. Multitudes of commendatory notices from preachers and papers, of all kinds, might be quoted. Read it and be satisfied.

Spiritualism a Satanic Delusion and a Sign of the Times. By William Ramsey, D. D. Edited by H. L. H. Price, cloth, 40 cts. Paper, 25 cts.

A masterly expose of the grand delusion of the age, which has shielded many and recovered some from this snare of Satan. The author, a profound scholar, long conversant with spirit manifestations among the heathen, while a missionary in India, has shed much light upon the question of this strong delusion.

Wayside Gleanings. By Fannie Parry. The gathered Memorials, in Prose and Verse, of one who fell asleep in early life. Elegant cloth binding, 40 cts.

Prophetical and Practical Tracts.

For the Crisis.

The World to Come.

By faith I see a glorious land,
Where wars and strife shall ever cease,
The home of all the blood-washed band—
There Jesus reigns, the Prince of peace.

A world of joy, a world of bliss,
Whose glories are forever new;
Oft I compare that world with this,—
Here all things fade like morning dew.

No mourner stands beside the tomb,
To weep for loved ones sleeping there;
Dispelled is every shade of gloom,
Banished is every toil and care.

The vail now o'er all nations cast,
Forever then removed shall be,
And death, of enemies the last,
Be swallowed up in victory.

I'm trav'ling to that blissful land,
Through rugged wilds I'll press my way;
While guided by a Savior's hand,
My feet shall never, never stray.

Sinner, would you that world enjoy,
And in its bliss and glory share?
For Jesus all your powers employ,
And with his saints you'll soon be there.

For soon enrobed in glory bright
The King of kings to earth shall come,
Endowed with majesty and might,
To take his wand'ring people home.

Correspondence.

From M. S. H.

Bro. Grant:—I saw in the Crisis of March 5th a communication from Sr. Lombard, and I thought I would relate a little of my own experience, hoping I might encourage that Sister, and others similarly afflicted. Last fall our little boy, aged three years, was very sick with dysentery. His flesh had wasted away, and he was so weak he could neither stand nor go. We obtained medical aid, but after a week's trial we became convinced the medicine injured him. We then thought that unless God interposed our dear boy must die. We then, believing with all our hearts that there is a God in Israel who can yet hear the prayer of faith, as directed in his word, sent for a brother who has the gift of healing, and who we believe is one of God's elders, who came, and according to the rule laid hands upon him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord, and from that very hour he began to amend. We gave him no more medicine. He is now a healthy boy. Praise be to Him who is still able to heal all manner of diseases! But this is not the only case to which I can bear witness. I took cold this winter and was threatened with fever. My friends were the more alarmed as there had been several cases of fever in our neighborhood through the fall and winter which had proved fatal. I had no doctor, as I have not much confidence in the means used by the practitioners of the present day. But it happened, and it seemed as though the Lord so ordered it, that that same brother came to our house and tarried through the night. In the morning the Lord heard prayer in my behalf, and I was made whole from that very hour.

These are but two cases out of the many I could bring, if required, the truth of which can be fully substantiated. I would say to that Sister, Read the word of God carefully, and see if you can find it there intimated that the gifts were ever to be taken from the church. That the church as a body lost them, cannot be denied; but all the way down through the gospel dispensation, there have been solitary cases, proving that the faith has not been entirely lost; and these instances have been outside of the church of Rome, and ever, as now, among a people who are determined to know nothing save Jesus Christ and him crucified And now as we are drawing near the end of man's probationary state, when the faith that teaches the speedy establishment of God's everlasting kingdom has become a reproach; when the ministers of the second house of Israel are teaching tradition instead of truth, and the people receive it in preference to the plain declaration of scripture; when true and living faith is as scarce among them as it was with the first house; it seems to me the gifts are as necessary here, to show the world where the true believers are, as any time since the gospel has been preached. And, although the Spiritualists may do the same works, it is by the power that Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, and not by faith in the word of God.

Bro. Grant:—As I look over the pages of the Crisis, and peruse the epistles from the brethren and sisters scattered abroad, they sometimes cheer me, then again I am led to shed the sympathizing tear with those who, like myself, are wading through the deep waters of affliction. But, thanks to Him who doeth all things well, we are not left disconsolate, for we read from his precious word, that all things work for good to them who love him. There are many blessed promises made to us; and how consoling is the thought, that we are nearing the haven of eternal rest, where we ne'er shall have to part with those we love, nor see the cold hand of death laid upon them and they torn from our embrace! neither shall we there have to watch o'er the couch and dread the old enemy, for he will have to yield up those whom he has slain. Glorious thought! O! how I long to see the day when the ransomed host shall shout victory over their last foe. The thought often recurs to me, Shall I be there? My prayer is that we may be kept spotless and blameless until the Life-giver returns to reward his faithful children, and release us from all our griefs and woes.

Many times I am cheered by reading from the Crisis that sinners are still flocking to the blood-stained banner of Prince Emanuel, instead of enlisting to imbrue their hands in the blood of their fellow creatures. Surely we are living in perilous times; and we who profess to be looking for the return of the Nobleman should be living epistles, laboring zealously for the salvation of perishing mortals, instead of contending with and devouring each other.

The cause has suffered much in this vicinity from those pretending to be ministers of the gospel, but proved to be wolves in sheep's clothing, biting and devouring. I have tried, to the best of my ability, to spread the glorious present truths, by circulating books and tracts from the Tract Fund, and some have been benefitted by those little missionaries. We should be very careful as a people who we endorse, and see to it that they are well recommended from the conference, or from the church of which they are members. This would save a great deal of trouble and anxiety for those who love the truth.

Bro. Grant:—I enclose $— for the continuance of the Crisis, and feel it is money laid out in a good cause, and trust the paper will ever be sustained till the time comes when there shall be no need of a paper nor press. O Lord, hasten the time! is my prayer, when the saints may be gathered. Once I could meet with the children, and exhort, sing and pray with them, and enjoy it as well as any one; but now if I meet (unless once in a great while) it must be with the different churches. To go with them I cannot; to be content and stay at home, is not obeying the command of Paul; and thus I feel sometimes almost like murmuring; but I know deliverance will be given to the saints in a little from this, and I mean among them to be found. But the trials and afflictions which the saints of God have to pass through! They should and do have a tendency to wean us from the world and make us more like our Lord. May we one and all keep the meek and quiet spirit, watch and pray much, for what is there not to contend with? Truly these are perilous times.

"Let me among the saints be found,
Whene'er th' archangel's trump shall sound,
To see thy smiling face!"

And then and not till then shall I be satisfied. Many of you, dear children, with whom I have enjoyed precious seasons in the past, I expect to meet no more on the shores of time; but I mean to live so as to meet you

"Where no tears shall ever fall,
Nor heart be sad,
Where the glory is for all,
And all are glad."

From B. P. Manning.

Brn. Grant and Morgan:—The Lord is very good to his children in N. H., and is converting sinners in spite of the enemy. In Orange there have been some eight converted and baptized. Bro. J. G. Hook, of Concord, has been there laboring with the people, and God has blessed his labors. I was there one week with them, and truth did triumph over error. I received a letter from a brother yesterday from East Canaan, stating that the people had shut them out of the school-house. I told them when there I thought they would do so if they preached the truth to them; so you see the enemy is not dead yet. He is doing up his last work. O how I sigh for home! I love the coming of my blessed Lord better than ever.

Dear brethren, God and myself only know the pain and suffering that I have to bear, but it is all right. God will not suffer any of his dear children to be afflicted more than is for their good. This is a world of suffering and death; but the time is very near when death, and he that had the power of death, which is the devil, will be destroyed. How many of the dear saints have been laid in the grave within a few years! But they will come again from the land of the enemy. While I was reading Sr. Howell's letter in the Crisis, I could say from my heart, Glory to God! Bro. John will soon come up from his sleeping place, and I, if faithful to God a little longer, shall shake hands with him on the other shore. Brethren and sisters, be faithful to God, and strive to be holy, for without holiness no man shall see the Lord. Let us seek meekness. "Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth." Brethren, I desire your prayers, that God may rebuke this disease, and give me strength to labor.

Goffstown, May 17th, '62.

From Sr. S. P. Green.

Bro. Grant:—You do not know how destitute the people of this vicinity are of the truth. Spiritualism, sensualism, and all sorts of wickedness prevail above religion. Nearly all are contented with their state of destitution. Professors are sleeping on the verge of ruin. Backsliders have gone back, back, almost to the worst forms of evil and sinfulness. Alas! they are in a lost condition indeed, unless the Holy Spirit of God interposes with power immediately. There are too many like the "Pharisees, hypocrites!" in the days of Christ. They will not go in themselves, nor suffer those that would to enter in. I think in my soul there are some and probably many that would enter the fold of Christ, if stumbling blocks were out of the way: but the way before poor sinners! what will become of them? Young and old, high and low, are in the broad way to destruction.

I am striving through the grace of God to enter "by the door" into the sheepfold. I am almost disheartened much of the time. I have to meet much opposition, and stem the tide all alone. But through the dim eye of faith I am led to behold the land of the free and the good. Possibly I may have an entrance into the everlasting kingdom, and very likely to be so if I am faithful and endure firmly unto the end. But Satan is trying, and has been for more than six years, to hinder me from going forward and looking up to Jesus and feeling my acceptance of Him. This life hath an enormous load for a poor, weak mortal like me to carry along. My spiritual weakness has been caused by an overpowering physical weakness. I do feel encouraged of late that my health will be improved to such an extent that my family, my poor, hard-laboring husband will be benefited, yea, blest temporally as well as spiritually. I have been highly favored of God all the way through these lone years of trials and temptations, of sickness and pain, in that he has given me the World's Crisis to read. I have lent it to friends and neighbors; I have given my good little messengers away as freely as they have been sent to me. I am careful about letting any have them to read that will let them be destroyed or hurt. I hope they will be printed as long as time lasts. Many would otherwise be destitute of the "meat in due season." May any of God's righteous servants pray for me, that I may be made strong, physically as well as spiritually, and be enabled to work for the Lord in earnest. If the Lord wills, will Bro. Grant come to Plymouth?

Sabbath Schools.

Bro. Grant:—This enterprise is one which commends itself to every christian. The training of the young is a duty which was made imperative by the Jewish laws. "Thou shalt diligently teach them to thy children, when thou liest down and when thou risest up, and when thou walkest by the way," etc. One may infer from this that whenever they were in company with children they were required to instruct them in the statutes and judgments of Jehovah, and this early training is undoubtedly one prominent reason why the Jews have maintained their identity so long.

We have also a command equally binding from our Savior. "Feed my lambs," said he to Peter, and in the days of his flesh he took them in his arms and blessed them; and if we would be his followers, and obey his commands, we must do likewise. That the Adventists have been remiss in Sabbath school instruction is apparent. There are many causes that have operated to bring about this state of things. 1. The preaching of the time of the Lord's coming called the attention of multitudes from this, and every thing else but the one idea of the Lord's speedy coming. 2. There has in many places been so much discord among brethren, that it was impossible for them to work in harmony in any branch of christian duty; different views of Scripture doctrine have caused more trouble in the Advent church than all the opposition from outward opposers.

I think we might take a lesson of wisdom in this respect from the American Sunday School Union, which is composed of five different denominations, yet the most perfect harmony has characterized their movements from the commencement of this organization, and great have been the results of their labor. To these missionaries many churches in the west and other parts of the country owe their existence. But to return to ourselves, should we not make a wise improvement of past experience, and gird on the armor anew in behalf of the little ones, and now, while there is a good prospect of success, put in the sickle and gather the harvest, before the coming storm sweeps over us, and they are left out of the fold to perish?

We cannot close our eyes to the sure word of prophecy which says that in the last days perilous time shall come, and the greater the peril the more caution is necessary. There will in my opinion be another time preached amongst us before the Lord comes, and shall we not be so thoroughly organized and "occupying," that in the true time the Lord will say to us, "Well done." And what more commendable duty could we be found engaged in than feeding the lambs of the flock?

Much more might be said upon this subject, but as I believe in short communications as well as short prayers, I will give place for others. I will however simply suggest that, as we have no Sabbath school paper of a denominational character, one column of the Crisis continue to be devoted especially to this cause, until there is a children's paper published amongst us.

Through Death to Life.

I.

Have you heard of the tale of the Aloe plant,
Away in the sunny clime,
By humble growth of a hundred years,
It reaches its blooming time;
And then a wondrous bud at its crown
Bursts into a thousand flowers;
This floral green, in its beauty seen,
Is the pride of the tropical bowers,
But the plant to the flower is a sacrifice,
For it blooms but once, and in blooming dies?

II.

Have you further heard of this Aloe plant,
That grows in the sunny clime?
How every one of its thousand flowers,
As they fall in the blooming time,
Is an infant tree that fastens its roots
In the place where they fall to the ground,
And fast as they drop from the dying stem,
Grow lively and lovely around?
By dying it liveth a thousandfold,
In the young that springs from the death of the old.

III.

Have you heard the tale of the Pelican,
The Arab's Gimel El Bahr!
That lives in the African solitudes,
Where the birds that live lonely are?
Have you heard how it loves its tender young,
And toils and cares for their good?
It brings them water from fountains afar,
And fishes the sea for their food;
In famine it feeds them, what love can devise!
The blood of its bosom, and feeding them dies.

IV.

Have you heard the tale they tell of the Swan,
The snow-white bird of the lake?
It noiselessly floats on the silvery wave,
It silently sits on the break—
For it saves its song till the close of life,
And then in the calm still even,
'Mid the golden rays of the setting sun,
It sings as it soars to heaven.
And the blessed notes fall back from the skies,
'Tis its only song, for in singing it dies.

V.

You have heard these tales, shall I tell you one,
A greater and better than all—
Have you heard of Him whom the heavens adore,
And before whom the hosts of them fall?
How he left his choirs and anthems above,
For earth in its wailings and woes,
To suffer the shame and pain of the cross,
And die for the life of his foes?
O Prince of the noble! O Savior Divine!
What sorrow or sacrifice equal to thine?

VI.

Have you heard of this tale—the best of them all,
The tale of the Holy and True?
He dies—but his life now in untold souls,
Springs up in the world anew—
His seed prevails, and is filling the earth,
As the stars fill the sky above—
He taught us to give up the love of life,
For the sake of the life of love—
His death is our life—his life is our gain,
The joy for the tear, the peace for the pain.

VII.

Now hear these tales, ye weary and worn,
Who for others do give up your all,
Our Savior has told us the seed that would grow,
Into earth's dark bosom must fall—
And pass from the sight and die away,
And then will the fruit appear—
The grain that seems lost in the earth below,
Will return manifold in the ear:
By death comes life—by life comes gain,
The joy for the tear—the peace for the pain.

"It takes away the inducement to Repentance."

So say modern theologians concerning the doctrine of "destruction"—derisively called "annihilation." Yes; it takes away the spurious inducement to repentance, but leaves the genuine inducement. It takes away the spell of fear, which is but a sinister motive, and unacceptable in the sight of God. Thousands have enlisted in the cause of religion through the influence of fear merely,—to escape apparent impending danger,—and when the fear subsides, and the danger no longer stares them in the face, they are no longer in the cause. The only propelling motive that moved them, having become extinct, they of course stop: and thus the world is filled with so-called backsliders, and religion is consequently brought into serious disrepute. Men who are operated upon by this motive are sincere, but they are moved by an incorrect principle. Permit me to illustrate it. Yonder profane sailor discovers a black cloud spreading itself over the sky; he hears the deafening thunders roar, and sees the vivid lightnings flash athwart the heavens; he hears the wind fiercely howl, and sees the waves roll mountains high: fear takes possession of his heart, and depicts to him a watery grave; and under this spell of fear he falls upon his knees, and weeps before God, pleading for mercy. Is he sincere? Yes; just as deeply sincere as that sinner upon the anxious seat. But the storm passes, and in two hours he is cursing God again! The fact is, he was moved by the wrong motive. Again: a few years ago, a man attempted to cross the Connecticut river, in the Spring of the year, just at night, when a cake of ice broke loose from its fellows, carrying him down-stream. He loudly called for help, but no ear could hear. Darkness enveloped him. In this condition the thoughts of a watery grave danced through his excited brain. Giving way to fear, he knelt upon the cake of ice and prayed fervently, and wept tears of sincerity. He repented with his whole heart. Soon the cake of ice touched the shore. Seeing his chance of escape he bounded on to the land, swung his hat, and exclaimed, "Go to hell and be damned." The danger had passed, and the propelling motive was gone. How much is such a motive worth? God is represented, by modern theology, as standing over the sinner with a great hell-whip, saying, If you do not serve me, I will whip you forever. To get rid of the whipping they serve him. If this is a correct motive, hell is an indispensable prerequisite to salvation.

W. Sheldon.

A man may suffer without sinning; but a man cannot sin without suffering.

For the Crisis.

Immorality.

That the holy Scriptures, and more especially the Decalogue, furnish the only sure basis for the superstructure of right moral character, we have the concurrent testimony of the wise and good in all ages. That the morality of the present age, in all its principles and features, has not its foundation upon this rock, is most revoltingly evident. One needs but to listen to the language of the children during their play hours, to hear from lips comparatively infantile, such horrid blasphemies and disgusting obscenities as are enough to shock the ear and sicken the heart. Would you obtain authentic testimony of the breach of the eighth commandment, as well as the statute law, you have only to ask the farmer what becomes of the annual produce of yonder excellent fruit-trees, and he will tell you, that after all his expense, labor and care in the culture of his trees, and circumspection in regard to their fruit, he is unable to gather from them but a very little; for the rascally boys depredate his enclosures, and purloin his fruits with impunity, since the action of the law has become almost a dead letter in such cases—the damages recovered being little if any more than enough to pay the costs of prosecution. Thus, the farmer may spend much, may labor long and sedulously, while the fruits of his labor receive no adequate protection from the depredations of the immoral and perverse youth, found more or less in every community. Now this is no fancy sketch; we would speak from personal knowledge, and affirm that whereof we have abundant proof.

There seems to be almost a total want of regard for the rights of private property among the young in many communities, as well as a reckless abuse of what is more public. In Prussia, where the Bible stands at the head of every prescribed list of text books for general instruction, we are told fruit trees may stand by the way-side abounding with fruit, unmolested; such being the sacred regard of the children for the rights of the owners, that in no case would they touch of the fruit without consent. But no more, lest we transcend the limits of a short article.

Selections.

The Atheism of "Orthodoxy."

We clip the following from the Christian Ambassador. It is sound and logical reasoning, and brands notorious "orthodoxy" with atheism:

"It is serious matter to charge falsely against another's faith. Orthodoxy claims to be the true or right faith. If so, to charge it with Atheism would be among the highest moral crimes. If its claims are pretentious and false, and it places its god in the place of the true God, and if its god cannot be the true God, then to call it "Orthodoxy" is to place Atheism in place of Theism. With all its pomp and pretension, with all its clamor and denunciation, I am willing to approach its awful presence and make good my charge.

Can there be an infinite God, if Orthodoxy be true? I take the negative. Impossible! I hope to make it so plain to any mind that an orthodox himself cannot admit his premises and deny my conclusion. Orthodoxy says "there is one God consisting of three distinct persons—the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, and these three are one." Deny the Trinity, and orthodoxy cries out "Atheism." Such is the issue made by orthodoxy. On this issue, then, we join. Let there be no dodging, special pleading, nor backing down. Walk to the issue and stand or fall by it, as the truth may be.

The word "person," from the Latin persona, means sounding forth, or one who speaks,—the whole of an individuality—mental and vocal power entire. Anything more or less would not be a person. An infinite being, therefore, by impossibility cannot consist of three persons. If Orthodoxy be true the Father is an infinite being, and the Holy Ghost an infinite being also. Now, if God the Father be an infinite being, nothing can be added to him, for he is infinite already, nothing can be taken from him, for infinity cannot be divided; an infinite person cannot be increased or diminished, else he is not infinite. If the Father be infinite, and the Son be added, what is added is something or nothing. If something, then the Father was not and is not infinite of himself. If not infinite, then he is not God. If he be infinite and the Son be added, he can add nothing, and therefore must be nothing. If he be nothing, then one part of God is nothing. If one part be nothing, and God be infinite, then every part of God is nothing; for God is the same infinity. If the Holy Ghost be added, he also, must be nothing. If two persons or parts of God be nothing, and three persons or parts are necessary to make God, then there is no God. If two parts of anything be nothing, all must be nothing, for anything that is, is something, therefore there is no God. If the Father be not infinite, then add what you can, he cannot be God. The Son and Holy Ghost must be added, therefore when added, cannot be God. If the Father cannot be God, and it is impossible if orthodoxy be true, and if the Son and Holy Ghost are not God without the Father, then Father, Son and Holy Ghost are no God. If Orthodoxy be true, then there is no God.

I defy a denial of the conclusion, without an impeachment of the premises. An impeachment of the premises is proof perfect that the conclusion is true. If Orthodoxy be true there can be no God. If there can be no God, then God does not exist of necessity; for what is of necessity must be infinitely the same. What is infinitely the same cannot be infinitely Father, Son, and Holy Ghost—for if infinitely one person, he could not be infinitely three persons. It is impossible. Am I told, "Oh, it is a mystery," I answer, it is impossible, and what is impossible cannot be. No logic, no reasoning, no pretence can make it possible. But why advert to mystery? If the thing be proven, there is an end. If not proven, mystery cannot prove it.

But the Trinitarian, recovering, faintly ejaculates, "they are not three in essence, but in office." Then if but one in essence and three in office, then an office makes a person and not the essence. If an office make a person, then an hundred offices would make an hundred persons, and yet the person the same office or no office. If in office or in person then, as far as his nature is concerned, God cannot be three, there can be but one infinite God of one person. If orthodoxy then be true, there is and can be no God.

Reading the Bible.

Read your Bible slowly. Take time, even if you have but little time. A great mathematician once said, if his life depended upon solving a problem in two minutes, he would spend one of the two in deciding how to do it. So in reading the Scriptures; if you are pressed for time, then spend the precious moments on a portion of a chapter. When you feel that the mind and heart begin to drink in the sentiment, even of a single verse, then stop and drain the heavenly chalice, because the Divine Spirit is filling thy cup. It is a true, solemn and interesting thought, that we are to wait, to linger, to tarry for the blessing to come from the world before us.

To search the Scriptures with the clear, unmoted eye of meditation, secures treasures of knowledge known only to him who thus cooly, piously and philosophically studies the Word of God.

Let any man give us a reason why, when the Scriptures are read so much, memory retains so little, that quotations are so blundering and incorrect, if the reason is not found in the fact of hasty reading of the Word of God. There, as elsewhere, man must reap as he sows.—N. Y. Obs.

High-sounding Words.

To those who seek for high-sounding words, preferring words of Latin derivation to old-fashioned, plain, strong Saxon, the writer would recommend the perusal of the following:

Latinized version of the Twenty-third Psalm.

1. Deity is my pastor; I shall not be indigent.
2. He causeth me to recumb in the verdant lawns; he inducteth me by the unrippled liquidities.
3. He reinstalleth my spirit; he conducteth me in avenues of rectitude for the celebrity of his appellations.
4. Indubitably though I perambulate the umbriferous glens of the sepulchral dormitory, I will not be purturbed by any appalling catastrophe; thy wand and thy crook insinuate delectation.
5. Thou positest a refection before me in the face of inimical scrutation; thou perfumest my locks with odoriferous unguents; my chalice exuberates.
6. Unquestionably, benignity and commiseration shall continue all the diuturnity of my vitality, and I will eternalize my habitation in the metropolis of the Universe.—Exchange.

Transplanting in the Night.—A friend, in whose powers of observation we have confidence, and who is an exact experimenter, informs us that last spring and summer he made the following experiments: He transplanted ten cherry-trees while in blossom, commencing at four o'clock in the afternoon, and transplanting one each hour, until one in the morning. Those transplanted during daylight, shed their blossoms, producing little or no fruit, while those planted during the darker portions maintained their condition fully. He did the same with ten dwarf pear trees, after the fruit was one-third grown. Those transplanted during the night perfected their crop, and showed no injury from having been removed. With each of these trees he removed some earth with the roots. We are well aware that when plants are accidentally frozen in green-houses, it is customary to render the house dark before applying cold water to thaw them, and that when this is not observed they are injured, while, if entire darkness be secured during the operation, many of them are saved. But the experiment of our friend seems to have but little analogy to this fact, and it is entirely new to us.—Working Farmer.

Hygiene.

Dr. Hurd's Cook-book.

In our travels we find many who are being satisfied that a large proportion of the sickness of mankind is produced by improper diet, and who wish to adopt a more simple, cheap, and healthy mode of living. They hardly know how to begin, and wish they could obtain some work showing them how to select and prepare food which is strictly healthy. To all such we would say that we have a small cook-book, carefully prepared by Dr. W. F. Hurd, an eminent physician at "Our Home," —Dr. Jackson's Water Cure in Dansville, N. Y.,—which gives all necessary directions for preparing food in harmony with the laws of life; describing the different varieties used in that justly celebrated hygenic institution.

Any who wish this cook-book, can obtain it by sending to the Crisis Office.—Price six cents, postage one cent.—G.

Wheat and Oat Meal.

We are glad to learn that several families in and about Boston are beginning to learn the worth of Graham and oat meal. We would say to them that they can get a very fine quality of these healthy and cheap articles of diet, at the store of S. G. Bowdlear and Co., Nos. 192 and 194 State St., Boston. At the same place they will find nice cracked wheat, hominy, samp, kiln-dried corn meal, white corn flour, oat flour, bolted Indian meal, Hecker's farina, maccaroni, corn starch, rye flour, and pearl barley.

For the Crisis.

Cooking and Eating.

[illegible]

Wicked? Certainly it is, very wicked. It's robbery, high-handed, out-stretched, to spend so much time, as many do, in cooking and eating, to gratify a luxurious, fastidious appetite. It's a sin, a very great sin, a wicked waste of time and money, a consuming God's bounty on lust, that ought to be expended in doing good, in relieving the poor, healing the sick, raising the dead, casting out devils. Some church-members spend one-half their time, at least, in gratifying a dainty palate. Time is wasted—heaven's bounties. Health is sacrificed—a pure conscience. Every moment of time, every farthing of God's money, that can possibly be redeemed by rigid self-denial, by strict, uniformly temperate habits, should be redeemed for purposes of benevolence, for deeds of charity and mercy. Away with this perpetual kitchen drudgery, these richly, luxuriously spread tables; away with them! Beware, ye time-killers, ye luxurious gormandizers, ye consumers of God's bounty on lust, the gratification of a depraved, carnal appetite. Beware, take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting, and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so the day of retribution come upon you unawares. Watch, watch, for ye know not the day, nor the hour when your Lord cometh. Be temperate in all things, redeem the time, grasp every fleeting moment for good. Keep your bodies under, bring them into subjection; fly on wings of love, mercy, and truth.

"Voluptuous man! sated with nature's boons,
With dishes tortured from their native taste
And mad variety, to spur beyond
Its wiser will the jaded appetite!
Is this for pleasure? Learn a juster time,
And know that true temperance is luxury."

D. F. Newton.

Impure Water.—Set a pitcher of water in a room, and in a few hours it will have absorbed nearly all the impure gases in the room, the atmosphere thus becoming purer, while the water is rendered utterly filthy. The colder the water, the greater is its capacity to absorb and contain these gases. At ordinary temperature, it will absorb a pint of carbonic acid gas and a large quantity of ammonia. This capacity is nearly doubled by reducing the water nearly to the freezing point. Hence water kept in a room for a while, soon becomes unfit for use. For the same reason the water in a pump should always be pumped out in the morning before any is used. Impure water is more injurious than impure air.

Apples as an article of Food.—A raw, mellow apple, says Hall's Journal of Health, is digested in an hour and a half, while boiled cabbage requires five hours. The most healthful desert which can be placed on the table is a baked apple. If taken freely at breakfast, with coarse bread and butter, without meat or flesh of any kind, it has an admirable effect on the general system, often removing acidities, and cooling off febrile conditions, more effectually than the most approved medicine. The plenteous crop should make the apple cheap.

Corn Meal.—In a letter just at hand from Mrs. O'Brien, who received the first premium for corn bread, she says: "If you take corn meal when purchased at the market or grocery store, and put it in a pan and leave it in a warm stove oven over night, it will keep better, will acquire a better taste, and will rise and bake better. The little trouble to do this will be amply repaid. . . . I do not like scalding meal before using, as it tends to make it clammy, and can do little if any good; drying the meal is safer and better."—Agriculturist.

To Stop Bleeding.—A correspondent of the American Agriculturist writes that bleeding from a wound on a man or beast may be stopped by a mixture of wheat flour and common salt, in two parts, bound on with a cloth. If the bleeding be profuse, use a large quantity, say from one to three pints. It may be left on for hours, or even days, if necessary.

☞ For an hour preceding bed-time, dismiss every engrossing subject from the mind, and let it be employed about something soothing and enlivening.

Terms of Subscription,
Payable in Advance.

| | |
|---|---|
| A single copy one year | $2.00 |
| A single copy six months | 1.00 |
| A single copy three months | .50 |
| Five copies to one address for six months | [illegible] |
| Ten copies to one address for six months | [illegible] |
| Twenty copies to one address for six months | [illegible] |
| Thirty copies to one address for six months | [illegible] |

These terms, allowing a subscription of 50 cents for three months, place the paper within reach of all who are able to pay any thing. The reduction in price, where five or more papers are sent to one address, enables subscribers, by combining, to receive a large number at reduced rates; thus supplying the poor in their neighborhood.

We propose that those who have ability, when sending their own subscriptions, also send what they are willing to give to aid in circulating the Crisis among the poor, who we have always with us.

Postage on the Crisis when prepaid quarterly, or yearly, at the office where it is received, is 13 cts. a year in any part of Massachusetts, and 26 cts. to any other part of the United States.

Papers for subscribers in Canada and the British Provinces must be prepaid in Boston, 26 cents per year, in addition to the subscription price. Hence one dollar will pay for 22 papers, or $2.25 for one year.

Rules for Correspondents.

Over all matters not intended for publication write Private.

Over all business matters, write Business.

Over all articles for the paper, write For the Crisis.

All articles should be accompanied by the writer's name, for the Editors' information, even if it is not published.

When the names of new subscribers are sent, please say they are new, and it will save us much labor.

Private Letters. Those wishing to address the Editor on matters not connected with the office, will please write the word Private on the outside of the envelope.

Please put the business matters and correspondence on a piece of paper separate from other communications.

All persons writing to the office should give distinctly their Name, Post Office, County and State at which they wish to be addressed; and all orders, subscriptions, or other communications [illegible]

The World to Come.

By faith I see a glorious land,
Where wars and strife shall ever cease,
The home of all the blood-washed band—
There Jesus reigns, the Prince of peace.

A world of joy, a world of bliss,
Whose glories are forever new;
Oft I compare that world with this,—
Here all things fade like morning dew.

No mourner stands beside the tomb,
To weep for loved ones sleeping there;
Dispelled is every shade of gloom,
Banished is every toil and care.

The vail now o'er all nations cast,
Forever then removed shall be,
And death, of enemies the last,
Be swallowed up in victory.

I'm trav'ling to that blissful land,
Through rugged wilds I'll press my way;
While guided by a Savior's hand,
My feet shall never, never stray.

Sinner, would you that world enjoy,
And in its bliss and glory share?
For Jesus all your powers employ,
And with his saints you'll soon be there.

For soon enrobed in glory bright
The King of kings to earth shall come,
Endowed with majesty and might,
To take his wand'ring people home.

Correspondence.

From M. S. H.

Bro. Grant:—I saw in the Crisis of March 5th a communication from Sr. Lombard, and I thought I would relate a little of my own experience, hoping I might encourage that Sister, and others similarly afflicted. Last fall our little boy, aged three years, was very sick with dysentery. His flesh had wasted away, and he was so weak he could neither stand nor go. We obtained medical aid, but after a week's trial we became convinced the medicine injured him. We then thought that unless God interposed our dear boy must die. We then, believing with all our hearts that there is a God in Israel who can yet hear the prayer of faith, as directed in his word, sent for a brother who has the gift of healing, and who we believe is one of God's elders, who came, and according to the rule laid hands upon him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord, and from that very hour he began to amend. We gave him no more medicine. He is now a healthy boy. Praise be to Him who is still able to heal all manner of diseases! But this is not the only case to which I can bear witness. I took cold this winter and was threatened with fever. My friends were the more alarmed as there had been several cases of fever in our neighborhood through the fall and winter which had proved fatal. I had no doctor, as I have not much confidence in the means used by the practitioners of the present day. But it happened, and it seemed as though the Lord so ordered it, that that same brother came to our house and tarried through the night. In the morning the Lord heard prayer in my behalf, and I was made whole from that very hour.

These are but two cases out of the many I could bring, if required, the truth of which can be fully substantiated. I would say to that Sister, Read the word of God carefully, and see if you can find it there intimated that the gifts were ever to be taken from the church. That the church as a body lost them, cannot be denied; but all the way down through the gospel dispensation, there have been solitary cases, proving that the faith has not been entirely lost; and these instances have been outside of the church of Rome, and ever, as now, among a people who are determined to know nothing save Jesus Christ and him crucified And now as we are drawing near the end of man's probationary state, when the faith that teaches the speedy establishment of God's everlasting kingdom has become a reproach; when the ministers of the second house of Israel are teaching tradition instead of truth, and the people receive it in preference to the plain declaration of scripture; when true and living faith is as scarce among them as it was with the first house; it seems to me the gifts are as necessary here, to show the world where the true believers are, as any time since the gospel has been preached. And, although the Spiritualists may do the same works, it is by the power that Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, and not by faith in the word of God.

Farmington, N. H.

From J. McKee.

Bro. Grant:—As I look over the pages of the Crisis, and peruse the epistles from the brethren and sisters scattered abroad, they sometimes cheer me, then again I am led to shed the sympathizing tear with those who, like myself, are wading through the deep waters of affliction. But, thanks to Him who doeth all things well, we are not left disconsolate, for we read from his precious word, that all things work for good to them who love him. There are many blessed promises made to us; and how consoling is the thought, that we are nearing the haven of eternal rest, where we ne'er shall have to part with those we love, nor see the cold hand of death laid upon them and they torn from our embrace! neither shall we there have to watch o'er the couch and dread the old enemy, for he will have to yield up those whom he has slain. Glorious thought! O! how I long to see the day when the ransomed host shall shout victory over their last foe. The thought often recurs to me, Shall I be there? My prayer is that we may be kept spotless and blameless until the Life-giver returns to reward his faithful children, and release us from all our griefs and woes.

Many times I am cheered by reading from the Crisis that sinners are still flocking to the blood-stained banner of Prince Emanuel, instead of enlisting to imbrue their hands in the blood of their fellow creatures. Surely we are living in perilous times; and we who profess to be looking for the return of the Nobleman should be living epistles, laboring zealously for the salvation of perishing mortals, instead of contending with and devouring each other.

The cause has suffered much in this vicinity from those pretending to be ministers of the gospel, but proved to be wolves in sheep's clothing, biting and devouring. I have tried, to the best of my ability, to spread the glorious present truths, by circulating books and tracts from the Tract Fund, and some have been benefitted by those little missionaries. We should be very careful as a people who we endorse, and see to it that they are well recommended from the conference, or from the church of which they are members. This would save a great deal of trouble and anxiety for those who love the truth.

From Sr. S. E. Teeple.

Bro. Grant:—I enclose $— for the continuance of the Crisis, and feel it is money laid out in a good cause, and trust the paper will ever be sustained till the time comes when there shall be no need of a paper nor press. O Lord, hasten the time! is my prayer, when the saints may be gathered. Once I could meet with the children, and exhort, sing and pray with them, and enjoy it as well as any one; but now if I meet (unless once in a great while) it must be with the different churches. To go with them I cannot; to be content and stay at home, is not obeying the command of Paul; and thus I feel sometimes almost like murmuring; but I know deliverance will be given to the saints in a little from this, and I mean among them to be found. But the trials and afflictions which the saints of God have to pass through! They should and do have a tendency to wean us from the world and make us more like our Lord. May we one and all keep the meek and quiet spirit, watch and pray much, for what is there not to contend with? Truly these are perilous times.

"Let me among the saints be found,
Whene'er th' archangel's trump shall sound,
To see thy smiling face!"

And then and not till then shall I be satisfied. Many of you, dear children, with whom I have enjoyed precious seasons in the past, I expect to meet no more on the shores of time; but I mean to live so as to meet you

"Where no tears shall ever fall,
Nor heart be sad,
Where the glory is for all,
And all are glad."

Roxbury, Ct.

From B. P. Manning.

Brn. Grant and Morgan:—The Lord is very good to his children in N. H., and is converting sinners in spite of the enemy. In Orange there have been some eight converted and baptized. Bro. J. G. Hook, of Concord, has been there laboring with the people, and God has blessed his labors. I was there one week with them, and truth did triumph over error. I received a letter from a brother yesterday from East Canaan, stating that the people had shut them out of the school-house. I told them when there I thought they would do so if they preached the truth to them; so you see the enemy is not dead yet. He is doing up his last work. O how I sigh for home! I love the coming of my blessed Lord better than ever.

Dear brethren, God and myself only know the pain and suffering that I have to bear, but it is all right. God will not suffer any of his dear children to be afflicted more than is for their good. This is a world of suffering and death; but the time is very near when death, and he that had the power of death, which is the devil, will be destroyed. How many of the dear saints have been laid in the grave within a few years! But they will come again from the land of the enemy. While I was reading Sr. Howell's letter in the Crisis, I could say from my heart, Glory to God! Bro. John will soon come up from his sleeping place, and I, if faithful to God a little longer, shall shake hands with him on the other shore. Brethren and sisters, be faithful to God, and strive to be holy, for without holiness no man shall see the Lord. Let us seek meekness. "Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth." Brethren, I desire your prayers, that God may rebuke this disease, and give me strength to labor.

Goffstown, May 17th, '62.

From Sr. S. P. Green.

Bro. Grant:—You do not know how destitute the people of this vicinity are of the truth. Spiritualism, sensualism, and all sorts of wickedness prevail above religion. Nearly all are contented with their state of destitution. Professors are sleeping on the verge of ruin. Backsliders have gone back, back, almost to the worst forms of evil and sinfulness. Alas! they are in a lost condition indeed, unless the Holy Spirit of God interposes with power immediately. There are too many like the "Pharisees, hypocrites!" in the days of Christ. They will not go in themselves, nor suffer those that would to enter in. I think in my soul there are some and probably many that would enter the fold of Christ, if stumbling blocks were out of the way: but the way before poor sinners! what will become of them? Young and old, high and low, are in the broad way to destruction.

I am striving through the grace of God to enter "by the door" into the sheepfold. I am almost disheartened much of the time. I have to meet much opposition, and stem the tide all alone. But through the dim eye of faith I am led to behold the land of the free and the good. Possibly I may have an entrance into the everlasting kingdom, and very likely to be so if I am faithful and endure firmly unto the end. But Satan is trying, and has been for more than six years, to hinder me from going forward and looking up to Jesus and feeling my acceptance of Him. This life hath an enormous load for a poor, weak mortal like me to carry along. My spiritual weakness has been caused by an overpowering physical weakness. I do feel encouraged of late that my health will be improved to such an extent that my family, my poor, hard-laboring husband will be benefited, yea, blest temporally as well as spiritually. I have been highly favored of God all the way through these lone years of trials and temptations, of sickness and pain, in that he has given me the World's Crisis to read. I have lent it to friends and neighbors; I have given my good little messengers away as freely as they have been sent to me. I am careful about letting any have them to read that will let them be destroyed or hurt. I hope they will be printed as long as time lasts. Many would otherwise be destitute of the "meat in due season." May any of God's righteous servants pray for me, that I may be made strong, physically as well as spiritually, and be enabled to work for the Lord in earnest. If the Lord wills, will Bro. Grant come to Plymouth?

Plymouth, March 10, '62.

Sabbath Schools.

Bro. Grant:—This enterprise is one which commends itself to every christian. The training of the young is a duty which was made imperative by the Jewish laws. "Thou shalt diligently teach them to thy children, when thou liest down and when thou risest up, and when thou walkest by the way," etc. One may infer from this that whenever they were in company with children they were required to instruct them in the statutes and judgments of Jehovah, and this early training is undoubtedly one prominent reason why the Jews have maintained their identity so long.

We have also a command equally binding from our Savior. "Feed my lambs," said he to Peter, and in the days of his flesh he took them in his arms and blessed them; and if we would be his followers, and obey his commands, we must do likewise. That the Adventists have been remiss in Sabbath school instruction is apparent. There are many causes that have operated to bring about this state of things. 1. The preaching of the time of the Lord's coming called the attention of multitudes from this, and every thing else but the one idea of the Lord's speedy coming. 2. There has in many places been so much discord among brethren, that it was impossible for them to work in harmony in any branch of christian duty; different views of Scripture doctrine have caused more trouble in the Advent church than all the opposition from outward opposers.

I think we might take a lesson of wisdom in this respect from the American Sunday School Union, which is composed of five different denominations, yet the most perfect harmony has characterized their movements from the commencement of this organization, and great have been the results of their labor. To these missionaries many churches in the west and other parts of the country owe their existence. But to return to ourselves, should we not make a wise improvement of past experience, and gird on the armor anew in behalf of the little ones, and now, while there is a good prospect of success, put in the sickle and gather the harvest, before the coming storm sweeps over us, and they are left out of the fold to perish?

We cannot close our eyes to the sure word of prophecy which says that in the last days perilous time shall come, and the greater the peril the more caution is necessary. There will in my opinion be another time preached amongst us before the Lord comes, and shall we not be so thoroughly organized and "occupying," that in the true time the Lord will say to us, "Well done." And what more commendable duty could we be found engaged in than feeding the lambs of the flock?

Much more might be said upon this subject, but as I believe in short communications as well as short prayers, I will give place for others. I will however simply suggest that, as we have no Sabbath school paper of a denominational character, one column of the Crisis continue to be devoted especially to this cause, until there is a children's paper published amongst us.

Through Death to Life.

I.

Have you heard of the tale of the Aloe plant,
Away in the sunny clime,
By humble growth of a hundred years,
It reaches its blooming time;
And then a wondrous bud at its crown
Bursts into a thousand flowers;
This floral green, in its beauty seen,
Is the pride of the tropical bowers,
But the plant to the flower is a sacrifice,
For it blooms but once, and in blooming dies?

II.

Have you further heard of this Aloe plant,
That grows in the sunny clime?
How every one of its thousand flowers,
As they fall in the blooming time,
Is an infant tree that fastens its roots
In the place where they fall to the ground,
And fast as they drop from the dying stem,
Grow lively and lovely around?
By dying it liveth a thousandfold,
In the young that springs from the death of the old.

III.

Have you heard the tale of the Pelican,
The Arab's Gimel El Bahr!
That lives in the African solitudes,
Where the birds that live lonely are?
Have you heard how it loves its tender young,
And toils and cares for their good?
It brings them water from fountains afar,
And fishes the sea for their food;
In famine it feeds them, what love can devise!
The blood of its bosom, and feeding them dies.

IV.

Have you heard the tale they tell of the Swan,
The snow-white bird of the lake?
It noiselessly floats on the silvery wave,
It silently sits on the break—
For it saves its song till the close of life,
And then in the calm still even,
'Mid the golden rays of the setting sun,
It sings as it soars to heaven.
And the blessed notes fall back from the skies,
'Tis its only song, for in singing it dies.

V.

You have heard these tales, shall I tell you one,
A greater and better than all—
Have you heard of Him whom the heavens adore,
And before whom the hosts of them fall?
How he left his choirs and anthems above,
For earth in its wailings and woes,
To suffer the shame and pain of the cross,
And die for the life of his foes?
O Prince of the noble! O Savior Divine!
What sorrow or sacrifice equal to thine?

VI.

Have you heard of this tale—the best of them all,
The tale of the Holy and True?
He dies—but his life now in untold souls,
Springs up in the world anew—
His seed prevails, and is filling the earth,
As the stars fill the sky above—
He taught us to give up the love of life,
For the sake of the life of love—
His death is our life—his life is our gain,
The joy for the tear, the peace for the pain.

VII.

Now hear these tales, ye weary and worn,
Who for others do give up your all,
Our Savior has told us the seed that would grow,
Into earth's dark bosom must fall—
And pass from the sight and die away,
And then will the fruit appear—
The grain that seems lost in the earth below,
Will return manifold in the ear.
By death comes life—by life comes gain,
The joy for the tear—the peace for the pain.

For the Crisis.

"It takes away the inducement to Repentance."

So say modern theologians concerning the doctrine of "destruction"—derisively called "annihilation." Yes; it takes away the spurious inducement to repentance, but leaves the genuine inducement. It takes away the spell of fear, which is but a sinister motive, and unacceptable in the sight of God. Thousands have enlisted in the cause of religion through the influence of fear merely,—to escape apparent impending danger,—and when the fear subsides, and the danger no longer stares them in the face, they are no longer in the cause. The only propelling motive that moved them, having become extinct, they of course stop: and thus the world is filled with so-called backsliders, and religion is consequently brought into serious disrepute. Men who are operated upon by this motive are sincere, but they are moved by an incorrect principle. Permit me to illustrate it. Yonder profane sailor discovers a black cloud spreading itself over the sky; he hears the deafening thunders roar, and sees the vivid lightnings flash athwart the heavens; he hears the wind fiercely howl, and sees the waves roll mountains high: fear takes possession of his heart, and depicts to him a watery grave; and under this spell of fear he falls upon his knees, and weeps before God, pleading for mercy. Is he sincere? Yes; just as deeply sincere as that sinner upon the anxious seat. But the storm passes, and in two hours he is cursing God again! The fact is, he was moved by the wrong motive. Again: a few years ago, a man attempted to cross the Connecticut river, in the Spring of the year, just at night, when a cake of ice broke loose from its fellows, carrying him down-stream. He loudly called for help, but no ear could hear. Darkness enveloped him. In this condition the thoughts of a watery grave danced through his excited brain. Giving way to fear, he knelt upon the cake of ice and prayed fervently, and wept tears of sincerity. He repented with his whole heart. Soon the cake of ice touched the shore. Seeing his chance of escape he bounded on to the land, swung his hat, and exclaimed, "Go to hell and be damned." The danger had passed, and the propelling motive was gone. How much is such a motive worth? God is represented, by modern theology, as standing over the sinner with a great hell-whip, saying, If you do not serve me, I will whip you forever. To get rid of the whipping they serve him. If this is a correct motive, hell is an indispensable prerequisite to salvation.

W. Sheldon.

A man may suffer without sinning; but a man cannot sin without suffering.

For the Crisis.

Immorality.

That the holy Scriptures, and more especially the Decalogue, furnish the only sure basis for the superstructure of right moral character, we have the concurrent testimony of the wise and good in all ages. That the morality of the present age, in all its principles and features, has not its foundation upon this rock, is most revoltingly evident. One needs but to listen to the language of the children during their play hours, to hear from lips comparatively infantile, such horrid blasphemies and disgusting obscenities as are enough to shock the ear and sicken the heart. Would you obtain authentic testimony of the breach of the eighth commandment, as well as the statute law, you have only to ask the farmer what becomes of the annual produce of yonder excellent fruit-trees, and he will tell you, that after all his expense, labor and care in the culture of his trees, and circumspection in regard to their fruit, he is unable to gather from them but a very little; for the rascally boys depredate his enclosures, and purloin his fruits with impunity, since the action of the law has become almost a dead letter in such cases—the damages recovered being little if any more than enough to pay the costs of prosecution. Thus, the farmer may spend much, may labor long and sedulously, while the fruits of his labor receive no adequate protection from the depredations of the immoral and perverse youth, found more or less in every community. Now this is no fancy sketch; we would speak from personal knowledge, and affirm that whereof we have abundant proof.

There seems to be almost a total want of regard for the rights of private property among the young in many communities, as well as a reckless abuse of what is more public. In Prussia, where the Bible stands at the head of every prescribed list of text books for general instruction, we are told fruit trees may stand by the way-side abounding with fruit, unmolested; such being the sacred regard of the children for the rights of the owners, that in no case would they touch of the fruit without consent. But no more, lest we transcend the limits of a short article.

Selections.

The Atheism of "Orthodoxy."

We clip the following from the Christian Ambassador. It is sound and logical reasoning, and brands notorious "orthodoxy" with atheism:

'It is serious matter to charge falsely against another's faith. Orthodoxy claims to be the true or right faith. If so, to charge it with Atheism would be among the highest moral crimes. If its claims are pretentious and false, and it places its god in the place of the true God, and if its god cannot be the true God, then to call it "Orthodoxy" is to place Atheism in place of Theism. With all its pomp and pretension, with all its clamor and denunciation, I am willing to approach its awful presence and make good my charge.

Can there be an infinite God, if Orthodoxy be true? I take the negative. Impossible! I hope to make it so plain to any mind that an orthodox himself cannot admit his premises and deny my conclusion. Orthodoxy says "there is one God consisting of three distinct persons—the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, and these three are one." Deny the Trinity, and orthodoxy cries out "Atheism." Such is the issue made by orthodoxy.' On this issue, then, we join. Let there be no dodging, special pleading, nor backing down. Walk to the issue and stand or fall by it, as the truth may be.

The word "person," from the Latin persona, means sounding forth, or one who speaks,—the whole of an individuality—mental and vocal power entire. Anything more or less would not be a person. An infinite being, therefore, by impossibility cannot consist of three persons. If Orthodoxy be true the Father is an infinite being, and the Holy Ghost an infinite being also. Now, if God the Father be an infinite being, nothing can be added to him, for he is infinite already, nothing can be taken from him, for infinity cannot be divided; an infinite person cannot be increased or diminished, else he is not infinite. If the Father be infinite, and the Son be added, what is added is something or nothing. If something, then the Father was not and is not infinite of himself. If not infinite, then he is not God. If he be infinite and the Son be added, he can add nothing, and therefore must be nothing. If he be nothing, then one part of God is nothing. If one part be nothing, and God be infinite, then every part of God is nothing; for God is the same infinity. If the Holy Ghost be added, he also, must be nothing. If two persons or parts of God be nothing, and three persons or parts are necessary to make God, then there is no God. If two parts of anything be nothing, all must be nothing, for anything that is, is something, therefore there is no God. If the Father be not infinite, then add what you can, he cannot be God. The Son and Holy Ghost must be added, therefore when added, cannot be God. If the Father cannot be God, and it is impossible if orthodoxy be true, and if the Son and Holy Ghost are not God without the Father, then Father, Son and Holy Ghost are no God. If Orthodoxy be true, then there is no God.

I defy a denial of the conclusion, without an impeachment of the premises. An impeachment of the premises is proof perfect that the conclusion is true. If Orthodoxy be true there can be no God. If there can be no God, then God does not exist of necessity; for what is of necessity must be infinitely the same. What is infinitely the same cannot be infinitely Father, Son, and Holy Ghost—for if infinitely one person, he could not be infinitely three persons. It is impossible. Am I told, "Oh, it is a mystery," I answer, it is impossible, and what is impossible cannot be. No logic, no reasoning, no pretence can make it possible. But why advert to mystery? If the thing be proven, there is an end. If not proven, mystery cannot prove it.

But the Trinitarian, recovering, faintly ejaculates, "they are not three in essence, but in office." Then if but one in essence and three in office, then an office makes a person and not the essence. If an office make a person, then an hundred offices would make an hundred persons, and yet the person the same office or no office. If in office or in person then, as far as his nature is concerned, God cannot be three, there can be but one infinite God of one person. If orthodoxy then be true, there is and can be no God.

Reading the Bible.

Read your Bible slowly. Take time, even if you have but little time. A great mathematician once said, if his life depended upon solving a problem in two minutes, he would spend one of the two in deciding how to do it. So in reading the Scriptures; if you are pressed for time, then spend the precious moments on a portion of a chapter. When you feel that the mind and heart begin to drink in the sentiment, even of a single verse, then stop and drain the heavenly chalice, because the Divine Spirit is filling thy cup. It is a true, solemn and interesting thought, that we are to wait, to linger, to tarry for the blessing to come from the world before us.

To search the Scriptures with the clear, unmoted eye of meditation, secures treasures of knowledge known only to him who thus cooly, piously and philosophically studies the Word of God.

Let any man give us a reason why, when the Scriptures are read so much, memory retains so little, that quotations are so blundering and incorrect, if the reason is not found in the fact of hasty reading of the Word of God. There, as elsewhere, man must reap as he sows.—N. Y. Obs.

High-sounding Words.

To those who seek for high-sounding words, preferring words of Latin derivation to old-fashioned, plain, strong Saxon, the writer would recommend the perusal of the following:

Latinized version of the Twenty-third Psalm.

1. Deity is my pastor; I shall not be indigent.

2. He causeth me to recumb in the verdant lawns; he inducteth me by the unrippled liquidities.

3. He reinstalleth my spirit; he conducteth me in avenues of rectitude for the celebrity of his appellations.

4. Indubitably though I perambulate the umbriferous glens of the sepulchral dormitory, I will not be perturbed by any appalling catastrophe; thy wand and thy crook insinuate delectation.

5. Thou positest a refection before me in the face of inimical scrutation; thou perfumest my locks with odoriferous unguents; my chalice exuberates.

6. Unquestionably, benignity and commiseration shall continue all the diuturnity of my vitality, and I will eternalize my habitation in the metropolis of the Universe.—Exchange.

Transplanting in the Night.—A friend, in whose powers of observation we have confidence, and who is an exact experimenter, informs us that last spring and summer he made the following experiments: He transplanted ten cherry-trees while in blossom, commencing at four o'clock in the afternoon, and transplanting one each hour, until one in the morning. Those transplanted during daylight, shed their blossoms, producing little or no fruit, while those planted during the darker portions maintained their condition fully. He did the same with ten dwarf pear trees, after the fruit was one-third grown. Those transplanted during the night perfected their crop, and showed no injury from having been removed. With each of these trees he removed some earth with the roots. We are well aware that when plants are accidentally frozen in green-houses, it is customary to render the house dark before applying cold water to thaw them, and that when this is not observed they are injured, while, if entire darkness be secured during the operation, many of them are saved. But the experiment of our friend seems to have but little analogy to this fact, and it is entirely new to us.—Working Farmer.

Hygiene.

Dr. Hurd's Cook-book.

In our travels we find many who are being satisfied that a large proportion of the sickness of mankind is produced by improper diet, and who wish to adopt a more simple, cheap, and healthy mode of living. They hardly know how to begin, and wish they could obtain some work showing them how to select and prepare food which is strictly healthy. To all such we would say that we have a small cook-book, carefully prepared by Dr. W. F. Hurd, an eminent physician at "Our Home,'—Dr. Jackson's Water Cure in Dansville, N. Y.,—which gives all necessary directions for preparing food in harmony with the laws of life; describing the different varieties used in that justly celebrated hygenic institution.

Any who wish this cook-book, can obtain it by sending to the Crisis Office.—Price six cents, postage one cent.—G.

Wheat and Oat Meal.

We are glad to learn that several families in and about Boston are beginning to learn the worth of Graham and oat meal. We would say to them that they can get a very fine quality of these healthy and cheap articles of diet, at the store of S. G. Bowdlear and Co., Nos. 192 and 194 State St., Boston. At the same place they will find nice cracked wheat, hominy, samp, kiln-dried corn meal, white corn flour, oat flour, bolted Indian meal, Hecker's farina, macaroni, corn starch, rye flour, and pearl-barley.—G.

For the Crisis.

Cooking and Eating.

EVEN TO SURFEITING AND GLUTTONY!

Wicked? Certainly it is, very wicked. It's robbery, high-handed, out-stretched, to spend so much time, as many do, in cooking and eating, to gratify a luxurious, fastidious appetite. It's a sin, a very great sin, a wicked waste of time and money, a consuming God's bounty on lust, that ought to be expended in doing good, in relieving the poor, healing the sick, raising the dead, casting out devils. Some church-members spend one-half their time, at least, in gratifying a dainty palate. Time is wasted—heaven's bounties. Health is sacrificed—a pure conscience. Every moment of time, every farthing of God's money, that can possibly be redeemed by rigid self-denial, by strict, uniformly temperate habits, should be redeemed for purposes of benevolence, for deeds of charity and mercy. Away with this perpetual kitchen drudgery, these richly, luxuriously spread tables; away with them! Beware, ye time-killers, ye luxurious gormandizers, ye consumers of God's bounty on lust, the gratification of a depraved, carnal appetite. Beware, take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting, and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so the day of retribution come upon you unawares. Watch, watch, for ye know not the day, nor the hour when your Lord cometh. Be temperate in all things, redeem the time, grasp every fleeting moment for good. Keep your bodies under, bring them into subjection; fly on wings of love, mercy, and truth.

"Voluptuous man! sated with nature's boons,
With dishes tortured from their native taste
And mad variety, to spur beyond
Its wiser will the jaded appetite!
Is this for pleasure? Learn a juster time,
And know that true temperance is luxury."

D. F. Newton.

Impure Water.—Set a pitcher of water in a room, and in a few hours it will have absorbed nearly all the impure gases in the room, the atmosphere thus becoming purer, while the water is rendered utterly filthy. The colder the water, the greater is its capacity to absorb and contain these gases. At ordinary temperature, it will absorb a pint of carbonic acid gas and a large quantity of ammonia. This capacity is nearly doubled by reducing the water nearly to the freezing point. Hence water kept in a room for a while, soon becomes unfit for use. For the same reason the water in a pump should always be pumped out in the morning before any is used. Impure water is more injurious than impure air.

Apples as an article of Food.—A raw, mellow apple, says Hall's Journal of Health, is digested in an hour and a half, while boiled cabbage requires five hours. The most healthful desert which can be placed on the table is a baked apple. If taken freely at breakfast, with coarse bread and butter, without meat or flesh of any kind, it has an admirable effect on the general system, often removing acidities, and cooling off febrile conditions, more effectually than the most approved medicine. The plenteous crop should make the apple cheap.

Corn Meal.—In a letter just at hand from Mrs. O'Brien, who received the first premium for corn bread, she says: "If you take corn meal when purchased at the market or grocery store, and put it in a pan and leave it in a warm stove oven over night, it will keep better, will acquire a better taste, and will rise and bake better. The little trouble to do this will be amply repaid. . . . I do not like scalding meal before using, as it tends to make it clammy, and can do little if any good; drying the meal is safer and better."—Agriculturist.

To Stop Bleeding.—A correspondent of the American Agriculturist writes that bleeding from a wound on a man or beast may be stopped by a mixture of wheat flour and common salt, in two parts, bound on with a cloth. If the bleeding be profuse, use a large quantity, say from one to three pints. It may be left on for hours, or even days, if necessary.

☞ For an hour preceding bed-time, dismiss every engrossing subject from the mind, and let it be employed about something soothing and enlivening.

Terms of Subscription,
Payable in Advance.

A single copy one year........$2.00
A single copy six months........1.00
A single copy three months........50
Five copies to one address for six months........4.50
Ten copies to one address for six months........8.00
Twenty copies to one address for six months........[illegible]
Thirty copies to one address for six months........[illegible]

These terms, allowing a subscription of 50 cents for three months, place the paper within reach of all who are able to pay any thing. The reduction in price, where five or more papers are sent to one address, enables subscribers, by combining, to receive a large number at reduced rates; thus supplying the poor in their neighborhood.

We propose that those who have ability, when sending their own subscriptions, also send what they are willing to give to aid in circulating the Crisis among the poor, who we have always with us.

Postage on the Crisis when prepaid, quarterly, or yearly, at the office where it is received, is 13 cts. a year in any part of Massachusetts, and 26 cts. to any other part of the United States.

Papers for subscribers in Canada and the British Provinces must be prepaid in Boston, 26 cents per year, in addition to the subscription price. Hence one dollar will pay for 22 papers, or $2.25 for one year.

Rules for Correspondents.

Over all matters not intended for publication write Private.

Over all business matters, write Business.

Over all articles for the paper, write For the Crisis.

All articles should be accompanied by the writer's name, for the Editors' information, even if it is not published.

When the names of new subscribers are sent, please say they are new, and it will save us much labor.

Private Letters. Those wishing to address the Editor on matters not connected with the office, will please write the word, Private on the outside of the envelope.

Please put the business matters, and appointments on a piece of paper separate from other communications.

All persons writing to the office should give distinctly and plainly the Post Office, County and State at which they wish to be addressed; and all orders, subscriptions, communications, and remittances should be plainly directed to Miles Grant, Boston, Mass.

The World to Come.

By faith I see a glorious land,
Where wars and strife shall ever cease,
The home of all the blood-washed band—
There Jesus reigns, the Prince of peace.

A world of joy, a world of bliss,
Whose glories are forever new;
Oft I compare that world with this,—
Here all things fade like morning dew.

No mourner stands beside the tomb,
To weep for loved ones sleeping there;
Dispelled is every shade of gloom,
Banished is every toil and care.

The vail now o'er all nations cast,
Forever then removed shall be,
And death, of enemies the last,
Be swallowed up in victory.

I'm trav'ling to that blissful land,
Through rugged wilds I'll press my way;
While guided by a Savior's hand,
My feet shall never, never stray.

Sinner, would you that world enjoy,
And in its bliss and glory share?
For Jesus all your powers employ,
And with his saints you'll soon be there.

For soon enrobed in glory bright
The King of kings to earth shall come,
Endowed with majesty and might,
To take his wand'ring people home.

Correspondence.

From M. S. H.

Bro. Grant:—I saw in the Crisis of March 5th a communication from Sr. Lombard, and I thought I would relate a little of my own experience, hoping I might encourage that Sister, and others similarly afflicted. Last fall our little boy, aged three years, was very sick with dysentery. His flesh had wasted away, and he was so weak he could neither stand nor go. We obtained medical aid, but after a week's trial we became convinced the medicine injured him. We then thought that unless God interposed our dear boy must die. We then, believing with all our hearts that there is a God in Israel who can yet hear the prayer of faith, as directed in his word, sent for a brother who has the gift of healing, and who we believe is one of God's elders, who came, and according to the rule laid hands upon him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord, and from that very hour he began to amend. We gave him no more medicine. He is now a healthy boy. Praise be to Him who is still able to heal all manner of diseases! But this is not the only case to which I can bear witness. I took cold this winter and was threatened with fever. My friends were the more alarmed as there had been several cases of fever in our neighborhood through the fall and winter which had proved fatal. I had no doctor, as I have not much confidence in the means used by the practitioners of the present day. But it happened, and it seemed as though the Lord so ordered it, that that same brother came to our house and tarried through the night. In the morning the Lord heard prayer in my behalf, and I was made whole from that very hour.

These are but two cases out of the many I could bring, if required, the truth of which can be fully substantiated. I would say to that Sister, Read the word of God carefully, and see if you can find it there intimated that the gifts were ever to be taken from the church. That the church as a body lost them, cannot be denied; but all the way down through the gospel dispensation, there have been solitary cases, proving that the faith has not been entirely lost; and these instances have been outside of the church of Rome, and ever, as now, among a people who are determined to know nothing save Jesus Christ and him crucified And now as we are drawing near the end of man's probationary state, when the faith that teaches the speedy establishment of God's everlasting kingdom has become a reproach; when the ministers of the second house of Israel are teaching tradition instead of truth, and the people receive it in preference to the plain declaration of scripture; when true and living faith is as scarce among them as it was with the first house; it seems to me the gifts are as necessary here, to show the world where the true believers are, as any time since the gospel has been preached. And, although the Spiritualists may do the same works, it is by the power that Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, and not by faith in the word of God.

Farmington, N. H.

From J. McKee.

Bro. Grant:—As I look over the pages of the Crisis, and peruse the epistles from the brethren and sisters scattered abroad, they sometimes cheer me, then again I am led to shed the sympathizing tear with those who, like myself, are wading through the deep waters of affliction. But, thanks to Him who doeth all things well, we are not left disconsolate, for we read from his precious word, that all things work for good to them who love him. There are many blessed promises made to us; and how consoling is the thought, that we are nearing the haven of eternal rest, where we ne'er shall have to part with those we love, nor see the cold hand of death laid upon them and they torn from our embrace! neither shall we there have to watch o'er the couch and dread the old enemy, for he will have to yield up those whom he has slain. Glorious thought! O! how I long to see the day when the ransomed host shall shout victory over their last foe. The thought often occurs to me, Shall I be there? My prayer is that we may be kept spotless and blameless until the Life-giver returns to reward his faithful children, and release us from all our griefs and woes.

Many times I am cheered by reading from the Crisis that sinners are still flocking to the blood-stained banner of Prince Emanuel, instead of enlisting to imbrue their hands in the blood of their fellow creatures. Surely we are living in perilous times; and we who profess to be looking for the return of the Nobleman should be living epistles, laboring zealously for the salvation of perishing mortals, instead of contending with and devouring each other.

The cause has suffered much in this vicinity from those pretending to be ministers of the gospel, but proved to be wolves in sheep's clothing, biting and devouring. I have tried, to the best of my ability, to spread the glorious present truths, by circulating books and tracts from the Tract Fund, and some have been benefitted by those little missionaries. We should be very careful as a people who we endorse, and see to it that they are well recommended from the conference, or from the church of which they are members. This would save a great deal of trouble and anxiety for those who love the truth.

Iowa.

From Sr. S. E. Teeple.

Bro. Grant:—I enclose $— for the continuance of the Crisis, and feel it is money laid out in a good cause, and trust the paper will ever be sustained till the time comes when there shall be no need of a paper nor press. O Lord, hasten the time! is my prayer, when the saints may be gathered. Once I could meet with the children, and exhort, sing and pray with them, and enjoy it as well as any one; but now if I meet (unless once in a great while) it must be with the different churches. To go with them I cannot; to be content and stay at home, is not obeying the command of Paul; and thus I feel sometimes almost like murmuring; but I know deliverance will be given to the saints in a little from this, and I mean among them to be found. But the trials and afflictions which the saints of God have to pass through! They should and do have a tendency to wean us from the world and make us more like our Lord. May we one and all keep the meek and quiet spirit, watch and pray much, for what is there not to contend with? Truly these are perilous times.

"Let me among the saints be found,
Whene'er th' archangel's trump shall sound,
To see thy smiling face!"

And then and not till then shall I be satisfied. Many of you, dear children, with whom I have enjoyed precious seasons in the past, I expect to meet no more on the shores of time; but I mean to live so as to meet you

"Where no tears shall ever fall,
Nor heart be sad,
Where the glory is for all,
And all are glad."

Roxbury, Ct.

From B. P. Manning.

Brn. Grant and Morgan:—The Lord is very good to his children in N. H., and is converting sinners in spite of the enemy. In Orange there have been some eight converted and baptized. Bro. J. G. Hook, of Concord, has been there laboring with the people, and God has blessed his labors. I was there one week with them, and truth did triumph over error. I received a letter from a brother yesterday from East Canaan, stating that the people had shut them out of the school-house. I told them when there I thought they would do so if they preached the truth to them; so you see the enemy is not dead yet. He is doing up his last work. O how I sigh for home! I love the coming of my blessed Lord better than ever.

Dear brethren, God and myself only know the pain and suffering that I have to bear, but it is all right. God will not suffer any of his dear children to be afflicted more than is for their good. This is a world of suffering and death; but the time is very near when death, and he that had the power of death, which is the devil, will be destroyed. How many of the dear saints have been laid in the grave within a few years! But they will come again from the land of the enemy. While I was reading Sr. Howell's letter in the Crisis, I could say from my heart, Glory to God! Bro. John will soon come up from his sleeping place, and I, if faithful to God a little longer, shall shake hands with him on the other shore. Brethren and sisters, be faithful to God, and strive to be holy, for without holiness no man shall see the Lord. Let us seek meekness. "Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth." Brethren, I desire your prayers, that God may rebuke this disease, and give me strength to labor.

Goffstown, May 17th, '62.

From Sr. S. P. Green.

Bro. Grant:—You do not know how destitute the people of this vicinity are of the truth. Spiritualism, sensualism, and all sorts of wickedness prevail above religion. Nearly all are contented with their state of destitution. Professors are sleeping on the verge of ruin. Backsliders have gone back, back, almost to the worst forms of evil and sinfulness. Alas! they are in a lost condition indeed, unless the Holy Spirit of God interposes with power immediately. There are too many like the "Pharisees, hypocrites!" in the days of Christ. They will not go in themselves, nor suffer those that would to enter in. I think in my soul there are some and probably many that would enter the fold of Christ, if stumbling blocks were out of the way: but the way before poor sinners! what will become of them? Young and old, high and low, are in the broad way to destruction.

I am striving through the grace of God to enter "by the door" into the sheepfold. I am almost disheartened much of the time. I have to meet much opposition, and stem the tide all alone. But through the dim eye of faith I am led to behold the land of the free and the good. Possibly I may have an entrance into the everlasting kingdom, and very likely to be so if I am faithful and endure firmly unto the end. But Satan is trying, and has been for more than six years, to hinder me from going forward and looking up to Jesus and feeling my acceptance of Him. This life hath an enormous load for a poor, weak mortal like me to carry along. My spiritual weakness has been caused by an overpowering physical weakness. I do feel encouraged of late that my health will be improved to such an extent that my family, my poor, hard-laboring husband will be benefited, yea, blest temporally as well as spiritually. I have been highly favored of God all the way through these lone years of trials and temptations, of sickness and pain, in that he has given me the World's Crisis to read. I have lent it to friends and neighbors; I have given my good little messengers away as freely as they have been sent to me. I am careful about letting any have them to read that will let them be destroyed or hurt. I hope they will be printed as long as time lasts. Many would otherwise be destitute of the "meat in due season." May any of God's righteous servants pray for me, that I may be made strong, physically as well as spiritually, and be enabled to work for the Lord in earnest. If the Lord wills, will Bro. Grant come to Plymouth?

Plymouth, March 10, '62.

Sabbath Schools.

Bro. Grant:—This enterprise is one which commends itself to every christian. The training of the young is a duty which was made imperative by the Jewish laws. "Thou shalt diligently teach them to thy children, when thou liest down and when thou risest up, and when thou walkest by the way," etc. One may infer from this that whenever they were in company with children they were required to instruct them in the statutes and judgments of Jehovah, and this early training is undoubtedly one prominent reason why the Jews have maintained their identity so long.

We have also a command equally binding from our Savior. "Feed my lambs," said he to Peter, and in the days of his flesh he took them in his arms and blessed them; and if we would be his followers, and obey his commands, we must do likewise. That the Adventists have been remiss in Sabbath school instruction is apparent. There are many causes that have operated to bring about this state of things. 1. The preaching of the time of the Lord's coming called the attention of multitudes from this, and every thing else but the one idea of the Lord's speedy coming. 2. There has in many places been so much discord among brethren, that it was impossible for them to work in harmony in any branch of christian duty; different views of Scripture doctrine have caused more trouble in the Advent church than all the opposition from outward opposers.

I think we might take a lesson of wisdom in this respect from the American Sunday School Union, which is composed of five different denominations, yet the most perfect harmony has characterized their movements from the commencement of this organization, and great have been the results of their labor. To these missionaries many churches in the west and other parts of the country owe their existence. But to return to ourselves, should we not make a wise improvement of past experience, and gird on the armor anew in behalf of the little ones, and now, while there is a good prospect of success, put in the sickle and gather the harvest, before the coming storm sweeps over us, and they are left out of the fold to perish?

We cannot close our eyes to the sure word of prophecy which says that in the last days perilous time shall come, and the greater the peril the more caution is necessary. There will in my opinion be another time preached amongst us before the Lord comes, and shall we not be so thoroughly organized and "occupying," that in the true time the Lord will say to us, "Well done." And what more commendable duty could we be found engaged in than feeding the lambs of the flock?

Much more might be said upon this subject, but as I believe in short communications as well as short prayers, I will give place for others. I will however simply suggest that, as we have no Sabbath school paper of a denominational character, one column of the Crisis continue to be devoted especially to this cause, until there is a children's paper published amongst us.

Through Death to Life.

I.

Have you heard of the tale of the Aloe plant,
Away in the sunny clime,
By humble growth of a hundred years,
It reaches its blooming time;
And then a wondrous bud at its crown
Bursts into a thousand flowers;
This floral green, in its beauty seen,
Is the pride of the tropical bowers,
But the plant to the flower is a sacrifice,
For it blooms but once, and in blooming dies?

II.

Have you further heard of this Aloe plant,
That grows in the sunny clime,
How every one of its thousand flowers,
As they fall in the blooming time,
Is an infant tree that fastens its roots
In the place where they fall to the ground,
And fast as they drop from the dying stem,
Grow lively and lovely around?
By dying it liveth a thousandfold,
In the young that springs from the death of the old.

III.

Have you heard the tale of the Pelican,
The Arab's Gimel El Bahr!
That lives in the African solitudes,
Where the birds that live lonely are?
Have you heard how it loves its tender young,
And toils and cares for their good?
It brings them water from fountains afar,
And fishes the sea for their food;
In famine it feeds them, what love can devise!
The blood of its bosom, and feeding them dies.

IV.

Have you heard the tale they tell of the Swan,
The snow-white bird of the lake?
It noiselessly floats on the silvery wave,
It silently sits on the break—
For it saves its song till the close of life,
And then in the calm still even,
'Mid the golden rays of the setting sun,
It sings as it soars to heaven.
And the blessed notes fall back from the skies,
'Tis its only song, for in singing it dies.

V.

You have heard these tales, shall I tell you one,
A greater and better than all—
Have you heard of Him whom the heavens adore,
And before whom the hosts of them fall?
How he left his choirs and anthems above,
For earth in its wailings and woes,
To suffer the shame and pain of the cross,
And die for the life of his foes?
O Prince of the noble! O Savior Divine!
What sorrow or sacrifice equal to thine?

VI.

Have you heard of this tale—the best of them all,
The tale of the Holy and True?
He dies—but his life now in untold souls,
Springs up in the world anew—
His seed prevails, and is filling the earth,
As the stars fill the sky above—
He taught us to give up the love of life,
For the sake of the life of love—
His death is our life—his life is our gain,
The joy for the tear, the peace for the pain.

VII.

Now hear these tales, ye weary and worn,
Who for others do give up your all,
Our Savior has told us the seed that would grow,
Into earth's dark bosom must fall—
And pass from the sight and die away,
And then will the fruit appear—
The grain that seems lost in the earth below,
Will return manifold in the ear.
By death comes life—by life comes gain,
The joy for the tear—the peace for the pain.

For the Crisis.

"It takes away the inducement to Repentance."

So say modern theologians concerning the doctrine of "destruction"—derisively called "annihilation." Yes; it takes away the spurious inducement to repentance, but leaves the genuine inducement. It takes away the spell of fear, which is but a sinister motive, and unacceptable in the sight of God. Thousands have enlisted in the cause of religion through the influence of fear merely,—to escape apparent impending danger,—and when the fear subsides, and the danger no longer stares them in the face, they are no longer in the cause. The only propelling motive that moved them, having become extinct, they of course stop: and thus the world is filled with so-called backsliders, and religion is consequently brought into serious disrepute. Men who are operated upon by this motive are sincere, but they are moved by an incorrect principle. Permit me to illustrate it. Yonder profane sailor discovers a black cloud spreading itself over the sky; he hears the deafening thunders roar, and sees the vivid lightnings flash athwart the heavens; he hears the wind fiercely howl, and sees the waves roll mountains high: fear takes possession of his heart, and depicts to him a watery grave; and under this spell of fear he falls upon his knees, and weeps before God, pleading for mercy. Is he sincere? Yes; just as deeply sincere as that sinner upon the anxious seat. But the storm passes, and in two hours he is cursing God again! The fact is, he was moved by the wrong motive. Again: a few years ago, a man attempted to cross the Connecticut river, in the Spring of the year, just at night, when a cake of ice broke loose from its fellows, carrying him down-stream. He loudly called for help, but no ear could hear. Darkness enveloped him. In this condition the thoughts of a watery grave danced through his excited brain. Giving way to fear, he knelt upon the cake of ice and prayed fervently, and wept tears of sincerity. He repented with his whole heart. Soon the cake of ice touched the shore. Seeing his chance of escape he bounded on to the land, swung his hat, and exclaimed, "Go to hell and be damned." The danger had passed, and the propelling motive was gone. How much is such a motive worth? God is represented, by modern theology, as standing over the sinner with a great hell-whip, saying, If you do not serve me, I will whip you forever. To get rid of the whipping they serve him. If this is a correct motive, hell is an indispensable prerequisite to salvation.

W. Sheldon.

A man may suffer without sinning; but a man cannot sin without suffering.

For the Crisis.

Immorality.

That the holy Scriptures, and more especially the Decalogue, furnish the only sure basis for the superstructure of right moral character, we have the concurrent testimony of the wise and good in all ages. That the morality of the present age, in all its principles and features, has not its foundation upon this rock, is most revoltingly evident. One needs but to listen to the language of the children during their play hours, to hear from lips comparatively infantile, such horrid blasphemies and disgusting obscenities as are enough to shock the ear and sicken the heart. Would you obtain authentic testimony of the breach of the eighth commandment, as well as the statute law, you have only to ask the farmer what becomes of the annual produce of yonder excellent fruit-trees, and he will tell you, that after all his expense, labor and care in the culture of his trees, and circumspection in regard to their fruit, he is unable to gather from them but a very little; for the rascally boys depredate his enclosures, and purloin his fruits with impunity, since the action of the law has become almost a dead letter in such cases —the damages recovered being little if any more than enough to pay the costs of prosecution. Thus, the farmer may spend much, may labor long and sedulously, while the fruits of his labor receive no adequate protection from the depredations of the immoral and perverse youth, found more or less in every community. Now this is no fancy sketch; we would speak from personal knowledge, and affirm that whereof we have abundant proof.

There seems to be almost a total want of regard for the rights of private property among the young in many communities, as well as a reckless abuse of what is more public. In Prussia, where the Bible stands at the head of every prescribed list of text books for general instruction, we are told fruit trees may stand by the way-side abounding with fruit, unmolested; such being the sacred regard of the children for the rights of the owners, that in no case would they touch of the fruit without consent. But no more, lest we transcend the limits of a short article.

The Atheism of "Orthodoxy."

We clip the following from the Christian Ambassador. It is sound and logical reasoning, and brands notorious "orthodoxy" with atheism:

'It is serious matter to charge falsely against another's faith. Orthodoxy claims to be the true or right faith. If so, to charge it with Atheism would be among the highest moral crimes. If its claims are pretentious and false, and it places its god in the place of the true God, and if its god cannot be the true God, then to call it "Orthodoxy" is to place Atheism in place of Theism. With all its pomp and pretension, with all its clamor and denunciation, I am willing to approach its awful presence and make good my charge.

Can there be an infinite God, if Orthodoxy be true? I take the negative. Impossible! I hope to make it so plain to any mind that an orthodox himself cannot admit his premises and deny my conclusion. Orthodoxy says "there is one God consisting of three distinct persons—the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, and these three are one." Deny the Trinity, and orthodoxy cries out "Atheism." Such is the issue made by orthodoxy. On this issue, then, we join. Let there be no dodging, special pleading, nor backing down. Walk to the issue and stand or fall by it, as the truth may be.

The word "person," from the Latin persona, means sounding forth, or one who speaks,—the whole of an individuality—mental and vocal power entire. Anything more or less would not be a person. An infinite being, therefore, by impossibility cannot consist of three persons. If Orthodoxy be true the Father is an infinite being, and the Holy Ghost an infinite being also. Now, if God the Father be an infinite being, nothing can be added to him, for he is infinite already, nothing can be taken from him, for infinity cannot be divided; an infinite person cannot be increased or diminished, else he is not infinite. If the Father be infinite, and the Son be added, what is added is something or nothing. If something, then the Father was not and is not infinite of himself. If not infinite, then he is not God. If he be infinite and the Son be added, he can add nothing, and therefore must be nothing. If he be nothing, then one part of God is nothing. If one part be nothing, and God be infinite, then every part of God is nothing; for God is the same infinity. If the Holy Ghost be added, he also, must be nothing. If two persons or parts of God be nothing, and three persons or parts are necessary to make God, then there is no God. If two parts of anything be nothing, all must be nothing, for anything that is, is something, therefore there is no God. If the Father be not infinite, then add what you can, he cannot be God. The Son and Holy Ghost must be added, therefore when added, cannot be God. If the Father cannot be God, and it is impossible if orthodoxy be true, and if the Son and Holy Ghost are not God without the Father, then Father, Son and Holy Ghost are no God. If Orthodoxy be true, then there is no God.

I defy a denial of the conclusion, without an impeachment of the premises. An impeachment of the premises is proof perfect that the conclusion is true. If Orthodoxy be true there can be no God. If there can be no God, then God does not exist of necessity; for what is of necessity must be infinitely the same. What is infinitely the same cannot be infinitely Father, Son, and Holy Ghost—for if infinitely one person, he could not be infinitely three persons. It is impossible. Am I told, "Oh, it is a mystery," I answer, it is impossible, and what is impossible cannot be. No logic, no reasoning, no pretence can make it possible. But why advert to mystery? If the thing be proven, there is an end. If not proven, mystery cannot prove it.

But the Trinitarian, recovering, faintly ejaculates, "they are not three in essence, but in office." Then if but one in essence and three in office, then an office makes a person and not the essence. If an office make a person, then an hundred offices would make an hundred persons, and yet the person the same office or no office. If in office or in person then, as far as his nature is concerned, God cannot be three, there can be but one infinite God of one person. If orthodoxy then be true, there is and can be no God.

Reading the Bible.

Read your Bible slowly. Take time, even if you have but little time. A great mathematician once said, if his life depended upon solving a problem in two minutes, he would spend one of the two in deciding how to do it. So in reading the Scriptures; if you are pressed for time, then spend the precious moments on a portion of a chapter. When you feel that the mind and heart begin to drink in the sentiment, even of a single verse, then stop and drain the heavenly chalice, because the Divine Spirit is filling thy cup. It is a true, solemn and interesting thought, that we are to wait, to linger, to tarry for the blessing to come from the world before us.

To search the Scriptures with the clear, unmoted eye of meditation, secures treasures of knowledge known only to him who thus cooly, piously and philosophically studies the Word of God.

Let any man give us a reason why, when the Scriptures are read so much, memory retains so little, that quotations are so blundering and incorrect, if the reason is not found in the fact of hasty reading of the Word of God. There, as elsewhere, man must reap as he sows.—N. Y. Obs.

High-sounding Words.

To those who seek for high-sounding words, preferring words of Latin derivation to old-fashioned, plain, strong Saxon, the writer would recommend the perusal of the following:

Latinized version of the Twenty-third Psalm.

1. Deity is my pastor; I shall not be indigent.

2. He causeth me to recumb in the verdant lawns; he inducteth me by the unrippled liquidities.

3. He reinstalleth my spirit; he conducteth me in avenues of rectitude for the celebrity of his appellations.

4. Indubitably though I perambulate the umbriferous glens of the sepulchral dormitory, I will not be purturbed by any appalling catastrophe; thy wand and thy crook insinuate delectation.

5. Thou positest a refection before me in the face of inimical scrutation; thou perfumest my locks with odoriferous unguents; my chalice exuberates.

6. Unquestionably, benignity and commiseration shall continue all the dinturnity of my vitality, and I will eternalize my habitation in the metropolis of the Universe.—Exchange.

Transplanting in the Night.—A friend, in whose powers of observation we have confidence, and who is an exact experimenter, informs us that last spring and summer he made the following experiments: He transplanted ten cherry-trees while in blossom, commencing at four o'clock in the afternoon, and transplanting one each hour, until one in the morning. Those transplanted during daylight, shed their blossoms, producing little or no fruit, while those planted during the darker portions maintained their condition fully. He did the same with ten dwarf pear trees, after the fruit was one-third grown. Those transplanted during the night perfected their crop, and showed no injury from having been removed. With each of these trees he removed some earth with the roots. We are well aware that when plants are accidentally frozen in green-houses, it is customary to render the house dark before applying cold water to thaw them, and that when this is not observed they are injured, while, if entire darkness be secured during the operation, many of them are saved. But the experiment of our friend seems to have but little analogy to this fact, and it is entirely new to us.—Working Farmer.

Hygiene.

Dr. Hurd's Cook-book.

In our travels we find many who are being satisfied that a large proportion of the sickness of mankind is produced by improper diet, and who wish to adopt a more simple, cheap, and healthy mode of living. They hardly know how to begin, and wish they could obtain some work showing them how to select and prepare food which is strictly healthy. To all such we would say that we have a small cook-book, carefully prepared by Dr. W. F. Hurd, an eminent physician at "Our Home,' —Dr. Jackson's Water Cure in Dansville, N. Y.,—which gives all necessary directions for preparing food in harmony with the laws of life; describing the different varieties used in that justly celebrated hygenic institution.

Any who wish this cook-book, can obtain it by sending to the Crisis Office.—Price six cents, postage one cent.—G.

Wheat and Oat Meal.

We are glad to learn that several families in and about Boston are beginning to learn the worth of Graham and oat meal. We would say to them that they can get a very fine quality of these healthy and cheap articles of diet, at the store of S. G. Bowdlear and Co., Nos. 192 and 194 State St., Boston. At the same place they will find nice cracked wheat, hominy, samp, kiln-dried corn meal, white corn flour, oat flour, bolted Indian meal, Hecker's farina, macaroni, corn starch, rye flour, and pearl barley.—G.

Cooking and Eating.

EVEN TO SURFEITING AND GLUTTONY!

Wicked? Certainly it is, very wicked. It's robbery, high-handed, out-stretched, to spend so much time, as many do, in cooking and eating, to gratify a luxurious, fastidious appetite. It's a sin, a very great sin, a wicked waste of time and money, a consuming God's bounty on lust, that ought to be expended in doing good, in relieving the poor, healing the sick, raising the dead, casting out devils. Some church-members spend one-half their time, at least, in gratifying a dainty palate. Time is wasted—heaven's bounties. Health is sacrificed—a pure conscience. Every moment of time, every farthing of God's money, that can possibly be redeemed by rigid self-denial, by strict, uniformly temperate habits, should be redeemed for purposes of benevolence, for deeds of charity and mercy. Away with this perpetual kitchen drudgery, these richly, luxuriously spread tables; away with them! Beware, ye time-killers, ye luxurious gormandizers, ye consumers of God's bounty on lust, the gratification of a depraved, carnal appetite. Beware, take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting, and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so the day of retribution come upon you unawares. Watch, watch, for ye know not the day, nor the hour when your Lord cometh. Be temperate in all things, redeem the time, grasp every fleeting moment for good. Keep your bodies under, bring them into subjection; fly on wings of love, mercy, and truth.

"Voluptuous man! sated with nature's boons,
With dishes tortured from their native taste
And mad variety, to spur beyond
Its wiser will the jaded appetite!
Is this for pleasure? Learn a juster time,
And know that true temperance is luxury."

D. F. Newton.

Impure Water.—Set a pitcher of water in a room, and in a few hours it will have absorbed nearly all the impure gases in the room, the atmosphere thus becoming purer, while the water is rendered utterly filthy. The colder the water, the greater is its capacity to absorb and contain these gases. At ordinary temperature, it will absorb a pint of carbonic acid gas and a large quantity of ammonia. This capacity is nearly doubled by reducing the water nearly to the freezing point. Hence water kept in a room for a while, soon becomes unfit for use. For the same reason the water in a pump should always be pumped out in the morning before any is used. Impure water is more injurious than impure air.

Apples as an article of Food.—A raw, mellow apple, says Hall's Journal of Health, is digested in an hour and a half, while boiled cabbage requires five hours. The most healthful desert which can be placed on the table is a baked apple. If taken freely at breakfast, with coarse bread and butter, without meat or flesh of any kind, it has an admirable effect on the general system, often removing acidities, and cooling off febrile conditions, more effectually than the most approved medicine. The plenteous crop should make the apple cheap.

Corn Meal.—In a letter just at hand from Mrs. O'Brien, who received the first premium for corn bread, she says: "If you take corn meal when purchased at the market or grocery store, and put it in a pan and leave it in a warm stove oven over night, it will keep better, will acquire a better taste, and will rise and bake better. The little trouble to do this will be amply repaid. . . . I do not like scalding meal before using, as it tends to make it clammy, and can do little if any good; drying the meal is safer and better."—Agriculturist.

To Stop Bleeding.—A correspondent of the American Agriculturist writes that bleeding from a wound on a man or beast may be stopped by a mixture of wheat flour and common salt, in two parts, bound on with a cloth. If the bleeding be profuse, use a large quantiy, say from one to three pints. It may be left on for hours, or even days, if necessary.

☞ For an hour preceding bed-time, dismiss every engrossing subject from the mind, and let it be employed about something soothing and enlivening.

Terms of Subscription, Payable in Advance.

A single copy one year.........................$2.00
A single copy six months.........................1.00
A single copy three months..........................50
Five copies to one address for six months.......4.50
Ten copies to one address for six months.........8.00
Twenty copies to one address for six months.....[illegible]
Thirty copies to one address for six months.....[illegible]

These terms, allowing a subscription of 50 cents for three months, place the paper within reach of all who are able to pay any thing. The reduction in price, where five or more papers are sent to one address, enables subscribers, by combining, to receive a large number at reduced rates; thus supplying the poor in their neighborhood.

We propose that those who have ability, when sending their own subscriptions, also send what they are willing to give to aid in circulating the Crisis among the poor, who we have always with us.

Postage on the Crisis when prepaid, quarterly, or yearly, at the office where it is received, is 13 cts. a year in any part of Massachusetts, and 26 cts. to any other part of the United States.

Papers for subscribers in Canada and the British Provinces must be prepaid in Boston, 26 cents per year, in addition to the subscription price. Hence one dollar will pay for 22 papers, or $2.25 for one year.

Rules for Correspondents.

Over all matters not intended for publication write Private.

Over all business matters, write Business.

Over all articles for the paper, write For the Crisis.

All articles should be accompanied by the writer's name, for the Editors' information, even if it is not published.

When the names of new subscribers are sent, please say they are new, and it will save us much labor.

Private Letters. Those wishing to address the Editor on matters not connected with the office, will please write the word Private on the outside of the envelope.

Please put the business matters and appointments on a piece of paper separate from other communications.

All persons writing to the office should give distinctly and plainly the Post Office, County and State at which they wish to be addressed; and all orders, subscriptions, communications and remittances should be [illegible] Miles Grant, Boston, Mass.

Cheer Up.

Wild winds' foaming billows
All around may play;
Though we may be filled with sorrow,
And gloomy is the way;
Cheer up, ye weary saint,
The storm will soon be o'er;
Our anchor shall be safely cast
On Canaan's happy shore.
CHORUS.—For Jesus is coming soon
To take his loved ones home;
Cheer up, ye weary saints,
For he will surely come.

Though long the vision tarry,
Yet patiently we'll wait;
And at the appointed time
It will surely speak.
It will speak, then do not fear
God's word, it never fails;
Signs proclaim Messiah near,
Behold, how sin prevails.
CHORUS.—But Jesus is coming soon,
And then no more we'll roam;
Cheer up, ye weary saint,
We are almost home.

Covetousness.

"And he said unto them, take heed, and beware of covetousness."—LUKE 12: 15.

(Concluded.)

The benevolence of the disciples of Christ—those who are disciples indeed—was typified by the distribution of the manna among the children of Israel in the wilderness. (See 2 Cor. 8: 15.) And this benevolence, together with the righteousness and christian graces which should accrue to the benevolent from benevolent acts, was sung in prophetic strain by Israel's inspired songster. (See 2 Cor. 9: 9, and Ps. 112.) By practical benevolence, subjection to the gospel of Christ is professed, while the partakers of the benefits of such benevolence glorify God on that account, and invoke his blessing for their benefactors. (See 2 Cor. 9: 13, 14.) Read chaps. 8 and 9 entire.

O ye covetous professors of christianity! What does the Almighty Lord require of you in this matter? "Is it not to deal thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poor that are cast out into thy house? when thou seest the naked that thou cover him; and that thou hide not thyself from thine own flesh?" Does not Christ command you to "love the Lord thy God with all thy heart"? "But whoso hath this world's goods, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" Christ once said to a certain young man, "If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven." Again it is written, "He that giveth to the poor, lendeth to the Lord." Thus we understand how to lay up treasure in heaven. Had the "young man" given his estate to the poor, it would have been lent to the Lord; and thus have been transferred from earth to heaven; and in due time, would have been returned to him with greater interest than mortal flesh is able to pay. O ye covetous! you need not fear to lend Him who is the sole owner of the universe a little of your clothing for the poor of his flock! He will never become bankrupt! He will never borrow beyond his ability to restore "a hundred fold now in this time, with persecution, and in the world to come life everlasting." "But what doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith, and have not works? Can faith save him? If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled, notwithstanding thou givest them not those things which are needful for the body; what doth it profit?" "And the people asked him, (John,) saying, What shall we do, then? He answereth and saith unto him, He that hath two coats, let him impart to him that hath none; and he that hath meat, let him do likewise."

In view of this subject, let no one say, "None need to be poor; all have the same advantages to acquire wealth which I possess." But suppose this assertion true. Will you recompense the poor for being so by withholding from them what God peremptorily commands you to bestow on them? Again. Let no one say, (as has been said,) "If one lacks the comforts of life, it is sure evidence that, in some way, he is not walking uprightly; for God has promised that he will withhold no good thing from him that walketh uprightly." It may be, in some instances, a good thing for the upright to suffer the lack of the comforts of life. We know, in fact, that thousands and tens of thousands have thus suffered. Take Job for one example. Look at him—"a perfect and an upright man"—stripped for a time of his worldly possessions. Was it a good thing for Job to suffer thus? Certainly it was. It gave him wisdom, and an experience in regard to the dealings of God with his people, which he could not otherwise have attained. And James tells the upright of the last days, to take Job for an example of suffering and patience. And Christ declares that, in the day of judgment, he will own as his brethren those who have suffered both hunger and nakedness. And I now repeat what I have previously affirmed, viz., that God as much designed that some men should be poor in regard to the things of this world, as that men should exist subsequently to "the fall." Remember that "the Lord maketh poor, and maketh rich." Remember also, that when enjoining on the people of the Old Covenant the duty of benevolence, the Lord assured them that the poor should never cease out of the land. And let it not be forgotten, that Christ positively affirmed to his church, that they should always have the poor with them. Opportunities for the people of God to practice benevolence never have been, nor never will be, till time shall be no more, wanting. But why this introduction and perpetuation of poverty in the church of God? I answer, it is the only means by which certain characteristics in either class, the rich or the poor, can be developed. The Lord devises means to try his professed people, to know what is in their hearts, and to see whether they will obey him or not. (See Deut. 8: 2; Ex. 16: 4; and 2 Chron. 32: 31.)

God designs that his people shall feel their dependence on him, and trust in him for every blessing they need, whether of a spiritual or temporal nature. But if it were the common lot of man to have in possession the riches of this world, none could ever know how to trust in God for the blessings of this life. (In fact, did all men possess an abundance of this world's goods, all men would be estranged from the God of the universe.) But now, since there are both rich and poor, both classes may easily learn to trust in God, if they will. How the poor may learn to trust in God, needs no comment. If the rich, acting from principles of love to God, disperse abroad, by way of supplying the wants of the poor, they do so trusting that God will replenish their stores, so that they themselves will lack no good thing. Nay, more. They will trust in God that he will supply all their needs, even though, by giving succor to the poor, Heaven receives all their treasure.

Again. God requires his people to imitate him in all his moral attributes. And those who profess thus to imitate him have to be tried, in every particular, that those graces may be either perfected in those who profess them, or that they may be proved not to be in the possession of them. And as benevolence is one of God's moral attributes, his people must be benevolent, in order that they may be imitators of him; and the only means by which this property can be tested, is, by administering to the necessities of the poor. Hence, if there were no poor in the land, this noble, this life-sustaining virtue could not be cultivated. "But," says one, "if all possessed a competency of this world's goods, there would be no necessity, no use for the attribute of benevolence." But were it not for the benevolence of God, none could exist, even in this world. The benevolence of God is the spring and source of all our temporal as well as spiritual blessings. Had not God been a benevolent being, man could never have been redeemed from death. And hence, as God is benevolent, and as his people must, in a moral sense, be like him, they must be practically benevolent. Again. Christ in his humiliation and death displayed the most magnific benevolence for fallen humanity. By his benevolence manifested in his obedience "unto death," he has purchased redemption from the Adamic penalty for the human family, and eternal life for all who believe and obey him. And if we would have the spirit of Christ, without which we are none of his, we must, like him, by practical demonstration, evince that we possess the spirit of benevolence.

And now, O ye covetous professors of christianity! you may fill your coffers with gold and silver, and let it canker; you may fill your wardrobes with garments, and let the moths eat them; you may yet, for a little while, heap together treasures for the last days; you may live in pleasure on the earth, and be wanton; you may nourish your hearts, as in the day of slaughter; and when you see the Son of God coming in the clouds of heaven, clothed with invincible power,—arrayed in glorious robes of royalty,—then you may weep and howl for the miseries that shall speedily come upon you. Your corrupted wishes, your cankered gold and silver, and your moth-eaten garments, with which you might have relieved the wants and the distresses of many a poor disciple of Christ, and have caused them to render thanksgiving and praise to God,—and by which you might also have secured to yourselves passports into the realms of endless bliss,—will be swift witnesses against you, when you are called to give an account of the manner in which you have treated the Savior, his disciples, and his cause. "Woe unto you, rich! for ye have received your consolation." This world has been your god;—you have served it with all the energy of your being;—you have honored, worshiped, been glad and rejoiced in it;—you have received, as you have passed along, all the reward your god could bestow;—and now you must reap the bitter fruit of your doings.

But "hearken, my beloved brethren. Hath not God chosen the poor of this world rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him?" Yea. The Master has said, "Blessed are ye poor; for yours is the kingdom of heaven." He knows your "works," your "tribulation and poverty," and yet pronounces you "rich," and promises to the faithful poor a "crown of glory that fadeth not away," which promise is soon to be fulfilled, when the Chief Shepherd shall appear.

My Journal.

VISIT TO CANADA WEST.

Friday, March 14. Bro. A. Gray took me, with Mrs. Gray and others, in his carriage to St. Catherine's, C. W., where we called upon his friends and were refreshed; after which I took the cars for Hamilton, where I received cordial greetings from Elder F. G. Brown and family, who are pleasantly settled here with the Baptist church. The evening was very stormy, so that we had no meeting, and I had to leave for my next appointment, in London, the next day. But it is my intention to visit Hamilton again, and preach the gospel of the kingdom. This is my third visit to this Province. The first was with Father Miller, to Toronto, in 1844; the second to Wellington Square and Hamilton some years ago. I now enter the Province again with a view to make a more extensive tour, and visit cities and towns, as the door may open to preach "the gospel of the kingdom." I came by the invitation of Adventists who are looking for the blessed hope, who desired to hear again on the time, and the signs indicative of the Lord's coming. I shall survey this field and see what the Lord has for me to do, and faithfully perform my duty. I know not what is before me, but trust to Him who has promised to be with his people to the end.

Saturday, March 15. Took my leave of Bro. Brown and his family, and left in the cars for London. The storm of rain, hail and snow still continues. The trees are loaded with ice, and many of them are falling, and others are shorn of their branches by the weight of the ice. Everything is in wintry dress. Arrived in London at 6 P. M. Bro. J. P. Simpson, of Belmont, met and took me to the residence of the Hon. S. Morrill, by his special request, where I was very cordially received. Bro. M. is a member of the Wesleyan Society, but has been an Adventist in faith since 1842, and a subscriber to the Herald.

Sabbath, March 16. Rose refreshed after a good night's sleep. Preached this morning in the Wesleyan church, lately seceded from the main body, on account of having a minister forced upon them whom they did not want. They worship in the M. E. chapel, as the Episcopal Methodists have run out, and the chapel was vacant. The Episcopal minister of the district at present is employed to preach for them a part of the time. The pulpit was to be occupied by a local preacher this A. M., who invited me, by Bro. Morrill's suggestion, to preach the morning sermon. The audience was good, and I had a good hearing on the subject of entire consecration, from Romans seventh and eighth. It was well received by most, but the views on eating and drinking to the glory of God, together with the way to live generally, was rather severe on the unscriptural habits of some, who were a little stirred up. I hope, however, for good results. There is too much form, without the power, and too much conformity to the world among the Wesleyans generally. They need another Wesley to stir them up on holy living and entire consecration.

At the close of this service Bro. Simpson took me in his sleigh eleven miles, to Westminster, to attend the funeral of a little son of his brother, Lewis Simpson. The house was crowded with people of all denominations. I spoke on the resurrection of the righteous dead, at the coming of Christ, and did not attempt to comfort the parents and friends of the deceased by teaching them that the child had gone to heaven, and was glorified and rewarded; but that the body had gone to the dust, and the spirit to God who gave it, and the reward and glorification would come "at the resurrection of the just." I found that this doctrine did not suit the Spiritualists, who say that the moment we die the soul goes immediately to heaven. And so I was set down as a "dead sleeper," as they are called here. And yet I preached only the teaching of Christ and the Apostles on the state of the dead. Many of my hearers were Wesleyans and Methodists, who profess to follow him. And it may be interesting to them to know that Mr. Wesley, in his sermon on Luke 16: 31, says:—"It is indeed very generally supposed that the souls of good men, as soon as they are dislodged from the body, go directly to heaven; but this opinion has not the least foundation in the oracles of God; on the contrary, our Lord says to Mary, after the resurrection, 'Touch me not; for I am not yet ascended to my Father, in heaven.'" Do they believe Mr. Wesley?

At this funeral I met my old friend Eld. I. R. Gates, from Pennsylvania, who had been attending the Messianian Conference at Brantford, with Eld. J. Litch and others. It seems that they have formed a new sect in this Province, out of the old Adventists, who repudiate the doctrine of the unconscious sleep of the soul, and the destruction of the wicked. No person entertaining this view is eligible to membership in their body, and preachers or members of this view are not tolerated among them. Bro. Gates said to me that they heard and had reported that I was among the "dead sleepers," and, of course, could not be tolerated among them if this were true. But in coming into the Province I had no idea of meeting with any of the preachers or churches of this new sect, and, having work enough to do in other fields, it made no difference to me. But my views of the definite time would also shut me out from their association, as I understood a resolution against preaching the definite time was introduced with favor into their late conference.

I informed Bro. G. that I had changed my views on the question of the spirits of the dead holding communications with the living; and that such change was produced by reading the book of the late Dr. Ramsey, of Philadelphia, on that subject.* On other questions I had no special light as yet to lead to a public change. Yet I did look favorably on those who hold to the mortality of man, among the many thousands of Adventists in this and other lands, and that I labor with them as I have always done. And should I see light in that direction to convince me of the truth of their position, I shall as an honest man embrace it. And those who assume to dictate what others shall believe, and persecute and cut off those who differ, could do so; the world was wide, and the field was large. I should probably live in the exercise of Christian liberty and receive all the light which God is pleased to bestow till Jesus comes—whether it be on the state of the dead, on the time of the resurrection, or any other great question. For true Christian liberty consists in this: "Girt with friends or foes, a man may speak the things he will," without the fear of man, and in the true fear of God, to whom we are accountable for all we believe, and for every word we speak.

But for this Christian and manly spirit, I should never have taken Father Miller by the hand when no others did or would, and sacrifice all in order to receive and publish a new and very unpopular truth. Mr. Miller gave me light on the word of God, which the Christian denomination (of which I was a member) did not believe or preach. The question for me to settle on hearing this truth was, shall I obey God and conscience, or shall I reject the light and live in condemnation? I chose to obey God, and take the consequences. So I have suffered the loss of membership in the denomination in which I was connected and lived many years, and suffered many things for the truth's sake. I am still living in the same spirit of sacrifice, and shall follow where God leads, if it be at the loss of all things. I do not belong to that class who have to wait till the truth becomes popular before they can embrace and follow it.

In the evening, failing in the appointment in Belmont, by the request of Bro. Gates I preached in Messiah's Chapel, in Westminster, to about one hundred souls. My subject was practical religion—a thing very much needed in these days. Inconsistent professors and ministers, all, got "badly cut up," and some resolved and promised to amend. I was very kindly received by all; and, by invitation, gave several other sermons on other evenings and one afternoon of the week. I visited Bro. Pickel and others in the place. Also visited and gave several sermons in Belmont, where I had a good hearing. Visited with Bros. Coupron and Storms, whom I had known in the lower Province many years ago. The renewal of old acquaintance was very pleasant. They are still looking for the kingdom. While in Belmont vicinity I enjoyed the hospitality of Bro. Joseph Simpson, from whom I received every attention.

Saturday, March 22. Bro. Simpson took me to London, where I was to speak on the Sabbath. I found on arrival that my Sabbath in London would be lost, as no appointment had been given out, and it was doubtful if I could get one. Since last Sabbath A. M. some of the Wesleyans, who were greatly delighted with my sermon then, had heard that I was an Adventist; this spoiled the sermon for them. So much for prejudice, which was likely to shut the door against me. So I visited about the city, and scattered what light I could, and awaited the decision of the "powers that be" about the morrow. Put up with Bro. Morrill, where I felt myself truly in a Christian home.

Sabbath, March 12. At 9 o'clock A. M., in company with Bro. Morrill, attended a Methodist love feast, in the M. E. Chapel, where I preached last Sabbath. It was a pleasant occasion. At the close the question of my preaching was settled. I was to have the house in the evening, and was requested to address the Sabbath School in the afternoon. So I went to the first Wesleyan Church at 11 o'clock. They have a large chapel and audience, notwithstanding the late secession. The junior pastor preached, from Isa. 35: 8. It was a sound and faithful discourse. I was blessed. It is so seldom I can hear preaching, that I prize the privilege. At the close I went to the Cathedral, where I was in time to hear another sermon, by the chief minister, on the rest of the Christian traveller. It had many points of interest, and I think gave good cheer to the Christian pilgrim. The audience was large, and very solemn. I felt that God was there. The minister is a believer in the personal and speedy coming of Christ. He has preached and published on the subject.

At 3 P. M. I addressed about a hundred young persons, in the Sabbath School connected with the seceding Wesleyans, where I was to speak in the evening. It was one of the most interesting Schools I have attended. I spoke for half an hour or more, and had the most solemn attention. The children appeared intelligent and promising. My theme was the value of God's word to the young, with an exhortation to give themselves to Christ and follow its blessed counsels.

In the evening I preached on the parable of the ten virgins, Matt. 25: 1-13. I had freedom in speaking about an hour and a half, to a very attentive audience. At the close Bro. Bowman, one of the local preachers, who had given way for me to preach, gave notice that he would on the next Sabbath morning read Dr. A. Clarke's comments on the 24th chapter of Matthew. He would do this, because I had said that Dr. Clarke, in his exhortation, had spiritualized the second coming of Christ into the destruction of Jerusalem. And in justice to himself and Bible class, whom he had taught on Dr. Clarke's views, he thought it his duty to show whether Dr. C. or the speaker spiritualized this subject. This was well, and I hoped for good to come out of it, although I could not be present to hear or reply.

I learned afterwards, by Bro. Morrill, that Bro. Bowman, did read and explain Dr. C's comments on the 24th of Matthew; at the close of which Bro. M. rose to ask the following questions:—

Do I understand you, Bro. Bowman, to say that Christ's second advent took place at the destruction of Jerusalem?

Bro. B. replied that he should answer that question next Sabbath.

Bro. M. said, I do not wish any discussion; I wish an answer now, yes or no. Did Christ come then, or not?

Bro. B. replied he did come then.

Bro. M. then said, in conclusion, I now understand you. You believe Christ came in the clouds of heaven, in power and great glory, and gathered his elect from the four winds of heaven, at the destruction of Jerusalem?

Bro. B. said, yes.

Bro. M. That's all.

And so I hope my visit has done some good, in bringing up the great question of the age for discussion among them. I hear that Bro. B. did not make many converts to his views. I trust the good leaven will work, and many be enlightened on the power and coming of Christ in his kingdom.

Something to do yet.

Who that has been faithfully engaged in proclaiming the great and soul-stirring message of Christ's coming to gather his people, whether by preaching, writing, or by your money, is not glad in heart that such a multitude is now looking with joyous interest for the speedy return of the Nobleman? Who is not glad in God for being instrumental of carrying on such a glorious work? It is true the health of some has failed, your worldly prospects changed, much of your money is gone. But these things have gone to proclaim the "good news of the kingdom of God," and to lead men to the gospel hope,—to prepare a people to receive the Master with gladness at his return. You have been provided for, and "have food and raiment" yet, with an heirship to a great and "eternal inheritance" in "the world to come." Is not this, with "eternal life," an ample reward? But the day of rewards has not yet opened. There is more work to do. The proclamation is yet sounding. Others are to hear the message, and be prepared to coronate their King. More sinners are to be "plucked from the burning," and fitted for members of Christ's kingdom. Who will help in this vast and glorious work? Who will preach the message faithfully, earnestly, wisely, patiently and continually, according to his ability? Who will write it, and do all he or she can to give it wings to fly to the multitudes who need it? Who will give of their money as God has prospered them, and as he has required of them, and as some good men have done before them, to feed and clothe, and send these men of God along on their mission? Who will see that their families are provided for, so that they may keep about this great, all-important and last work of the gospel to a perishing, sinking, dying world in its dotage? Who will contribute of their substance, (which will soon be used up for other purposes,) to publish and send abroad books, tracts and papers to publish this gospel? I have said these things to stir up the pure minds of those who have been made partakers of the labors and treasures of others, and to turn the attention of all to the importance of sustaining the efforts of the CHRISTIAN PUBLICATION SOCIETY. This society has been formed, and commenced its work to meet the wants and demands, as far as possible, of the present crisis in the work of the church, to do all she can do before the Master comes. The arrangements and plans of this society are not confined to the mere publishing of a paper, but if properly sustained, it can extend to the publication of tracts and books, to fill the United States and the British Provinces with the doctrine of the pre-millennial reign of Christ, and its proximity, the restitution, resurrection, death and life, signs of the times, and our duties to God and man. What has been done previously is not in vain. We yet live, and it is that we may do more. Our experience is worth something. We can now work with as good a will, and to much greater advantage, seeing and confessing our errors of the past. God will enable us to handle his truth more valiantly. We have but few preachers, comparatively, while calls come from every quarter for help. Many of our ministers are pastors, and the most of the evangelists are over-worked, and some disabled.

We can do much by books. I have circulated several thousands of our books, and can count good fruits from some hundreds of them. Tracts are much cheaper, and will do much more. By individual enterprise we labor under several disadvantages. Our books are of necessity high priced. Then they are written, or published by some one whose name is notorious as "a heretic," a "disorganizer," a fanatic, or something bad; or he is not known at all. And a name on a book weighs more, with many, than a large volume of truth. Books and tracts coming from an organized society are looked upon very differently, even if it is the same matter. Again, they can be published much cheaper, and arrangements can be made with those who hold copyrights, for editions to be published for and with the society's imprint, or buy the plates and publish.

But we are too poor to talk so loud, some may think. I think not. We could raise $20,000 within a few months, if we should do what we could, and what others have done before us; but $10,000 would make a good beginning. There are those among us who could give $1000 each to our publishing society; and is it not as worthy as any other society? There are many who could give $1000 each, more who could give $50, others $25, a great many could give $10, others $5, and many their mites. If it does not go into the Lord's treasury somewhere soon, it will go into Cæsar's, to support war. I have not been worth over $300 at any time since I enlisted, and I can safely say the Lord has enabled me to expend over $1000 in his cause, and at the same time has saved me from spending one dollar for ornaments, costly furniture, gold watches, needless articles of apparel, rum, snuff, or tobacco, for myself or for him. Many could sell off (as some have done) a surplus of stock, land, bank interests, bonds, houses or other combustibles—some useless trapping which costs them too much to keep in order, and occupies their minds too much to allow them "peace with God." Some will have to deny themselves the pleasure of keeping up with the "rich who fade away in his ways;" but such sacrifice will be blessed of God. Come, brethren, let us raise a publishing fund of $5.000 or $10.000, and let it speak for Christ and his cause.

I. C. WELLCOME.

More Truth.

A selection for the Crisis from "Dr. J. Belcher's Religious Denominations, page 343.

'I charge you before God and his blessed angels, that you follow me no further than I have followed Christ, and if God shall reveal any thing to you by any other instruments of his, be as ready to receive it as you ever were to receive any thing by my ministry; for I am confident that God hath more truth yet to break forth out of his holy word. I cannot sufficiently bewail the condition of the Reformed Churches who have come to a period in their religion, and will go no further than the instruments of their reformation. The Lutherans cannot be driven to go beyond Luther; for whatever part of God's will he hath further imparted by Calvin, they will rather die than embrace it; and so also the Calvinists stick where Calvin left them—a misery much to be lamented; for though they both were shining lights in their times, yet God hath not revealed his whole will to them. Remember now your church-covenant, whereby you engage with God and one another to receive whatever light shall be made known to you from his written word. For it is not possible that the christian world is so lately come out of such thick anti-christian darkness, and that full perfection of knowledge should break forth at once.'

"A most remarkable passage of history in which this truly great man is seen asserting a position, at least two whole centuries in advance of his age. His residence abroad among so many forms of opinion and of order, had quickened in his mind the germ of a true comprehensive movement. He also perceived the impossibility that the full maturity of truth and order should have burst forth in a day, as distinctly as a philosophic historian of the nineteenth century. The Reformation he was sure was no complete thing,—probably it was more incomplete than any one has yet been able to imagine. And then, he had the faith to accept his own conclusion; sending out the little half flock of his church across the wide ocean, he bade them go to watch for light; and there, in the free wilderness of nature, unrestrained by his own teachings, to complete if possible the unknown measure of reformation. This was the errand he gave them, and in this we have the fixed ideal of their undertaking, and they meant by 'reformation' all that God should teach them and their children of the coming ages, by the light that should break forth from his holy word; all that was necessary to prepare the purity and universal spread of christian truth, and open to mankind the reign of Christ in its full felicity and glory; they fixed no limits; it might include more than they at present thought, or could even dare to think. Still they had courage to say, 'Let the reformation come in God's measures, and as he himself will shape it.' And for this they entered with a stout heart upon the privations of their perilous undertaking. Confidence most sublime, justified by a history of patience equally sublime."

Cheer Up.

Wild winds' foaming billows
All around may play;
Though we may be filled with sorrow,
And gloomy is the way;
Cheer up, ye weary saint,
The storm will soon be o'er;
Our anchor shall be safely cast
On Canaan's happy shore.
CHORUS.—For Jesus is coming soon
To take his loved ones home;
Cheer up, ye weary saints,
For he will surely come.

Though long the vision tarry,
Yet patiently we'll wait;
And at the appointed time
It will surely speak.
It will speak, then do not fear
God's word, it never fails;
Signs proclaim Messiah near,
Behold, how sin prevails.
CHORUS.—But Jesus is coming soon,
And then no more we'll roam;
Cheer up, ye weary saint,
We are almost home.

Covetousness.

"And he said unto them, take heed, and beware of covetousness."—LUKE 12: 15.

(Concluded.)

The benevolence of the disciples of Christ—those who are disciples indeed—was typified by the distribution of the manna among the children of Israel in the wilderness. (See 2 Cor. 8: 15.) And this benevolence, together with the righteousness and christian graces which should accrue to the benevolent from benevolent acts, was sung in prophetic strain by Israel's inspired songster. (See 2 Cor. 9: 9, and Ps. 112.) By practical benevolence, subjection to the gospel of Christ is professed, while the partakers of the benefits of such benevolence glorify God on that account, and invoke his blessing for their benefactors. (See 2 Cor. 9: 13, 14.) Read chaps. 8 and 9 entire.

O ye covetous professors of christianity! What does the Almighty Lord require of you in this matter? "Is it not to deal thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poor that are cast out into thy house? when thou seest the naked that thou cover him; and that thou hide not thyself from thine own flesh?" Does not Christ command you to "love the Lord thy God with all thy heart"? "But whoso hath this world's goods, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" Christ once said to a certain young man, "If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven." Again it is written, "He that giveth to the poor, lendeth to the Lord." Thus we understand how to lay up treasure in heaven. Had the "young man" given his estate to the poor, it would have been lent to the Lord; and thus have been transferred from earth to heaven; and in due time, would have been returned to him with greater interest than mortal flesh is able to pay. O ye covetous! you need not fear to lend Him who is the sole owner of the universe a little of your clothing for the poor of his flock! He will never become bankrupt! He will never borrow beyond his ability to restore "a hundred fold now in this time, with persecution, and in the world to come life everlasting." "But what doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith, and have not works? Can faith save him? If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled, notwithstanding thou givest them not those things which are needful for the body; what doth it profit?" "And the people asked him, (John,) saying, What shall we do, then? He answereth and saith unto him, He that hath two coats, let him impart to him that hath none; and he that hath meat, let him do likewise."

In view of this subject, let no one say, "None need to be poor; all have the same advantages to acquire wealth which I possess." But suppose this assertion true. Will you recompense the poor for being so by withholding from them what God peremptorily commands you to bestow on them? Again. Let no one say, (as has been said,) "If one lacks the comforts of life, it is sure evidence that, in some way, he is not walking uprightly; for God has promised that he will withhold no good thing from him that walketh uprightly." It may be, in some instances, a good thing for the upright to suffer the lack of the comforts of life. We know, in fact, that thousands and tens of thousands have thus suffered. Take Job for one example. Look at him—"a perfect and an upright man"—stripped for a time of his worldly possessions. Was it a good thing for Job to suffer thus? Certainly it was. It gave him wisdom, and an experience in regard to the dealings of God with his people, which he could not otherwise have attained. And James tells the upright of the last days, to take Job for an example of suffering and patience. And Christ declares that, in the day of judgment, he will own as his brethren those who have suffered both hunger and nakedness. And I now repeat what I have previously affirmed, viz., that God as much designed that some men should be poor in regard to the things of this world, as that men should exist subsequently to "the fall." Remember that "the Lord maketh poor, and maketh rich." Remember also, that when enjoining on the people of the Old Covenant the duty of benevolence, the Lord assured them that the poor should never cease out of the land. And let it not be forgotten, that Christ positively affirmed to his church, that they should always have the poor with them. Opportunities for the people of God to practice benevolence never have been, nor never will be, till time shall be no more, wanting. But why this introduction and perpetuation of poverty in the church of God? I answer, it is the only means by which certain characteristics in either class, the rich or the poor, can be developed. The Lord devises means to try his professed people, to know what is in their hearts, and to see whether they will obey him or not. (See Deut. 8: 2; Ex. 16: 4; and 2 Chron. 32: 31.)

God designs that his people shall feel their dependence on him, and trust in him for every blessing they need, whether of a spiritual or temporal nature. But if it were the common lot of man to have in possession the riches of this world, none could ever know how to trust in God for the blessings of this life. (In fact, did all men possess an abundance of this world's goods, all men would be estranged from the God of the universe.) But now, since there are both rich and poor, both classes may easily learn to trust in God, if they will. How the poor may learn to trust in God, needs no comment. If the rich, acting from principles of love to God, disperse abroad, by way of supplying the wants of the poor, they do so trusting that God will replenish their stores, so that they themselves will lack no good thing. Nay, more. They will trust in God that he will supply all their needs, even though, by giving succor to the poor, Heaven receives all their treasure.

Again. God requires his people to imitate him in all his moral attributes. And those who profess thus to imitate him have to be tried, in every particular, that those graces may be either perfected in those who profess them, or that they may be proved not to be in the possession of them. And as benevolence is one of God's moral attributes, his people must be benevolent, in order that they may be imitators of him; and the only means by which this property can be tested, is, by administering to the necessities of the poor. Hence, if there were no poor in the land, this noble, this life-sustaining virtue could not be cultivated. "But," says one, "if all possessed a competency of this world's goods, there would be no necessity, no use for the attribute of benevolence." But were it not for the benevolence of God, none could exist, even in this world. The benevolence of God is the spring and source of all our temporal as well as spiritual blessings. Had not God been a benevolent being, man could never have been redeemed from death. And hence, as God is benevolent, and as his people must, in a moral sense, be like him, they must be practically benevolent. Again. Christ in his humiliation and death displayed the most magnific benevolence for fallen humanity. By his benevolence manifested in his obedience "unto death," he has purchased redemption from the Adamic penalty for the human family, and eternal life for all who believe and obey him. And if we would have the spirit of Christ, without which we are none of his, we must, like him, by practical demonstration, evince that we possess the spirit of benevolence.

And now, O ye covetous professors of christianity! you may fill your coffers with gold and silver, and let it canker; you may fill your wardrobes with garments, and let the moths eat them; you may yet, for a little while, heap together treasures for the last days; you may live in pleasure on the earth, and be wanton; you may nourish your hearts, as in the day of slaughter; and when you see the Son of God coming in the clouds of heaven, clothed with invincible power,—arrayed in glorious robes of royalty,—then you may weep and howl for the miseries that shall speedily come upon you. Your corrupted wishes, your cankered gold and silver, and your moth-eaten garments, with which you might have relieved the wants and the distresses of many a poor disciple of Christ, and have caused them to render thanksgiving and praise to God,—and by which you might also have secured to yourselves passports into the realms of endless bliss,—will be swift witnesses against you, when you are called to give an account of the manner in which you have treated the Savior, his disciples, and his cause. "Woe unto you, rich! for ye have received your consolation." This world has been your god;—you have served it with all the energy of your being;—you have honored, worshiped, been glad and rejoiced in it;—you have received, as you have passed along, all the reward your god could bestow;—and now you must reap the bitter fruit of your doings.

But "hearken, my beloved brethren. Hath not God chosen the poor of this world rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him?" Yes. The Master has said, "Blessed are ye poor; for yours is the kingdom of heaven." He knows your "works," your "tribulation and poverty," and yet pronounces you "rich," and promises to the faithful poor a "crown of glory that fadeth not away," which promise is soon to be fulfilled, when the Chief Shepherd shall appear.

Willington, Ct. R. ROBBINS.

My Journal.

VISIT TO CANADA WEST.

Friday, March 14. Bro. A. Gray took me, with Mrs. Gray and others, in his carriage to St. Catherine's, C. W., where we called upon his friends and were refreshed; after which I took the cars for Hamilton, where I received cordial greetings from Elder F. G. Brown and family, who are pleasantly settled here with the Baptist church. The evening was very stormy, so that we had no meeting, and I had to leave for my next appointment, in London, the next day. But it is my intention to visit Hamilton again, and preach the gospel of the kingdom. This is my third visit to this Province. The first was with Father Miller, to Toronto, in 1844, the second to Wellington Square and Hamilton some years ago. I now enter the Province again with a view to make a more extensive tour, and visit cities and towns, as the door may open to preach "the gospel of the kingdom." I came by the invitation of Adventists who are looking for the blessed hope, who desired to hear again on the time, and the signs indicative of the Lord's coming. I shall survey this field and see what the Lord has for me to do, and faithfully perform my duty. I know not what is before me, but trust to Him who has promised to be with his people to the end.

Saturday, March 15. Took my leave of Bro. Brown and his family, and left in the cars for London. The storm of rain, hail and snow still continues. The trees are loaded with ice, and many of them are falling, and others are shorn of their branches by the weight of the ice. Everything is in wintry dress. Arrived in London at 6 P. M. Bro. J. P. Simpson, of Belmont, met and took me to the residence of the Hon. S. Morrill, by his special request, where I was very cordially received. Bro. M. is a member of the Wesleyan Society, but has been an Adventist in faith since 1842, and a subscriber to the Herald.

Sabbath, March 16. Rose refreshed after a good night's sleep. Preached this morning in the Wesleyan church, lately seceded from the main body, on account of having a minister forced upon them whom they did not want. They worship in the M. E. chapel, as the Episcopal Methodists have run out, and the chapel was vacant. The Episcopal minister of the district at present is employed to preach for them a part of the time. The pulpit was to be occupied by a local preacher this A. M., who invited me, by Bro. Morrill's suggestion, to preach the morning sermon. The audience was good, and I had a good hearing on the subject of entire consecration, from Romans seventh and eighth. It was well received by most, but the views on eating and drinking to the glory of God, together with the way to live generally, was rather severe on the unscriptural habits of some, who were a little stirred up. I hope, however, for good results. There is too much form, without the power, and too much conformity to the world among the Wesleyans generally. They need another Wesley to stir them up on holy living and entire consecration.

At the close of this service Bro. Simpson took me in his sleigh eleven miles, to Westminster, to attend the funeral of a little son of his brother, Lewis Simpson. The house was crowded with people of all denominations. I spoke on the resurrection of the righteous dead, at the coming of Christ, and did not attempt to comfort the parents and friends of the deceased by teaching them that the child had gone to heaven, and was glorified and rewarded; but that the body had gone to the dust, and the spirit to God who gave it, and the reward and glorification would come "at the resurrection of the just." I found that this doctrine did not suit the Spiritualists, who say that the moment we die the soul goes immediately to heaven. And so I was set down as a "dead sleeper," as they are called here. And yet I preached only the teaching of Christ and the Apostles on the state of the dead. Many of my hearers were Wesleyans and Methodists, who profess to follow him. And it may be interesting to them to know that Mr. Wesley, in his sermon on Luke 16: 31, says:—"It is indeed very generally supposed that the souls of good men, as soon as they are dislodged from the body, go directly to heaven; but this opinion has not the least foundation in the oracles of God; on the contrary, our Lord says to Mary, after the resurrection, 'Touch me not; for I am not yet ascended to my Father, in heaven.'" Do they believe Mr. Wesley?

At this funeral I met my old friend Eld. I. R. Gates, from Pennsylvania, who had been attending the Messianian Conference at Brantford, with Eld. J. Litch and others. It seems that they have formed a new sect in this Province, out of the old Adventists, who repudiate the doctrine of the unconscious sleep of the soul, and the destruction of the wicked. No person entertaining this view is eligible to membership in their body, and preachers or members of this view are not tolerated among them. Bro. Gates said to me that they heard and had reported that I was among the "dead sleepers," and, of course, could not be tolerated among them if this were true. But in coming into the Province I had no idea of meeting with any of the preachers or churches of this new sect, and, having work enough to do in other fields, it made no difference to me. But my views of the definite time would also shut me out from their association, as I understood a resolution against preaching the definite time was introduced with favor into their late conference.

I informed Bro. G. that I had changed my views on the question of the spirits of the dead holding communications with the living; and that such change was produced by reading the book of the late Dr. Ramsey, of Philadelphia, on that subject.* On other questions I had no special light as yet to lead to a public change. Yet I did look favorably on those who hold to the mortality of man, among the many thousands of Adventists in this and other lands, and that I labor with them as I have always done. And should I see light in that direction to convince me of the truth of their position, I shall as an honest man embrace it. And those who assume to dictate what others shall believe, and persecute and cut off those who differ, could do so, the world was wide, and the field was large. I should probably live in the exercise of Christian liberty, and receive all the light which God is pleased to bestow till Jesus comes—whether it be on the state of the dead, on the time of the resurrection, or any other great question. For true Christian liberty consists in this: "Girt with friends or foes, a man may speak the things he will," without the fear of man, and in the true fear of God, to whom we are accountable for all we believe, and for every word we speak.

But for this Christian and manly spirit, I should never have taken Father Miller by the hand when no others did or would, and sacrifice all in order to receive and publish a new and very unpopular truth. Mr. Miller gave me light on the word of God, which the Christian denomination (of which I was a member) did not believe or preach. The question for me to settle on hearing this truth was, shall I obey God and conscience, or shall I reject the light and live in condemnation? I chose to obey God, and take the consequences. So I have suffered the loss of membership in the denomination in which I was connected and lived many years, and suffered many things for the truth's sake. I am still living in the same spirit of sacrifice, and shall follow where God leads, if it be at the loss of all things. I do not belong to that class who have to wait till the truth becomes popular before they can embrace and follow it.

In the evening, failing in the appointment in Belmont, by the request of Bro. Gates I preached in Messiah's Chapel, in Westminster, to about one hundred souls. My subject was practical religion—a thing very much needed in these days. Inconsistent professors and ministers, all, got "badly cut up," and some resolved and promised to amend. I was very kindly received by all; and, by invitation, gave several other sermons on other evenings and one afternoon of the week. I visited Bro. Pickel and others in the place. Also visited and gave several sermons in Belmont, where I had a good hearing. Visited with Bros. Coupron and Storms, whom I had known in the lower Province many years ago. The renewal of old acquaintance was very pleasant. They are still looking for the kingdom. While in Belmont vicinity I enjoyed the hospitality of Bro. Joseph Simpson, from whom I received every attention.

Saturday, March 22. Bro. Simpson took me to London, where I was to speak on the Sabbath. I found on arrival that my Sabbath in London would be lost, as no appointment had been given out, and it was doubtful if I could get one. Since last Sabbath A. M. some of the Wesleyans, who were greatly delighted with my sermon then, had heard that I was an Adventist; this spoiled the sermon for them. So much for prejudice, which was likely to shut the door against me. So I visited about the city, and scattered what light I could, and awaited the decision of the "powers that be" about the morrow. Put up with Bro. Morrill, where I felt myself truly in a Christian home.

Sabbath, March 12. At 9 o'clock A. M., in company with Bro. Morrill, attended a Methodist love feast, in the M. E. Chapel, where I preached last Sabbath. It was a pleasant occasion. At the close the question of my preaching was settled. I was to have the house in the evening, and was requested to address the Sabbath School in the afternoon. So I went to the first Wesleyan Church at 11 o'clock. They have a large chapel and audience, notwithstanding the late secession. The junior pastor preached, from Isa. 35: 8. It was a sound and faithful discourse. I was blessed. It is so seldom I can hear preaching, that I prize the privilege. At the close I went to the Cathedral, where I was in time to hear another sermon, by the chief minister, on the rest of the Christian traveller. It had many points of interest, and I think gave good cheer to the Christian pilgrim. The audience was large, and very solemn. I felt that God was there. The minister is a believer in the personal and speedy coming of Christ. He has preached and published on the subject.

At 3 P. M. I addressed about a hundred young persons, in the Sabbath School connected with the seceding Wesleyans, where I was to speak in the evening. It was one of the most interesting Schools I have attended. I spoke for half an hour or more, and had the most solemn attention. The children appeared intelligent and promising. My theme was the value of God's word to the young, with an exhortation to give themselves to Christ and follow its blessed counsels.

In the evening I preached on the parable of the ten virgins, Matt. 25: 1-13. I had freedom in speaking about an hour and a half, to a very attentive audience. At the close Bro. Bowman, one of the local preachers, who had given way for me to preach, gave notice that he would on the next Sabbath morning read Dr. A. Clarke's comments on the 24th chapter of Matthew. He would do this, because I had said that Dr. Clarke, in his exhortation, had spiritualized the second coming of Christ into the destruction of Jerusalem. And in justice to himself and Bible class, whom he had taught on Dr. Clarke's views, he thought it his duty to show whether Dr. C. or the speaker spiritualized this subject. This was well, and I hoped for good to come out of it, although I could not be present to hear or reply.

I learned afterwards, by Bro. Morrill, that Bro. Bowman, did read and explain Dr. C's comments on the 24th of Matthew; at the close of which Bro. M. rose to ask the following questions:—

Do I understand you, Bro. Bowman, to say that Christ's second advent took place at the destruction of Jerusalem?

Bro. B. replied that he should answer that question next Sabbath.

Bro. M. said, I do not wish any discussion; I wish an answer now, yes or no. Did Christ come then, or not?

Bro. B. replied he did come then.

Bro. M. then said, in conclusion, I now understand you. You believe Christ came in the clouds of heaven, in power and great glory, and gathered his elect from the four winds of heaven, at the destruction of Jerusalem?

Bro. B. said, yes.

Bro. M. That's all.

And so I hope my visit has done some good, in bringing up the great question of the age for discussion among them. I hear that Bro. B. did not make many converts to his views. I trust the good leaven will work, and many be enlightened on the power and coming of Christ in his kingdom.

Something to do yet.

Who that has been faithfully engaged in proclaiming the great and soul-stirring message of Christ's coming to gather his people, whether by preaching, writing, or by your money, is not glad in heart that such a multitude is now looking with joyous interest for the speedy return of the Nobleman? Who is not glad in God for being instrumental of carrying on such a glorious work? It is true the health of some has failed, your worldly prospects changed, much of your money is gone. But these things have gone to proclaim the "good news of the kingdom of God," and to lead men to the gospel hope,—to prepare a people to receive the Master with gladness at his return. You have been provided for, and "have food and raiment" yet, with an heirship to a great and "eternal inheritance" in "the world to come." Is not this, with "eternal life," an ample reward? But the day of rewards has not yet opened. There is more work to do. The proclamation is yet sounding. Others are to hear the message, and be prepared to coronate their King. More sinners are to be "plucked from the burning," and fitted for members of Christ's kingdom. Who will help in this vast and glorious work? Who will preach the message faithfully, earnestly, wisely, patiently and continually, according to his ability? Who will write it, and do all he or she can to give it wings to fly to the multitudes who need it? Who will give of their money as God has prospered them, and as he has required of them, and as some good men have done before them, to feed and clothe, and send these men of God along on their mission? Who will see that their families are provided for, so that they may keep about this great, all-important and last work of the gospel to a perishing, sinking, dying world in its dotage? Who will contribute of their substance, (which will soon be used up for other purposes,) to publish and send abroad books, tracts and papers to publish this gospel? I have said these things to stir up the pure minds of those who have been made partakers of the labors and treasures of others, and to turn the attention of all to the importance of sustaining the efforts of the CHRISTIAN PUBLICATION SOCIETY. This society has been formed, and commenced its work to meet the wants and demands, as far as possible, of the present crisis in the work of the church, to do all she can do before the Master comes. The arrangements and plans of this society are not confined to the mere publishing of a paper, but if properly sustained, it can extend to the publication of tracts and books, to fill the United States and the British Provinces with the doctrine of the pre-millennial reign of Christ, and its proximity, the restitution, resurrection, death and life, signs of the times, and our duties to God and man. What has been done previously is not in vain. We yet live, and it is that we may do more. Our experience is worth something. We can now work with as good a will, and to much greater advantage, seeing and confessing our errors of the past. God will enable us to handle his truth more valiantly. We have but few preachers, comparatively, while calls come from every quarter for help. Many of our ministers are pastors, and the most of the evangelists are over-worked, and some disabled.

We can do much by books. I have circulated several thousands of our books, and can count good fruits from some hundreds of them. Tracts are much cheaper, and will do much more. By individual enterprise we labor under several disadvantages. Our books are of necessity high priced. Then they are written, or published by some one whose name is notorious as "a heretic," a "disorganizer," a fanatic, or something bad; or he is not known at all. And a name on a book weighs more, with many, than a large volume of truth. Books and tracts coming from an organized society are looked upon very differently, even if it is the same matter. Again, they can be published much cheaper, and arrangements can be made with those who hold copyrights, for editions to be published for and with the society's imprint, or buy the plates and publish.

But we are too poor to talk so loud, some may think. I think not. We could raise $20,000 within a few months, if we should do what we could, and what others have done before us; but $10,000 would make a good beginning. There are those among us who could give $1000 each to our publishing society; and is it not as worthy as any other society? There are many who could give $1000 each, many who could give $50, others $25, a great many could give $10, others $5, and many their mites. If it does not go into the Lord's treasury somewhere soon, it will go into Cæsar's, to support war. I have not been worth over $300 at any time since I enlisted, and I can safely say the Lord has enabled me to expend over $1000 in his cause, and at the same time has saved me from spending one dollar for ornaments, costly furniture, gold watches, needless articles of apparel, rum, snuff, or tobacco, for myself or for him. Many could sell off (as some have done) a surplus of stock, land, bank interests, bonds, houses or other combustibles—some useless trapping which costs them too much to keep in order, and occupies their minds too much to allow them "peace with God." Some will have to deny themselves the pleasure of keeping up with the "rich who fade away in his ways;" but such sacrifice will be blessed of God. Come, brethren, let us raise a publishing fund of $5.000 or $10.000, and let it speak for Christ and his cause.

I. C. WELLCOME.

More Truth.

A selection for the Crisis from "Dr. J. Belcher's Religious Denominations, page 343.

'I charge you before God and his blessed angels, that you follow me no further than I have followed Christ, and if God shall reveal any thing to you by any other instruments of his, be as ready to receive it as you ever were to receive any thing by my ministry; for I am confident that God hath more truth yet to break forth out of his holy word. I cannot sufficiently bewail the condition of the Reformed Churches who have come to a period in their religion, and will go no further than the instruments of their reformation. The Lutherans cannot be driven to go beyond Luther; for whatever part of God's will he hath further imparted by Calvin, they will rather die than embrace it; and so also the Calvinists stick where Calvin left them—a misery much to be lamented; for though they both were shining lights in their times, yet God hath not revealed his whole will to them. Remember now your church-covenant, whereby you engage with God and one another to receive whatever light shall be made known to you from his written word. For it is not possible that the christian world is so lately come out of such thick anti-christian darkness, and that full perfection of knowledge should break forth at once.'

"A most remarkable passage of history in which this truly great man is seen asserting a position, at least two whole centuries in advance of his age. His residence abroad among so many forms of opinion and of order, had quickened in his mind the germ of a true comprehensive movement. He also perceived the impossibility that the full maturity of truth and order should have burst forth in a day, as distinctly as a philosophic historian of the nineteenth century. The Reformation he was sure was no complete thing,—probably it was more incomplete than any one has yet been able to imagine. And then, he had the faith to accept his own conclusion; sending out the little half flock of his church across the wide ocean, he bade them go to watch for light; and there, in the free wilderness of nature, unrestrained by his own teachings, to complete if possible the unknown measure of reformation. This was the errand he gave them, and in this we have the fixed ideal of their undertaking, and they meant by 'reformation' all that God should teach them and their children of the coming ages, by the light that should break forth from his holy word; all that was necessary to prepare the purity and universal spread of christian truth, and open to mankind the reign of Christ in its full felicity and glory; they fixed no limits; it might include more than they at present thought, or could even dare to think. Still they had courage to say, 'Let the reformation come in God's measures, and as he himself will shape it.' And for this they entered with a stout heart upon the privations of their perilous undertaking. Confidence most sublime, justified by a history of patience equally sublime."

Order.

"Let every thing be done . . . in order."—Paul.

DEAR BRETHREN:—I have been thinking for some time past of the utter want of order in the raising of funds for the support of the ministry among us. It seems to me that every thing that is done in this line is done hap-hazard, and there is scarce anything accomplished from the fact that we are not united with regard to the mode in which these things should be accomplished; and as I cannot meet with you all to-night, I thought I would reduce a few thoughts to writing and place them before you, through the medium of the Crisis. St. Paul says, "Let everything be done decently and in order"; and when we look at the works of the Almighty we see that everything is accomplished in its proper time and order. The Seasons revolve in their appointed time, and man goes forth to his labor, in the early spring, turning up the mellow earth preparatory to receiving the seed; then follows the sowing of the seed, then the covering process, after which God sends the warm rains from heaven, and the genial rays of the summer's sun fall upon it, causing the seed first to germinate, then to send forth the tender blade; then follows the more perfect maturing of the stalk, then the ear, lastly the ripe corn in the ear. But in order to receive a plentiful harvest, everything must be done in its proper time and order. Now, brethren, seeing that God does everything in such perfect order, should not we try to imitate in all things, not only in our worldly affairs (for we do imitate him in these), but in propelling the gospel plow, and in sowing the good seed, which will produce children of the kingdom? But, says one, "I do all that I can to promote the cause of truth." Perhaps you do, but as a body or church are your labors in this direction united? Are you following the gospel ORDER? Do you lay by you on the first day of every week as God has blessed you? or, is it "a feast" (to one of God's ministers) "and a famine" (to the next?) Do you look to the minister to do all your preaching, all your praying, and all your fighting (against the powers of darkness), without thrusting your hand into your pocket and bringing forth some of its shining contents to administer to his wants? Are you saying to him, "Be thou clothed and fed"? In a word, are you a working bee, or are you a drone? Do you lay by on every week your mite, so that you can give something to all needy and worthy ministers or the poor?

There are many very worthy and wealthy brethren and churches who accomplish just nothing in this direction. Why? Because they go about it like a fish, trying to fly without wings. They have no system of action with regard to supporting God's workmen. Just look at the thing one moment. Who could not lay by on the first day of the week five cents, which in the course of the year would amount to $2.60? Many could lay by four times this amount without knowing that they had given scarce anything; and by observing this rule we would all be able to do something at any time.

But there is another fault to be plainly seen in not observing order in these things. Bro. A. reads in the Crisis that Eld. A. B. C. is coming to our place on such a day. Immediately everything is in confusion—every one trying, like Martha, to see how good a supper they can get for their Lord. At the appointed time the Rev. gentleman arrives; preaches three or four discourses with much earnestness and eloquence; creates quite a sensation; cannot stay any longer on account of having an appointment in a distant place; and being a new broom, he sweeps clean. The brethren make a big effort, and contribute largely to this strange preacher, who has simply upturned the soil and sown a few seed, while perhaps at the same time there is a poor but worthy brother in their midst, (who has been trying to sound the gospel trumpet, turning up the virgin soil, sowing the good seed, carefully pulling up every noxious and noisome weed, and plentifully watering with his tears), who has been almost utterly neglected; thus verifying the saying of our Lord, "A prophet is not without honor, save in his own country." Such cases as this are not rare by any means. I know of one brother who has traveled upwards of seven hundred miles and preached about sixty discourses in the past year (and in no case going over twenty-five or thirty miles from home to preach, thus beginning at home as a centre and constantly enlarging the circle of his labors); and has received $1.15 in money. Many of his (rich) brethren endeavor to cheer him by saying to him that they believe it to be his duty to preach the gospel—think that God blesses his labors—say to him that he is making a fair improvement on his talent—think they ought to assist him in a pecuniary way, but actually do nothing. Many of these brethren are really good and worthy men, but they lack that method or order that Paul speaks of, which always should be observed. They talk of helping this or that brother, but each one waits for the other to break the ice, and by this waiting the ice is never broken.

Some will say, "I do not believe that God will suffer his workmen to come to want, if they will only go forth trusting in [illegible] that God always works through a given medium, and he has told us "the workman is worthy of his meat"; and Paul tells us that those that minister to us in temporal things should also receive of our carnal things. I do not believe the ministers of Christ should become rich in this world's goods; but I do believe that they should be administered unto, so that their minds may not be entirely drawn away from the study of the Word of Life. Dear brethren, examine these things in the light of the gospel, and see whether you are in the fault, yea or nay. It becomes our imperative duty to do all that in us lies to forward the car of truth; and we can do three times as much in the course of a year by observing Paul's rule, than in any other way. May the Lord help us to improve, as good stewards, the talents that have been entrusted to our care, so that in the day of his coming he may say, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things; I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." Amen. Yours striving for the kingdom. GEO. W. HURD.

Two kinds of Preachers.

There are two kinds of preachers, and their preaching produces two opposite results. One kind are a detriment to the cause, and the other a blessing. 1. One kind are loud-mouthed in their plea for "the truth," "the word," "the gospel," "the faith," and "the hope," (by which they mean a certain item of truth, or error, or both blended, which they have converted into a hobby, and have so magnified that they can see nothing else to be truth or gospel). Let me illustrate their position. Yonder is a large house with several rooms. Its owner employs several servants to labor in it, but instead of laboring as they were engaged to do, they begin to dispute about being in the house. Joe goes into the kitchen and contends that he is in the house, and the rest are not; Jim goes into the bedroom, and insists that Joe is mistaken, for he is in the house, and the rest are not; Jack blunders into the parlor, and declares that he is in the house, and the others are not; Fred marches up chamber, and affirms that he is occupying the house, and the rest are mistaken; Cuff takes possession of the woodshed, and exclaims that he is in the house; and Sambo jumps into the pig-pen, and pronounces that the house. Soon it is a perfect bedlam: Joe from the kitchen is calling, Come into the house, or Master will whip you; Jim, from the bedroom, cries, Come into the house, or you will get flogged awfully; Jack, from the parlor, roars, Come into the house, or you will get punished severely; Fred screams from the chamber, Come into the house; Cuff shrieks from the woodshed, Come into the house; while Sambo screams from the pig-pen, Come into the house. A part are in the house, and a part are not; and those who are, are not laboring for their Master, but are spending their time in quarreling with each other. Sambo in the pig-pen, though not in the house, no more comes short of doing the will of his master than Joe in the kitchen, or Jack in the parlor. Joe, Jim, Jack and Fred, unless they stop this fuss and go to work, though they are really in the house, will fare no better when Master comes than Cuff in the woodshed, or Sambo in the pig-pen. Those ministers who get one item of truth, and make that "the truth," and spend their time in denouncing others, do but little more good than those who call some error "the truth." Neither class lead sinners to Christ, or keep a church alive. Churches die out before them, and prayer meetings freeze up.

2nd. The other kind of preachers are praying men, and preach the truth, not in the spirit of contention, but in the spirit of love. They unite rather than divide with test questions. They feed the flock with food that keeps them thriving. They keep up prayer meetings so full of holy fire that they neither freeze up or chill to death. They spend more time in warning sinners, than in disputing. They do not annihilate the practical element of the gospel, to make more prominent the theoretical element. They gather souls into the fold of Christ. They have religion in their hearts, as well as theory in their heads. Lord, increase such preachers! W. SHELDON.

Concord Meetings.

The meetings in Concord, N. H., continue to increase in interest. The Spirit of the Lord is moving powerfully on the hearts of the people. It is really heart-cheering to see such deep interest in these last days of peril, when nearly all the inhabitants of our planet have turned rebels to the Son of God. We often hear it remarked concerning these meetings that there is very little excitement, but a calm, deep feeling, which shows that people are acting understandingly. They start like those who expect to make it a life business. They act like men who know what they are about, and not like those who move upon uncertainties. They seem to have counted the cost, and are willing to pay the price. The young converts are living children, who can give a reason of the hope within them. Their testimonies in the social meetings are "like apples of gold in pictures of silver."

On account of the crowds who came to hear, we have been obliged to move our meeting to the spacious City Hall, and yet there is not room for all who wish to hear. It seems like former days, when the multitudes flocked to hear about the coming of the Son of man. They are troubled at the signs of the times. They tremble before approaching events. They are satisfied we are living in no ordinary times, and honestly inquire, "What do these things mean?" They see that the popular syren song of a temporal millennium is supported by no reliable evidence; that the world is actually growing "worse and worse," as the prophet has declared will be the case "in the last days." They are fast losing their confidence in the popular and fashionable religion of the day, being satisfied that they must have something more substantial if they are to be accepted in the day of judgment. They are being fully convinced that we are living in the "perilous times" that immediately precede the coming of Christ. These, and other truths, have caused some thirty to give their hearts to the Lord. Twenty-six have been buried with Christ in baptism, and others are resolved to improve an early opportunity to bear the same cross.

Our love-feasts, Sabbath mornings, are heavenly seasons. In less than an hour, it has been our pleasure to hear seventy-five witnesses for Jesus and the blessed hope, all of whom are fondly expecting to see their Savior within a brief period. The old soldiers of the cross are greatly refreshed and quickened, and filled with new zeal in the important work of trying to save our fellow beings. Their faith and love have been much strengthened. All things now look encouraging for the cause of Christ in Concord. Brethren, pray for us.—G.

The War.

The bloody war clouds still hang over our country, with no prospect of any abatement in the awful storm, that is strewing our once happy land with the dead and dying, while their loved ones at home spend weary days and nights in saddest weeping. Demons may well rejoice over our nation, if sin and misery can give them delight.

We may soon expect to hear of some hard-fought battles, but the South seem as determined to continue the war as they did six months since. Although they have met with many reverses, they appear to become more determined for war than ever. The spirit of the duelist is taking possession of multitudes, who are fully decided to kill, or be killed. They had rather die than submit to the North.

During the last week there has been much excitement occasioned by the call of the President for more troops to defend the Capitol, and strengthen Gen. Banks, who has been driven back by the rebels across the Potomac. It was thought the enemy was intending to attack Washington, but those fears are now nearly subsided. It is expected that Gen. McClellan will soon commence operating upon Richmond, and that Gen. Halleck will fight the rebels at Corinth, in Mississippi. Both of these places are strong holds of the enemy. We may soon expect to hear of bloody deeds.

O how much we need the Prince of peace to rule our planet! We trust the glad hour will soon arrive.—G.

☞ We understand that Bro. J. F. Cotton intends to visit some of the principal towns in Mass., Maine, New Hampshire, and also in the Provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, during the summer, in canvassing for the new work just edited, and which has been so favorably noticed in the Crisis and other papers. We would bespeak for him a kind welcome among the friends.—G.

CORRECTION.—In our last week's editorial, we are made to say of our meeting in Concord that we "gathered around the sacramental table in the morning." It should read evening.—G.

"Disobedient to Parents."

Among other signs of "the last days," Paul tells us that children will be "disobedient to parents." There are but few parents who do not realize the truthfulness of this Scripture. The popular sentiment among Spiritualists, that every one is his own Lord, law-maker, and judge, seems to have been imbibed even by the children of our day; and the parent who endeavors to control his own household, as did Abraham and other patriarchs, has undertaken no easy task. When the well-governed children meet those who go unrestrained, as most do, they are told they are abused by their parents when they refuse to let them go with others as they wish, and soon poison the feelings of the otherwise good and obedient children, who, when they return home, show a very different spirit towards their kind parents, and more than hint that they do not have liberty like other children. They soon become reckless and disobedient and help to lead others astray.

We are often pained to witness the disobedience of children even in the families of those who are looking for the speedy coming of Jesus. Many mothers are complaining of their sore trials with their disobedient children. Their once happy homes have become scenes of anarchy and confusion. Thus Satan is overthrowing many and binding them in continual bondage, by means of their impatience at unruly children. It is truly a great trial, but impatience only makes the difficulty greater. Disobedient children, and fretting parents, will turn any paradise into bedlam, and start a whole family on the road to destruction.

It is now a common thing to see the little child rule the entire household. When requested to do any thing, instead of going promptly to perform the act, we hear the blunt, "I shan't," or "I won't." Instead of seeing that her command is obeyed, the mother says, "Johnny, you should not speak so," and thus ends the matter till she performs the act herself. When she tells Henry he must not have the book, he begins to scream, and mother gives him the forbidden article. In this way she learns her child to cry for things it needs, till all the family must yield to its foolish whims or have a horrid squall. Thus, in early days, the parents teach their children lessons of self-indulgence and disobedience, that prepare them to rush headlong to ruin.

This last-day sign of disobedience to parents is now standing out in prominence before the world. We do not see any room for doubt in the matter. This sin lies, in a great measure, at the door of indulgent and careless parents. The Lord foresaw how it would be, foretold it by his servant Paul, and we live to see its accomplishment.

We hope every parent will carefully read and remember the following excellent "Rules for home education." They are from the London News, C. W., and should be carefully preserved. Do not pass over them carelessly. They are very important rules. They should be engraven upon the memory of every parent, and become the regulations of every household where there are children. They should be as firmly established as the laws of the Medes and Persians, which could not be changed. Let your children understand that they must abide by these rules, because they are for their good, that this is the reason, and the only reason. See that you perform all on your part, and the result will be blessed, and of many desolate places it would soon be said,

"Home, home, sweet home,
There is no place like home."

The following are the RULES:—G.

1. From your children's earliest infancy, inculcate the necessity of instant obedience.
2. Unite firmness with gentleness. Let your children always understand that you mean exactly what you say.
3. Never promise them anything unless you are sure you can give them what you promise.
4. If you tell a child to do anything, show him how to do it, and see that it is done.
5. Always punish your children for willfully disobeying you, but never punish in anger.
6. Never let them perceive that they can vex you, or make you lose your self-command.
7. If they give way to petulance and temper, wait till they are calm, and then gently reason with them on the impropriety of their conduct.
8. Remember that a little present punishment, when the occasion arises, is much more effectual than the threatening of a greater punishment, should the fault be renewed.
9. Never give your children any thing because they cry for it.
10. On no account allow them to do at one time what you have forbidden, under the same circumstances, at another.
11. Teach them that the only sure and easy way to appear good, is to be good.
12. Accustom them to make their little recitals the perfect truth.
13. Never allow of tale-bearing.
14. Teach them that self-denial, not self-indulgence, is the appointed and sure method of securing happiness.—Lon. News.

Dark Day in 1780.

When in Concord, we were privileged to see an old almanac for the year 1780. As we are frequently told that the unparalleled darkness on May 19th, 1780, was occasioned by an eclipse of the sun, we wish to satisfy all such persons that it was impossible, without a miracle. It is a well known fact that an eclipse of the sun can happen only at new moon. In the almanac of 1780, it is stated,—

"There will be four eclipses this year; two of the sun, and two of the moon.

The first will be an eclipse of the sun, the 4th day of May, about 8 o'clock in the morning, invisible to us by reason of the moon's south latitude.

The second will be of the moon, Thursday, May 18th, about 6 o'clock in the morning, scarcely visible to us."

These facts forever settle the matter that the dark day of May 19th, 1780, was not caused by an eclipse of the sun.—G.

Meeting of Bishops in Rome.

All the Bishops of the world are requested to meet at Rome, June 8th. It is said the object of the Pope in calling this meeting is for consultation on political matters; while the avowed reason is for the purpose of canonizing some saints, so as to have some more to whom they can pray.

Here is some more fruit of the belief that dead men are alive and can hear our prayers. If it were not for a belief in this great error, no doubt the whole system of Papacy would have crumbled into dust long since, and all the other false systems of religion would have lain in the same heap of ruins; while the christian religion alone holds out to man the only possible hope of a future life, which is by a literal resurrection of the dead, or a translation, like that of Enoch and Elijah.

The following account of the coming meeting of the Bishops is from The Catholic.—G.

THE ASSEMBLING OF BISHOPS AT ROME.—The solemn canonization that is to take place at Rome on the 8th of June promises to be one of the most splendid of its kind. "When a certain number of the Bishops shall have arrived at Rome, the Pope will hold with them and the Sacred College a public consistory, at which the claims of the different parties will be duly weighed. The Pope will close the meeting by saying that on a subject of such gravity he must consult the Cardinals and Prelates. He will then hold several semi-public consistories, in which the subject of the canonizations will be discussed, and at which each Cardinal and Bishop will express his opinion. On the day of the public ceremony the Church of the Vatican will be hung with draperies and brilliantly lighted up. In the nave will be suspended medallions on which will be painted a representation of the miracles performed by those who are about to be canonized. At ten in the morning a long procession will descend from the Sistine Chapel, between a double line of troops. It will be composed of all the clergy of Rome, each bearing a lighted wax taper in his hand, the Roman ecclesiastical and civil authorities, and the officers of the Pope's household, next will come his Holiness, dressed in his richest Pontifical robes, borne in state under a canopy, and having in his hand a lighted taper. The procession will proceed along the double colonnade of St. Peter's, and then enter the main building. When in the church, the Pope will place himself on his throne, where he will receive the homage of all the Cardinals, Patriarchs, Archbishops and Bishops. The painted standards of the saints and martyrs will be ranged round the throne. The Cardinal Procureur of the Canonization, accompanied by a consistorial advocate, will then advance, and make the three customary requests that his Holiness will proceed with the ceremony. To the first the Pope will reply through one of his secretaries, that in an affair of such importance he must have assistance of prayer, and, descending from his throne, he will read the Litanies of the Saints. To the second request the answer will be that he must invoke the light of the Holy Spirit, and the Veni Creator will be sung. To the third the secretary will announce that the Pope is about to pronounce his definite decree which will be afterwards read aloud. When the document has been read, his Holiness will commence singing the Te Deum, which will be continued by the choristers of the Cathedral. All the people present will fall on their knees, several pieces of cannon placed near the church, as well as the guns of St. Angelo, will fire a salute, and all the church bells of Rome will ring for an hour. After the Te Deum the official invocation of the new saints will take place and the Pope will give his first benediction. A grand mass will be afterwards celebrated by his Holiness, and at the close of it the Pope will deliver a panegyric on those who have just been canonized. His Holiness will afterwards give a solemn benediction from the balcony of St. Peter's, and then retire to his apartments. In the evening the Vatican will be illuminated."

The Present Time.

"Lonely and weary, by sorrows oppress'd,
Onward I hasten with longings for rest."

Never in my weary pilgrimage did this beautiful hymn seem to express so forcibly the feelings of my burdened heart as at this time. In viewing the condition of things in general, they present a dismal aspect in view of the evident nearness of the judgment. The condition of the professing church of Christ is truly mournful. The feelings of resentment amid the nations seem to become more vengeful, bitter, and furious. O! what horrid wrath and burning indignation is manifest now in our own land as brother comes down by the sword of brother, and in thousands of instances the fire of patriotism kindled to a glowing heat of fury by the so-called Reverends of these last degenerate days. (One word on the above term. I never did like it; and for the last twenty years I have considered it a flattering title; in fact, a useless prefix. See Job 32: 21, 22. This digression is not to provoke a reply, nor incite the least alienation of feeling in the bosom of any one that may read this.)

Fearful, indeed, it seems to me, is the retribution awaiting those who have directly or indirectly caused the shedding of blood under the new covenant. Alas! it seems as if some undefinable agency is at work causing men to err. Isa. 30: 20. Amid the general derangement of the above departments, earth appears to be waxing old as doth a garment, and as a vesture will soon be changed.

"Old mother earth is wan and pale,
Her face is wrinkled sore;
Her locks are blanched, her heart is cold,
Her garments stiff with gore."

Fading, still fading, changing, still changing, is the destiny of all things in this present dying world, doomed by the fiat of Jehovah to continue thus until the last grand, glorious and eternal change, when he shall make all things new. "He which testifieth these things saith, surely I come quickly. Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

After a somewhat tedious journey by private conveyance, at times over very rough roads, in company with my companion in the journeyings and trials of these last days, we reached this place in Western N. Y., and expect to toil and labor for the saving of sinners for a certain season in the highways and hedges, if the Lord will. O! when will some of the preachers that are treading round and round in old beaten tracks on the heels of each other, give heed to the calls from the regions beyond?

Dearly beloved, may grace, mercy and peace rest upon the faithful in Christ Jesus. Amen. S. S. BREWER.

Extracts from Herman Schultz,*

Dr. of Philosophy and Prof. of Theology of the University at Goettingen, Germany, 1861.

"The religion of revelation presents to us the sentence in the fullest clearness: 'Life is only in God.'

"In the New Testament Christ presents God to us as such, who has the life within himself, as the living God, and Paul calls him the one who only has immortality. (1 Tim. 6: 16) And as the logos, which was with God, is the life, still the Son has it again from the Father, and inasmuch as he is one with him. All, however, which proceedeth from the Father through the Son, is life. As the Spirit is the life giving power, so food, which the Son giveth, is the life; so are the words, which he speaks, words of eternal life, and he can give the living water, whose fountain flows into eternal life. (John 6, 63, 33, 68; 4. 10, 14.) The tendency therefore of the whole Scripture is, to present to us God as the only possessor and fountain of life."

"It is a matter of course that, if any being besides God is to have life, such a life which cannot perish, that being can have this life only by some kind of relation to or connection with God. The consequence hereof is, that all created beings have no life within themselves, therefore they may according to their nature perish. This is the natural result of being created. Wherever any being is caused to live by another one, the former therefore having the cause of its existence not within itself, it follows as a matter of course that its existence may have an end whenever the originating power is withdrawn. Any being, which at some time has not existed, may at some future period have a time of non-existence again."

"Any thing created cannot be a part of God; therefore nothing which is created, can have the fountain of life within itself which is in God alone. But that which has not the fountain of life within itself, its existence is dependent on some other being; therefore is not mortal, though it may exist forever."

"We call immortal, where life cannot cease, or which has the power within itself to be eternal. But this a created being can never be by nature. It can never feel itself immortal; for, as essential to our being, we can only feel that which we have independent of any thing else, that is, within ourselves. Anything created may be eternal; we have admitted this in regard to all matter; but it is not incorruptible, not immortal. Immortality and incorruptibility are no natural qualities, which a being might receive by virtue of its creation; for they contradict the meaning of creation, as such, entirely. The connection with God, the imparting of life, as it was done at the creation, makes us beings, which in reality are, which have existence, individual existence, but are not immortal. All created beings, whose life and existence is dependent on the power of life, which the divine being imparts to them, there is a possibility that this spirit of life, while imparting itself to other beings, abandons the former and lets them go back again to the original substance, from which they came."—Com. by L. REIMER.

Holiness—Yes, Holiness.

Holiness now; holiness forever;—now is the time, the set time, the important, the momentous! All nature, all grace—the heavens above, the earth beneath—with united voice cry out thunderingly: "Be ye holy, for I am holy." The present crisis is a crisis fraught immensely with things unheard of. The world is on fire! If ever holiness to the Lord, the presenting the body with all its powers, a living sacrifice, a whole burnt-offering, it is now!

"The moments fly—a minute's gone!
The minutes fly—an hour is run!
The day is fled—the night is here,
Thus flies a week—a month—a year!"

Now, now is the time, the accepted time, the day of salvation. Now, if ever, holiness, entire consecratedness should be sounded out to the ends of the earth. Every sermon, every prayer, every testimony, every word of exhortation, should be fraught richly, more or less, of this entire giving-up to God-service. Sin, every sin—little sins, great sins, sins of thought, sins of deed, of omission and commission, national sins, city sins, family sins, individual sins; sins in high places and in low, sins of the flesh and of the spirit—all sin should be repented of, put away, banished forever, as far as the East is from the West.

The Church, first and foremost, should be cleansed, purified, sanctified, washed, made white in the blood of the Lamb, meet for God-service, shine forth as the sun, fair as the moon, terrible in righteousness as an army with banners. Ministers should preach holiness; editors should preach it, pray it, live it, raise the standard high as heaven. Let holiness be written on our foreheads, our door-posts, "the bells of our horses," on our swords and bayonets, every instrument of war on the battle-field. Let "holiness to the Lord" beam forth radiantly in every thought, word, deed, every moving muscle. Let holiness to the Lord be reiterated, sounded out from the pulpit, the press, pervade every church, every household, every encampment. Finally, brethren, be strong in the Lord and in the power of his might. Put on the whole armor of God, and over all the shield of faith, by which ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked. Take also the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God.

"Rise to a higher, holier life,
Ye who are called the sons of God,
And girded with the Spirit's sword,
Go nobly to the strife."

Correspondence.

From Bro. J. Lyle.

BRN. GRANT AND MORGAN:—In the Crisis of May 21st, there is an article signed "H," copied from the Christian Witness and Church Advocate." At the close, the writer asserts that Mr. Miller did an evil work in fixing dates, or, to use his own words,—"A vast amount of injury was done by Mr. M. in this respect." In the same No. of the Crisis there is a biographical sketch of Mr. Miller's ministry, which abundantly proves that he proclaimed his message in demonstration of the Spirit and of power. Instead of infidels and ungodly men being injured, many were saved, and testimony is adduced showing that one at least remained free from the snare of scepticism long after the passing of the time in which the Lord was expected to come. In view of the facts recorded in that biographical article, can we deny that Mr. Miller was moved by the Spirit of the Lord to preach as he did? We know that God sent Jeremiah and Jonah to proclaim messages which caused them bitter sorrow, because the threatened judgment was delayed beyond the given time. The enemies of truth took advantage of the merciful delay to brand these faithful servants as injurious, but at last the messages of these men were vindicated; and will not the divine rule be applied to this truth-resisting generation?

Were I permitted to speak in the ear of "H.", I would say kindly, but earnestly—Dear Bro., let us not use disparaging reflections on any part of Bro. Miller's ministry in our efforts to get men to observe the signs of the times; rather let us justify it by plain and applicable scripture precedents. God will soon vindicate Bro. M.'s ministry.

From M. S.

TO THE FRIENDS IN THE FAITH:—Being fully persuaded that the time of the end draweth nigh, and that we as professed followers of the like precious faith should spare no exertions in our efforts to promote the interest of this glorious cause, I have long felt a desire to express myself in regard to this important subject. Although we may be strangers and pilgrims sojourning in a strange land, we have no good reason for withholding our testimony in favor of the gospel truth. And we more especially who believe are about to witness the last struggle of the world in its deplorable condition as predicted by the prophets and portrayed by the apostles. And that we have arrived at the most critical period of this world's history since the days of Noah, is a question beyond a doubt. While the all absorbing topic of war has taken hold of the minds of the people, let us remember our duty and not fail to do it. For the Master hath told us these things shall come to pass in the last days, and hath commanded us to watch lest that day overtake us as a thief. Dear brethren and sisters, let us take heed to these things, that we may be found blameless, and accounted worthy to enter in to the joy of our Lord.

Order.

"Let every thing be done . . . in order."—Paul.

DEAR BRETHREN:—I have been thinking for some time past of the utter want of order in the raising of funds for the support of the ministry among us. It seems to me that every thing that is done in this line is done hap-hazard, and there is scarce anything accomplished from the fact that we are not united with regard to the mode in which these things should be accomplished; and as I cannot meet with you all to-night, I thought I would reduce a few thoughts to writing and place them before you, through the medium of the Crisis. St. Paul says, "Let everything be done decently and in order"; and when we look at the works of the Almighty we see that everything is accomplished in its proper time and order. The Seasons revolve in their appointed time, and man goes forth to his labor, in the early spring, turning up the mellow earth preparatory to receiving the seed; then follows the sowing of the seed, then the covering process, after which God sends the warm rains from heaven, and the genial rays of the summer's sun fall upon it, causing the seed first to germinate, then to send forth the tender blade; then follows the more perfect maturing of the stalk, then the ear, lastly the ripe corn in the ear. But in order to receive a plentiful harvest, everything must be done in its proper time and order. Now, brethren, seeing that God does everything in such perfect order, should not we try to imitate in all things, not only in our worldly affairs (for we do imitate him in these), but in propelling the gospel plow, and in sowing the good seed, which will produce children of the kingdom? But, says one, "I do all that I can to promote the cause of truth." Perhaps you do, but as a body or church are your labors in this direction united? Are you following the gospel ORDER? Do you lay by you on the first day of every week as God has blessed you? or, is it "a feast" (to one of God's ministers) "and a famine" (to the next?) Do you look to the minister to do all your preaching, all your praying, and all your fighting (against the powers of darkness), without thrusting your hand into your pocket and bringing forth some of its shining contents to administer to his wants? Are you saying to him, "Be thou clothed and fed"? In a word, are you a working bee, or are you a drone? Do you lay by on every week your mite, so that you can give something to all needy and worthy ministers or the poor?

There are many very worthy and wealthy brethren and churches who accomplish just nothing in this direction. Why? Because they go about it like a fish, trying to fly without wings. They have no system of action with regard to supporting God's workmen. Just look at the thing one moment. Who could not lay by on the first day of the week five cents, which in the course of the year would amount to $2.60? Many could lay by four times this amount without knowing that they had given scarce anything; and by observing this rule we would all be able to do something at any time.

But there is another fault to be plainly seen in not observing order in these things. Bro. A. reads in the Crisis that Eld. A. B. C. is coming to our place on such a day. Immediately everything is in confusion—every one trying, like Martha, to see how good a supper they can get for their Lord. At the appointed time the Rev. gentleman arrives; preaches three or four discourses with much earnestness and eloquence; creates quite a sensation; cannot stay any longer on account of having an appointment in a distant place; and being a new broom, he sweeps clean. The brethren make a big effort, and contribute largely to this strange preacher, who has simply upturned the soil and sown a few seed, while perhaps at the same time there is a poor but worthy brother in their midst, (who has been trying to sound the gospel trumpet, turning up the virgin soil, sowing the good seed, carefully pulling up every noxious and noisome weed, and plentifully watering with his tears), who has been almost utterly neglected; thus verifying the saying of our Lord, "A prophet is not without honor, save in his own country." Such cases as this are not rare by any means. I know of one brother who has traveled upwards of seven hundred miles and preached about sixty discourses in the past year (and in no case going over twenty-five or thirty miles from home to preach, thus beginning at home as a centre and constantly enlarging the circle of his labors), and has received $1.15 in money. Many of his (rich) brethren endeavor to cheer him by saying to him that they believe it to be his duty to preach the gospel—think that God blesses his labors—say to him that he is making a fair improvement on his talent—think they ought to assist him in a pecuniary way, but actually do nothing. Many of these brethren are really good and worthy men, but they lack that method or order that Paul speaks of, which always should be observed. They talk of helping this or that brother, but each one waits for the other to break the ice, and by this waiting the ice is never broken.

Some will say, "I do not believe that God will suffer his workmen to come to want, if they will only go forth trusting in that God always works through a given medium, and he has told us "the workman is worthy of his meat"; and Paul tells us that those that minister to us in temporal things should also receive of our carnal things. I do not believe the ministers of Christ should become rich in this world's goods; but I do believe that they should be administered unto, so that their minds may not be entirely drawn away from the study of the Word of Life. Dear brethren, examine these things in the light of the gospel, and see whether you are in the fault, yea or nay. It becomes our imperative duty to do all that in us lies to forward the car of truth; and we can do three times as much in the course of a year by observing Paul's rule, than in any other way. May the Lord help us to improve, as good stewards, the talents that have been entrusted to our care, so that in the day of his coming he may say, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things; I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." Amen. Yours striving for the kingdom. GEO. W. HURD.

For the Crisis.

Two kinds of Preachers.

There are two kinds of preachers, and their preaching produces two opposite results. One kind are a detriment to the cause, and the other a blessing. 1. One kind are loud-mouthed in their plea for "the truth," "the word," "the gospel," "the faith," and "the hope," (by which they mean a certain item of truth, or error, or both blended, which they have converted into a hobby, and have so magnified that they can see nothing else to be truth or gospel). Let me illustrate their position. Yonder is a large house with several rooms. Its owner employs several servants to labor in it, but instead of laboring as they were engaged to do, they begin to dispute about being in the house. Joe goes into the kitchen and contends that he is in the house, and the rest are not; Jim goes into the bedroom, and insists that Joe is mistaken, for he is in the house, and the rest are not; Jack blunders into the parlor, and declares that he is in the house, and the others are not; Fred marches up chamber, and affirms that he is occupying the house, and the rest are mistaken; Cuff takes possession of the woodshed, and exclaims that he is in the house; and Sambo jumps into the pig-pen, and pronounces that the house. Soon it is a perfect bedlam: Joe from the kitchen is calling, Come into the house, or Master will whip you; Jim, from the bedroom, cries, Come into the house, or you will get flogged awfully; Jack, from the parlor, roars, Come into the house, or you will get punished severely; Fred screams from the chamber, Come into the house; Cuff shrieks from the woodshed, Come into the house; while Sambo screams from the pig-pen, Come into the house. A part are in the house, and a part are not; and those who are, are not laboring for their Master, but are spending their time in quarreling with each other. Sambo in the pig-pen, though not in the house, no more comes short of doing the will of his master than Joe in the kitchen, or Jack in the parlor. Joe, Jim, Jack and Fred, unless they stop this fuss and go to work, though they are really in the house, will fare no better when Master comes than Cuff in the woodshed, or Sambo in the pig-pen. Those ministers who get one item of truth, and make that "the truth," and spend their time in denouncing others, do but little more good than those who call some error "the truth." Neither class lead sinners to Christ, or keep a church alive. Churches die out before them, and prayer meetings freeze up.

2nd. The other kind of preachers are praying men, and preach the truth, not in the spirit of contention, but in the spirit of love. They unite rather than divide with test questions. They feed the flock with food that keeps them thriving. They keep up prayer meetings so full of holy fire that they neither freeze up or chill to death. They spend more time in warning sinners, than in disputing. They do not annihilate the practical element of the gospel, to make more prominent the theoretical element. They gather souls into the fold of Christ. They have religion in their hearts, as well as theory in their heads. Lord, increase such preachers! W. SHELDON.

Concord Meetings.

The meetings in Concord, N. H., continue to increase in interest. The Spirit of the Lord is moving powerfully on the hearts of the people. It is really heart-cheering to see such deep interest in these last days of peril, when nearly all the inhabitants of our planet have turned rebels to the Son of God. We often hear it remarked concerning these meetings that there is very little excitement, but a calm, deep feeling, which shows that people are acting understandingly. They start like those who expect to make it a life business. They act like men who know what they are about, and not like those who move upon uncertainties. They seem to have counted the cost, and are willing to pay the price. The young converts are living children, who can give a reason of the hope within them. Their testimonies in the social meetings are "like apples of gold in pictures of silver."

On account of the crowds who came to hear, we have been obliged to move our meeting to the spacious City Hall, and yet there is not room for all who wish to hear. It seems like former days, when the multitudes flocked to hear about the coming of the Son of man. They are troubled at the signs of the times. They tremble before approaching events. They are satisfied we are living in no ordinary times, and honestly inquire, "What do these things mean?" They see that the popular syren song of a temporal millennium is supported by no reliable evidence; that the world is actually growing "worse and worse," as the prophet has declared will be the case "in the last days." They are fast losing their confidence in the popular and fashionable religion of the day, being satisfied that they must have something more substantial if they are to be accepted in the day of judgment. They are being fully convinced that we are living in the "perilous times" that immediately precede the coming of Christ. These, and other truths, have caused some thirty to give their hearts to the Lord. Twenty-six have been buried with Christ in baptism, and others are resolved to improve an early opportunity to bear the same cross.

Our love-feasts, Sabbath mornings, are heavenly seasons. In less than an hour, it has been our pleasure to hear seventy-five witnesses for Jesus and the blessed hope, all of whom are fondly expecting to see their Savior within a brief period. The old soldiers of the cross are greatly refreshed and quickened, and filled with new zeal in the important work of trying to save our fellow beings. Their faith and love have been much strengthened. All things now look encouraging for the cause of Christ in Concord. Brethren, pray for us.—G.

The War.

The bloody war clouds still hang over our country, with no prospect of any abatement in the awful storm, that is strewing our once happy land with the dead and dying, while their loved ones at home spend weary days and nights in saddest weeping. Demons may well rejoice over our nation, if sin and misery can give them delight.

We may soon expect to hear of some hard-fought battles, but the South seem as determined to continue the war as they did six months since. Although they have met with many reverses, they appear to become more determined for war than ever. The spirit of the duelist is taking possession of multitudes, who are fully decided to kill, or be killed. They had rather die than submit to the North.

During the last week there has been much excitement occasioned by the call of the President for more troops to defend the Capitol, and strengthen Gen. Banks, who has been driven back by the rebels across the Potomac. It was thought the enemy was intending to attack Washington, but those fears are now nearly subsided. It is expected that Gen. McClellan will soon commence operating upon Richmond, and that Gen. Halleck will fight the rebels at Corinth, in Mississippi. Both of these places are strong holds of the enemy. We may soon expect to hear of bloody deeds.

O how much we need the Prince of peace to rule our planet! We trust the glad hour will soon arrive.—G.

☞ We understand that Bro. J. F. Cotton intends to visit some of the principal towns in Mass., Maine, New Hampshire, and also in the Provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, during the summer, in canvassing for the new work just edited, and which has been so favorably noticed in the Crisis and other papers. We would bespeak for him a kind welcome among the friends.—G.

CORRECTION.—In our last week's editorial, we are made to say of our meeting in Concord that we "gathered around the sacramental table in the morning." It should read evening.—G.

"Disobedient to Parents."

Among other signs of "the last days," Paul tells us that children will be "disobedient to parents." There are but few parents who do not realize the truthfulness of this Scripture. The popular sentiment among Spiritualists, that every one is his own Lord, law-maker, and judge, seems to have been imbibed even by the children of our day; and the parent who endeavors to control his own household, as did Abraham and other patriarchs, has undertaken no easy task. When the well-governed children meet those who go unrestrained, as most do, they are told they are abused by their parents when they refuse to let them go with others as they wish, and soon poison the feelings of the otherwise good and obedient children, who, when they return home, show a very different spirit towards their kind parents, and more than hint that they do not have liberty like other children. They soon become reckless and disobedient and help to lead others astray.

We are often pained to witness the disobedience of children even in the families of those who are looking for the speedy coming of Jesus. Many mothers are complaining of their sore trials with their disobedient children. Their once happy homes have become scenes of anarchy and confusion. Thus Satan is overthrowing many and binding them in continual bondage, by means of their impatience at unruly children. It is truly a great trial, but impatience only makes the difficulty greater. Disobedient children, and fretting parents, will turn any paradise into bedlam, and start a whole family on the road to destruction.

It is now a common thing to see the little child rule the entire household. When requested to do any thing, instead of going promptly to perform the act, we hear the blunt, "I shan't," or "I won't." Instead of seeing that her command is obeyed, the mother says, "Johnny, you should not speak so," and thus ends the matter till she performs the act herself. When she tells Henry he must not have the book, he begins to scream, and mother gives him the forbidden article. In this way she learns her child to cry for things it needs, till all the family must yield to its foolish whims or have a horrid squall. Thus, in early days, the parents teach their children lessons of self-indulgence and disobedience, that prepare them to rush headlong to ruin.

This last-day sign of disobedience to parents is now standing out in prominence before the world. We do not see any room for doubt in the matter. This sin lies, in a great measure, at the door of indulgent and careless parents. The Lord foresaw how it would be, foretold it by his servant Paul, and we live to see its accomplishment.

We hope every parent will carefully read and remember the following excellent "Rules for home education." They are from the London News, C. W., and should be carefully preserved. Do not pass over them carelessly. They are very important rules. They should be engraven upon the memory of every parent, and become the regulations of every household where there are children. They should be as firmly established as the laws of the Medes and Persians, which could not be changed. Let your children understand that they must abide by these rules, because they are for their good; that this is the reason, and the only reason. See that you perform all on your part, and the result will be blessed; and of many desolate places it would soon be said,

"Home, home, sweet home,
There is no place like home."

The following are the RULES:—G.

1. From your children's earliest infancy, inculcate the necessity of instant obedience.
2. Unite firmness with gentleness. Let your children always understand that you mean exactly what you say.
3. Never promise them anything unless you are sure you can give them what you promise.
4. If you tell a child to do anything, show him how to do it, and see that it is done.
5. Always punish your children for willfully disobeying you, but never punish in anger.
6. Never let them perceive that they can vex you, or make you lose your self-command.
7. If they give way to petulance and temper, wait till they are calm, and then gently reason with them on the impropriety of their conduct.
8. Remember that a little present punishment, when the occasion arises, is much more effectual than the threatening of a greater punishment, should the fault be renewed.
9. Never give your children any thing because they cry for it.
10. On no account allow them to do at one time what you have forbidden, under the same circumstances, at another.
11. Teach them that the only sure and easy way to appear good, is to be good.
12. Accustom them to make their little recitals the perfect truth.
13. Never allow of tale-bearing.
14. Teach them that self-denial, not self-indulgence, is the appointed and sure method of securing happiness.—Lon. News.

Dark Day in 1780.

When in Concord, we were privileged to see an old almanac for the year 1780. As we are frequently told that the unparalleled darkness on May 19th, 1780, was occasioned by an eclipse of the sun, we wish to satisfy all such persons that it was impossible, without a miracle. It is a well known fact that an eclipse of the sun can happen only at new moon. In the almanac of 1780, it is stated,—

"There will be four eclipses this year; two of the sun, and two of the moon.

The first will be an eclipse of the sun, the 4th day of May, about 8 o'clock in the morning, invisible to us by reason of the moon's south latitude.

The second will be of the moon, Thursday, May 18th, about 6 o'clock in the morning, scarcely visible to us."

These facts forever settle the matter that the dark day of May 19th, 1780, was not caused by an eclipse of the sun.—G.

Meeting of Bishops in Rome.

All the Bishops of the world are requested to meet at Rome, June 8th. It is said the object of the Pope in calling this meeting is for consultation on political matters; while the avowed reason is for the purpose of canonizing some saints, so as to have some more to whom they can pray.

Here is some more fruit of the belief that dead men are alive and can hear our prayers. If it were not for a belief in this great error, no doubt the whole system of Papacy would have crumbled into dust long since, and all the other false systems of religion would have lain in the same heap of ruins; while the christian religion alone holds out to man the only possible hope of a future life, which is by a literal resurrection of the dead, or a translation, like that of Enoch and Elijah.

The following account of the coming meeting of the Bishops is from The Catholic.—G.

THE ASSEMBLING OF BISHOPS AT ROME.—The solemn canonization that is to take place at Rome on the 8th of June promises to be one of the most splendid of its kind. "When a certain number of the Bishops shall have arrived at Rome, the Pope will hold with them and the Sacred College a public consistory, at which the claims of the different parties will be duly weighed. The Pope will close the meeting by saying that on a subject of such gravity he must consult the Cardinals and Prelates. He will then hold several semi-public consistories, in which the subject of the canonizations will be discussed, and at which each Cardinal and Bishop will express his opinion. On the day of the public ceremony the Church of the Vatican will be hung with draperies and brilliantly lighted up. In the nave will be suspended medallions on which will be painted a representation of the miracles performed by those who are about to be canonized. At ten in the morning a long procession will descend from the Sistine Chapel, between a double line of troops. It will be composed of all the clergy of Rome, each bearing a lighted wax taper in his hand, the Roman ecclesiastical and civil authorities, and the officers of the Pope's household; next will come his Holiness, dressed in his richest Pontifical robes, borne in state under a canopy, and having in his hand a lighted taper. The procession will proceed along the double colonnade of St. Peter's, and then enter the main building. When in the church, the Pope will place himself on his throne, where he will receive the homage of all the Cardinals, Patriarchs, Archbishops and Bishops. The painted standards of the saints and martyrs will be ranged round the throne. The Cardinal Procureur of the Canonization, accompanied by a consistorial advocate, will then advance, and make the three customary requests that his Holiness will proceed with the ceremony. To the first the Pope will reply through one of his secretaries, that in an affair of such importance he must have assistance of prayer, and, descending from his throne, he will read the Litanies of the Saints. To the second request the answer will be that he must invoke the light of the Holy Spirit, and the Veni Creator will be sung. To the third the secretary will announce that the Pope is about to pronounce his definite decree which will be afterwards read aloud. When the document has been read, his Holiness will commence singing the Te Deum, which will be continued by the choristers of the Cathedral. All the people present will fall on their knees, several pieces of cannon placed near the church, as well as the guns of St. Angelo, will fire a salute, and all the church bells of Rome will ring for an hour. After the Te Deum the official invocation of the new saints will take place and the Pope will give his first benediction. A grand mass will be afterwards celebrated by his Holiness, and at the close of it the Pope will deliver a panegyric on those who have just been canonized. His Holiness will afterwards give a solemn benediction from the balcony of St. Peter's, and then retire to his apartments. In the evening the Vatican will be illuminated."

The Present Time.

"Lonely and weary, by sorrows opprest,
Onward I hasten with lodgings for rest."

Never in my weary pilgrimage did this beautiful hymn seem to express so forcibly the feelings of my burdened heart as at this time. In viewing the condition of things in general, they present a dismal aspect in view of the evident nearness of the judgment. The condition of the professing church of Christ is truly mournful. The feelings of resentment amid the nations seem to become more vengeful, bitter, and furious. O! what horrid wrath and burning indignation is manifest now in our own land as brother comes down by the sword of brother, and in thousands of instances the fire of patriotism kindled to a glowing heat of fury by the so-called Reverends of these last degenerate days. (One word on the above term. I never did like it; and for the last twenty years I have considered it a flattering title; in fact, a useless prefix. See Job 32: 21, 22. This digression is not to provoke a reply, nor incite the least alienation of feeling in the bosom of any one that may read this.)

Fearful, indeed, it seems to me, is the retribution awaiting those who have directly or indirectly caused the shedding of blood under the new covenant. Alas! it seems as if some undefinable agency is at work causing men to err. Isa. 30: 20. Amid the general derangement of the above departments, earth appears to be waxing old as doth a garment, and as a vesture will soon be changed.

"Old mother earth is wan and pale,
Her face is wrinkled sore;
Her locks are blanched, her heart is cold,
Her garments stiff with gore."

Fading, still fading, changing, still changing, is the destiny of all things in this present dying world, doomed by the fiat of Jehovah to continue thus until the last grand, glorious and eternal change, when he shall make all things new. "He which testifieth these things saith, surely I come quickly. Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

After a somewhat tedious journey by private conveyance, at times over very rough roads, in company with my companion in the journeyings and trials of these last days, we reached this place in Western N. Y., and expect to toil and labor for the saving of sinners for a certain season in the highways and hedges, if the Lord will. O! when will some of the preachers that are treading round and round in old beaten tracks on the heels of each other, give heed to the calls from the regions beyond?

Dearly beloved, may grace, mercy and peace rest upon the faithful in Christ Jesus. Amen. S. S. BREWER.

Extracts from Herman Schultz,*

Dr. of Philosophy and Prof. of Theology of the University at Goettingen, Germany, 1861.

"The religion of revelation presents to us the sentence in the fullest clearness: 'Life is only in God.'

"In the New Testament Christ presents God to us as such, who has the life within himself, as the living God, and Paul calls him the one who only has immortality. (1 Tim. 6: 16.) And as the logos, which was with God, is the life, still the Son has it again from the Father, and inasmuch as he is one with him. All, however, which proceedeth from the Father through the Son, is life. As the Spirit is the life giving power, so food, which the Son giveth, is the life; so are the words, which he speaks, words of eternal life; and he can give the living water, whose fountain flows into eternal life. (John 6, 63, 33, 68; 4, 10, 14.) The tendency therefore of the whole Scripture is, to present to us God as the only possessor and fountain of life."

"It is a matter of course that, if any being besides God is to have life, such a life which cannot perish, that being can have this life only by some kind of relation to or connection with God. The consequence hereof is, that all created beings have no life within themselves, therefore they may according to their nature perish. This is the natural result of being created. Wherever any being is caused to live by another one, the former therefore having the cause of its existence not within itself, it follows as a matter of course that its existence may have an end whenever the originating power is withdrawn. Any being, which at some time has not existed, may at some future period have a time of non-existence again."

"Any thing created cannot be a part of God; therefore nothing which is created, can have the fountain of life within itself which is in God alone. But that which has not the fountain of life within itself, its existence is dependent on some other being; therefore is not mortal, though it may exist forever."

"We call immortal, where life cannot cease, or which has the power within itself to be eternal. But this a created being can never be by nature. It can never feel itself immortal; for, as essential to our being, we can only feel that which we have independent of any thing else, that is, within ourselves. Anything created may be eternal; we have admitted this in regard to all matter, but it is not incorruptible, not immortal. Immortality and incorruptibility are no natural qualities, which a being might receive by virtue of its creation; for they contradict the meaning of creation, as such, entirely. The connection with God, the imparting of life, as it was done at the creation, makes us beings, which in reality are, which have existence, individual existence, but are not immortal. All created beings, whose life and existence is dependent on the power of life, which the divine being imparts to them, there is a possibility that this spirit of life, while imparting itself to other beings, abandons the former and lets them go back again to the original substance, from which they came."—Com. by L. REIMER.

Holiness—Yes, Holiness.

Holiness now; holiness forever;—now is the time, the set time, the important, the momentous! All nature, all grace—the heavens above, the earth beneath—with united voice cry out thunderingly: "Be ye holy, for I am holy." The present crisis is a crisis fraught immensely with things unheard of. The world is on fire! If ever holiness to the Lord, the presenting the body with all its powers, a living sacrifice, a whole burnt-offering, it is now!

"The moments fly—a minute's gone!
The minutes fly—an hour is run!
The day is fled—the night is here,
Thus flies a week—a month—a year!"

Now, now is the time, the accepted time, the day of salvation. Now, if ever, holiness, entire consecratedness should be sounded out to the ends of the earth. Every sermon, every prayer, every testimony, every word of exhortation, should be fraught richly, more or less, of this entire giving-up to God-service. Sin, every sin—little sins, great sins, sins of thought, sins of deed, of omission and commission, national sins, city sins, family sins, individual sins; sins in high places and in low, sins of the flesh and of the spirit—all sin should be repented of, put away, banished forever, as far as the East is from the West.

The Church, first and foremost, should be cleansed, purified, sanctified, washed, made white in the blood of the Lamb, meet for God-service, shine forth as the sun, fair as the moon, terrible in righteousness as an army with banners. Ministers should preach holiness; editors should preach it, pray it, live it, raise the standard high as heaven. Let holiness be written on our foreheads, our door-posts, "the bells of our horses," on our swords and bayonets, every instrument of war on the battle-field. Let "holiness to the Lord" beam forth radiantly in every thought, word, deed, every moving muscle. Let holiness to the Lord be reiterated, sounded out from the pulpit, the press, pervade every church, every household, every encampment. Finally, brethren, be strong in the Lord and in the power of his might. Put on the whole armor of God, and over all the shield of faith, by which ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked. Take also the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God.

"Rise to a higher, holier life,
Ye who are called the sons of God,
And girded with the Spirit's sword,
Go nobly to the strife."

From Bro. J. Lyle.

BRN. GRANT AND MORGAN:—In the Crisis of May 21st, there is an article signed "H," copied from the Christian Witness and Church Advocate." At the close, the writer asserts that Mr. Miller did an evil work in fixing dates, or, to use his own words,—"A vast amount of injury was done by Mr. M. in this respect." In the same No. of the Crisis there is a biographical sketch of Mr. Miller's ministry, which abundantly proves that he proclaimed his message in demonstration of the Spirit and of power. Instead of infidels and ungodly men being injured, many were saved, and testimony is adduced showing that one at least remained free from the snare of scepticism long after the passing of the time in which the Lord was expected to come. In view of the facts recorded in that biographical article, can we deny that Mr. Miller was moved by the Spirit of the Lord to preach as he did? We know that God sent Jeremiah and Jonah to proclaim messages which caused them bitter sorrow, because the threatened judgment was delayed beyond the given time. The enemies of truth took advantage of the merciful delay to brand these faithful servants as injurious, but at last the messages of these men were vindicated; and will not the divine rule be applied to this truth-resisting generation?

Were I permitted to speak in the ear of "H.", I would say kindly, but earnestly—Dear Bro., let us not use disparaging reflections on any part of Bro. Miller's ministry in our efforts to get men to observe the signs of the times; rather let us justify it by plain and applicable scripture precedents. God will soon vindicate Bro. M.'s ministry.

Newark, N. J., May, 1862.

From M. S.

TO THE FRIENDS IN THE FAITH:—Being fully persuaded that the time of the end draweth nigh, and that we as professed followers of the like precious faith should spare no exertions in our efforts to promote the interest of this glorious cause, I have long felt a desire to express myself in regard to this important subject. Although we may be strangers and pilgrims sojourning in a strange land, we have no good reason for withholding our testimony in favor of the gospel truth. And we more especially who believe are about to witness the last struggle of the world in its deplorable condition as predicted by the prophets and portrayed by the apostles. And that we have arrived at the most critical period of this world's history since the days of Noah, is a question beyond a doubt. While the all absorbing topic of war has taken hold of the minds of the people, let us remember our duty and not fail to do it. For the Master hath told us these things shall come to pass in the last days, and hath commanded us to watch lest that day overtake us as a thief. Dear brethren and sisters, let us take heed to these things, that we may be found blameless, and accounted worthy to enter in to the joy of our Lord.

Obituary Notices.

Died, at Carleton, St. John's, New Brunswick, April 5th, 1862, James L. Lockhart, aged fifty-seven years.

He was born in Horton, Nova Scotia, and was converted in early life, and united with the Baptist church. For many years, he endeavored to labor in the word of God in various localities, particularly among the poor, and in regions where they were as sheep without a shepherd.

About 1860, through the influence of the family of his son-in-law, Bro. J. McCandis, of Boston, and others, he was led to read various publications, such as "The Voice of the Church," "Thessalonica," etc, and came to understand and embrace more fully the hope of the gospel of Christ. He was present at the Boston conference in 1861, where I formed his acquaintance, and where he was much interested. His Bible thenceforth became like a new book. He studied it as never before.

He went to Carleton, and began to preach with renewed zeal the one faith delivered to the saints. At length his old disease, spasmodic asthma, attacked him again. His illness was very painful, but after he had been sick for some days, he desired to be carried to the house of prayer and preach once more; his request was complied with, and there he poured out from a full soul a discourse from Jer. 20: 9,—"Then I said, I will not make mention of him, nor speak any more in his name: but his word was in mine heart as a burning fire shut up in my bones, and I was weary with forbearing, and I could not stay."

In his diary, he wrote, "March 9th. In the evening tried to preach from Jer. 20: 9 It was a most precious season to me; although weak in body, I felt the Lord present to help. A large congregation, and very solemn. I told the people I felt in some measure as though it was my last sermon; and to-day (March 12) it really appears it will be my last, as my suffering is so intense with spasmodic asthma. The Lord's will be done. Amen."

This was his last public labor, though to friends and physicians who gathered around, he preached once or twice more in his sick room, with an unction and power which surprised them all. He prayed for patience in his trials, and passed without a murmur through the severest pains, until at last he fell asleep. He was buried at Portland, where funeral services were held; but his friend and brother, Elder Robinson of St. John's, preached at Carleton a most comforting discourse from the words of David,—"As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness. I shall be satisfied when I awake in thy likeness"—Ps. 17: 15.

He rests in peace, and his wife and children sorrow not as those that have no hope. May the family meet unbroken in the gathering day. H. L Hastings.

Died, in West Union, Iowa, April 30th, 1862, of quick consumption, Ai T., son of Nason and Miriam Hoyt, aged sixteen years, two months and twenty-two days.

Our dear son was sick twenty-one days. He bore his sufferings with patience and resignation. When he was taken sick he was unreconciled to God, but twelve days before his death being told by his physician that he would not probably live long, he became deeply concerned for his eternal interest. He immediately sent for Bro. Ricker and wife, of the M E church, and other christian friends, to pray with him (we have no advent preacher nor church here.) His repentance was genuine He sought the Lord with all his heart, and two days after, while conversing with Sister Ricker, he was enabled to lay hold on Christ as his Savior, and to rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory; and from that time until his death, when he had his reason, he seemed happy in a Savior's love. He preached Christ to all that came to see him, and faithfully warned them to prepare to meet him in the kingdom, and obtained a promise from many of his young friends that they would try to meet him there. He was willing to live or die, as the Lord willed. But sometimes he would say that he would rather die, for he feared that if he was to get well again he would backslide and be lost. Three days before his death he became delirious, but when spoken to about God, he would seem to collect his reason, and say that he was happy—that he loved God and God loved him, and would frequently exclaim, "Precious Jesus!" About 10 A. M., before he died, he seemed to revive. He said that he should die that day. He seemed calm, and gave directions about where he would be buried. While he could he would say that he was happy, and when he could no longer speak, when asked if he was happy, he would smile and nod his head. His sufferings were very great, but they are now over. He sweetly sleeps in Jesus. We mourn his loss, but not as those that have no hope, for we believe that they that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him; that Jesus will soon come and ransom his people from the grave; then we expect to meet our dear Ai, together with our little son and daughter that have gone before, in a land where there will be no more mourning, sorrow nor death, and tears will be wiped from all faces.

We desire the prayers of all the dear children of God that this affliction may be sanctified to our eternal good. Funeral sermon by Eld. R. Ricker, from 2 Peter 3: 9.

FOREIGN NEWS.

By the arrival of the Europa, we have foreign news from Liverpool to May 17th, Queenstown the 18th.

An Imperial decree opens the harbors of Nikolatiff and Chessoni in the Crimea to foreign ships after the 13th of June.

Prince Napoleon was received with great enthusiasm in Naples. He had a long interview with Victor Emmanuel.

The Pope is not very easy in his mind as to his permanence at Rome. "If I am compelled to quit the Vatican," he has been heard to say, "I know where to betake myself to."

The Suez canal approaches completion; 22,000 workmen are employed on the work.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

A Washington dispatch of Wednesday says: "The President has fully assumed the functions of Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy. No movement is made in either branch of the service without his knowledge. Indeed, it is asserted that every dispatch sent to the officers in command is first submitted to him."

Chicago, Ill., May 31. A special dispatch from Cairo, says that Little Rock is fully occupied by Federalists, and that what citizens remain are decidedly loyal. The Arkansas State Legislature had scattered and the Governor fled the State.

Vicksburg has surrendered to the Federal fleet.

New York, May 29. Charleston papers of the 21st inst., state that four of our vessels shelled three islands in the harbor the day previous.

Martial law is proclaimed in Charleston, and the citizens are fearful of a surrender.

Washington. Gen. McClellan telegraphs to the Secretary of War that the battle of Hanover Court House resulted in a complete rout of the enemy. It is stated that we have taken 500 prisoners, and more are coming in. The loss of the enemy is set down at 1000. Our men buried 100 of their dead. Our loss is 379 in killed, wounded and missing, of which 53 were killed.

New York. In the fight near Strasburg on Saturday, Company A of the Vermont Cavalry were all lost, being either captured or killed, except Capt. Plate, his Lieutenant, and half a dozen men, who made their escape most creditably. Major Collins is among the captured, and Major Sawyer made good his escape.

The rebels displayed the white flag with black bars.

Battle at Corinth.

Corinth, May 28. Three strong reconnoitering columns advanced this morning from Gen. Thomas on the right, Buell on the centre, and Pope on the left, for the purpose of feeling the enemy and unmasking his batteries.

The enemy contested his ground hotly at each point, but was driven back with considerable loss.

Gen. Pope's column encountered the strongest opposition, where we lost 25 in killed and wounded. The enemy left 30 dead on the field

We captured several officers and privates. Although the enemy disputed the passage of the Creek Bridge sharply, we hold possession on the Southern side.

The affair is considered a decided success in a military point of view, having gained a very strong position right in the teeth of the enemy.

May 30. Gen. Pope's heavy batteries opened upon the enemy's intrenchments yesterday about 10 o'clock, A. M., and soon drove the rebels from their advanced batteries. Three of our divisions are already in the enemy's advanced works, about three-quarters of a mile from Corinth, which is in flames. The enemy has fallen back of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad.

May 31. Yesterday morning our reserve divisions were brought up and our entire front moved forward, the men having two day's rations in their haversacks.

During the day we kept up a tremendous cannonading, shelling the woods furiously. Last night we threw up breastworks along the entire front, and slept on our arms within one thousand yards of the enemy's breastworks.

At six o'clock this morning General Pope entered Corinth without the slightest resistance and took possession. At the same time the Mayor met Gen. Nelson and surrendered the town to him. There were no inhabitants remaining except women, children and old men. The rebels succeeded in carrying away everything except a few provisions, which with the warehouses and railroad depot were burned before we arrived. They had been moving away troops more than six days. The most of the troops have gone towards Grand Junction.

The rebel rear guard, under Bragg, 10,000 strong, marched southward at midnight. The citizens assert that Beauregard was there and left with it. The rebel fortifications were five miles long. They could have been carried by storm at any time.

Battle at Richmond.

Washington, June 1. The following dispatch was received at the War Department this afternoon :—

Field of Battle, June 1,—12 M.

We have had a desperate battle, in which the corps of Generals Sumner, Heintzelman and Keyes have been engaged against greatly superior numbers.

Yesterday, at one o'clock, the enemy, taking advantage of a terrible storm, which had flooded the valley of the Chickahominy, attacked our troops on the right flank.

General Casey's division, which was in the first line, gave way unaccountably and disunitedly. This caused a confusion, during which the guns and baggage were lost, but Generals Heintzelman and Kearney most gallantly brought up their troops, which checked the enemy. At the same time, however, we succeeded by great exertion in bringing across Generals Sedgwick and Richardson's divisions, who drove back the enemy at the point of the bayonet, covering the ground with his dead.

This morning the enemy attempted to renew the conflict, but was everywhere repulsed. We have taken many prisoners, among whom is Gen. Pettigrew and Col. Long. Our loss is heavy, but that of the enemy must be enormous. With the exception of Gen. Casey's division the men behaved splendidly. Several fine bayonet charges have been made. The 2d Excelsior regiment made two to-day.

(Signed) Geo. B. McClellan, Major General Commanding.

Washington, June 1. During the whole of the battle this morning Professor Lowe's balloon was overlooking the terrible scene from an altitude of about 2000 feet. Telegraphic communication from the balloon to General McClellan and in direct connection with the military wires was successfully maintained. Every movement of the enemy was observed and instantly reported.

This is believed to be the first time in which a balloon reconnoisance has been successfully made during a battle, and certainly the first time in which a telegraph station has been established in the air to report the movements of the enemy and the progress of a battle. The advantage to General McClellan must have been immense.

The World's correspondence says, of eight or nine hundred men in the fight at Front Royal only 150 have returned.

The Virginia Legislature has appropriated $200,000 to remove the women, children and decrepid persons from Richmond to a place of safety.

St. Louis, May 29. A dispatch from Cairo says, trouble is again breaking out in Western Tennessee. A considerable force of rebels are said to be at Trenton, ready to march on Union City and Hickman.

Union men from Weakly and Obion counties were flocking to Hickman for protection.

Washington, June 2. Information was received at the War Department this evening that Gen. Fremont had encountered and beaten, near Strasburg, yesterday afternoon and this morning, a part of Jackson's army, which is in full retreat.

Near Strasburg, June 1. Gen. Fremont, with a strong column, left Franklin last Sunday, and by rapid forced marches has crossed the Shenandoah mountain ranges, marching nearly one hundred miles over difficult roads, with little means of transportation and no supplies in the country. This morning, five miles from Strasburg, he overtook Gen. Jackson in full retreat, with his whole force on the road from Winchester to Strasburg. Col. Claserut came upon the enemy strongly posted with artillery which opened as soon as the head of his column approached. Gen. Fremont rapidly brought his main column up and formed in line of battle. Gen. Jackson declined to fight, and while holding Claserut in check with a portion of his troops, withdrew his main forces and continued his retreat.

In the skirmish five of the 8th Virginia and two of the 60th Ohio were wounded. The enemy's loss is unknown. Twenty-five prisoners were taken by our cavalry.

June 2. Gen. Fremont's advance brigade, under Col. Claserut, occupied Strasburg last night without resistance. Jackson is rapidly retreating

St. Louis, June 2. Report says the mouth of the Arkansas river is blockaded by Federal vessels.

Mobile papers of the 26th ult., found in a rebel camp at Corinth, contain a dispatch from Charleston, stating that the Federal fleet had just passed two batteries in Stono river, and were within eight miles of the city, where great excitement existed.

Washington, June 2. The following dispatch was received at the War Department this morning.

Halleck's Headquarters, Department Miss., near Corinth, June 1.

The following dispatch has been received from Gen. Pope to Gen. Halleck:

"It gives me pleasure to report the brilliant success of the expedition sent out on the 28th instant under Col. Elliot with the 2d Iowa cavalry.

After forced marches, day and night, he finally succeeded in reaching the Mobile and Ohio Railroad at Boonesville, on the 30th. He destroyed the track in many places, both south and north of the town, blew up one culvert, and destroyed the switch and track, burned up the depot and locomotives and a train of twenty-six cars loaded with supplies of every kind, destroyed 10,000 stand of small arms, three pieces of artillery, and a great quantity of clothing and ammunition, and paroled 2000 prisoners whom he could not keep with his cavalry.

(Signed) John Pope, Major General."

H. W. Halleck, Major Gen. Commanding.

Halleck's Headquarters. Our cavalry found all the tents of the enemy standing, took hundreds of barrels of beef and 7000 stand of arms in a large encampment on the Mobile and Ohio Railroad, said to belong to Price and Van Dorn's forces, who left on Thursday night.

Washington. A dispatch from Gen. Banks to the Secretary of War states that the 5th New York cavalry entered Martinsburg this morning and passed several miles beyond, where they encountered the enemy's cavalry and captured several prisoners, a wagon of muskets, ammunition, and an American flag.

Fortress Monroe, June 2. The fortifications at Pig Point were blown up to-day by the Navy, together with the rebel barracks in the vicinity.

New York, June 2. The World states that the Government has decided to accept all three months' militia regiments that will offer up to June 10th next.

The Rhode Island Quarterly Conference will hold its next session at River Point, R I., commencing Wednesday, June 25th, at 2 o'clock, P. M. We expect this to be one of the best meetings the conference has ever held, and hope it will be largely attended. Brethren in the ministry, and delegates from churches, let the church in River Point be cheered by your presence and strengthened by your councils H. F. Carpenter, Sec

May 20th, 1862.

Notice.

A special conference of the Iowa, Minn., and Wis. Christian Conference will be held in connection with the grove meeting at Hesper, Almikee Co., Iowa, July 4th, 1862. Hope to see many preachers and delegates, as there is business of importance, in which all are interested. Wm. Sheldon, Pres

Peter S. W. Deyo, Clerk.

P. S. We expect to have the New England Mission Tent.

Notice of Eld. J. V. Himes.

I shall commence a series of meetings in Melbourne, C. E, Wednesday, June 18th, and continue over the Sabbath, or longer, and shall also visit Danville, and other places in the vicinity, as the door may open. My address will be Melbourne from the 15th of June and onward—but Boston, Mass., till then. Any persons or societies wishing lectures on the personal coming of Christ, and the signs and time of the nearness of the event, will address me without delay.

J. V. H.

Three Days Meeting at Plainville, Ct.

Eld. S. G. Mathewson will commence a meeting in Plainville, Thursday evening, June 5th, and continue each evening through the week and on the Sabbath. As Bro. Mathewson cannot visit all his old friends in Conn. at this time, we invite all of them to come up to this meeting, and enjoy it with us. It is Bro. M.'s request to meet you at Plainville.

George Morgan.

Notice.

For the brethren at Machias Port, Me.

I have found a Brother that will come and stay a few weeks in that vicinity, in July, if the brethren wish him. They must notify him soon, so that he can make arrangements to go when some one comes to Boston that will take him on board. Direct to J. W. White, Portsmouth, N. H. This is the man you want.

Hiram Munger.

Notice.

The Lord willing, there will be a conference meeting in Buchanan, Mich., to commence on the evening of the 26th of June, and continue over the following Sabbath. We hope to see a general gathering of our scattered friends at this meeting. Let us make this meeting a subject of prayer, that much good be accomplished. Bro. Israel Dammon is expected to be present.

D. R. & M. S. Mansfield.

Special Book Notice.

Now ready, "Thrilling and Instructive Developments," by Eld. (late Abbe) M. B Czechowski. Price $1.00, post paid.

Those who wish for a copy will please address John F. Cotton, Box 1079, Boston, Mass.

To Brethren indebted for Tracts.

I have said nothing to you for a good while. I am now almost entirely out of tracts. I want to publish more—also books I do not intend to get in debt, but pay as I go. I am hoping immediately to make important changes in my business, so as to furnish more books for less money than heretofore. Now all who owe for books will confer a favor by paying up what they owe if they can, or if they are unable to do that, let me know the fact. All the books I have sent you have cost me the money, and I wish to send out more when I can. Those who wish for books or tracts can send their orders as usual. They are free to the poor. Let us hear from you. Direct to H. L. Hastings, Boston, Mass.

P. S. Persons indebted to the Crisis office for books, should send the pay to Bro. Grant as soon as they can conveniently. H. L. H.

Notice.—The Tract Fund.

Tracts of the old approved sorts are soon to be manufactured in large quantities for the Christian Publication Society. Churches or individuals who have contributed to the $500 Tract Fund, can have a portion of their donations returned to them in tracts, if they wish; and they can have the tracts printed with a notice of their place of worship on each one, at a small cost, (say 50 cts.), provided they wish for not less than five hundred copies of any one tract, and will send me immediate directions about it. The price of tracts to contributors will be about 1800 pages for $1 00.

As the $500 Fund is now made up, subscribers who have not paid will remit their subscriptions to Miles Grant, Boston, Mass., as soon as convenient. Persons still wishing to contribute can do likewise, for "yet there is room." H. L. Hastings, President.

Boston, April 21st, '62.

Subscription to the Tract Fund of the C. P. S.

Amount pledged from Oct. 22d, 1861, to May 1st, 1862, $505.74.

Let others who wish to aid in this work send their pledges or subscriptions to Miles Grant, Editor of the World's Crisis, Boston, Mass. Any amount is acceptable, from a talent of gold down to a widow's mite. H. L Hastings, Pres. C. P. S.

The Crisis for the Soldiers.

We will send a few copies of the Crisis free to soldiers in camp, if it is desired, and ordered by them, or by their friends. Any persons wishing to send the Crisis to their friends in the army, can have it sent for half price, or 50 cts. for six months, or $1.00 per year. Send orders to Miles Grant, Boston, Mass., and keep him notified of all changes in location, etc.

H. L. Hastings, Pres. C. P. S.

Grove and Camp Meeting.

Good news to the happy souls who gathered last year at Tremont, Mass., for divine worship in the grove There will be another grove and campmeeting in the vicinity of the Tremont Depot, West Wareham, Mass., commencing Tuesday evening, June 24th, 1862, and continuing over the following Sunday. Eld. M. Grant, H L Hastings, if possible, and others will be present to preach the word. Many things promise to make this an interesting and profitable meeting. First, the blessing of God upon us last year. Those who were there will welcome us again, and bring others with them Second, its location—easy of access to many churches. It is situated on the Fairhaven and Boston, R. R., at its junction with the Cape Cod R. R.; fare reduced on this road from Middleboro and New Bedford We expect a good representation from New Bedford, Mattapoisett, Plymouth, Carver, Middleboro, Taunton, and perhaps from Boston. Third, its accommodations; a beautiful grove, in the midst of an orderly people; good board provided cheaper than by ourselves; lodging in private dwellings near by, or in tents, as chosen. Fourth, the cheering evidences that we are nearing our eternal home, cannot fail to awaken an unusual interest in every believing heart. Come then, one and all, prepare for a good meeting; pray much about it; come to labor for precious souls, come full of the blessing of Christ; come early; come to stay through the meeting; come, and may many kind friends in Tremont bless the day of our coming.

In behalf of many brethren,

H. F. Carpenter.

Conference Notice.

The next session of the Maine Central Quarterly Conference will be held in Belgrade (Baptist meeting-house) commencing Thursday, June 12th, at six o'clock, P. M., and continue over the Sabbath. Brethren from abroad will call on Bro. David Rockwood (Rockwood's Corner.) We hope to see a full meeting, and the power of God in our midst to save sinners. Come, brethren and sisters. This is a new place. The hearts of the people are open to feed man and beast, and let us try to feed them with the word of life.

Per order, H. B. Sevey.

I. C. Wellcome, Scribe.

Special Book Notice.

In fulfillment of a long cherished purpose, I am happy to present my friends with a list of my books, at reduced prices, as follows, till further notice:—

The Voice of the Church, 75 cts.

Great Controversy, paper 25 cts; cloth (small edition) 30 cts.

Thessalonica, or The Model Church, paper 25 cts.

Spiritualism, by Ramsey, 15 cts. paper, 25 cts. cloth.

Pauline Theology, 10 cts.

Reasons for my Hope, paper, 18 cts., (ready in a few weeks.)

Retribution, or the Doom of the Ungodly, 18 cts., and free to all who deny the resurrection of the unjust, provided they will read it through.

Tracts from my list, 1800 pages for $1 00. A full supply nearly ready. Tracts by mail, 1800 pages for $1.00. Free to the poor. Several German tracts at 3 cents each.

The Publication Society will sell the above works from the Crisis office, at the same rates; and I intend, (D.V.) after a month or so, to keep a full assortment constantly on hand.

Let orders come in, and they shall be attended to, if the Lord will. A still further discount from these prices will be made to those who order quantities, and send the money with their order, directed to MILES GRANT, or H. L. HASTINGS, Boston, Mass.

A Liberal Offer.

Being satisfied that time is short, and that what is done must be done quickly; and feeling anxious to do what we can to arouse a sleeping world and church, we make the following liberal offer:—Any one who will send three or more new subscribers to the Crisis for six months or one year, with advance pay for the same, shall receive at wholesale prices, including postage, any of our books and tracts they may select, amounting to one-third the value of the money sent. For instance, if they send three dollars, they receive one dollar's worth of books or tracts; for six dollars, we send them two dollar's worth; for twelve dollars, four dollar's worth, etc. Let every reader take hold of the work in earnest, and help scatter tracts, books and papers like autumnal leaves.

Miles Grant, per order of Publishing Committee.

Notice.

Eld. Thomas Smith, Bangor, Me., 90 Union St., has for sale Bro. Hastings' works, "World to Come," by Hill, "Voice of the Church," edited by D. T. Taylor; also a supply of Bro. Higgins' and Wellcome's medicine.

"What is in a Name?

"Let sainted writers stand aside,
To us there seems no profit;
We heed all else as idle dreams,
Unless your names endorse it."

Judge not so harshly, brother mine,
Those who may differ from you;
Think not that you alone are wise—
Give others all their due.

But there is comfort in the thought,
God judgeth not like men;
He still reserves his "hidden ones,"
And works some good by them.

"I never knew you," saith the Lord,
To some who boast a name;
Eternity will soon reveal
Records unknown to fame.

Elijah, bold and fearless, stood
Lone witness for his God,—
Unknown by name, three thousand more,
Who worshiped the same Lord.

How knowest thou, my zealous friend,
The way God's Spirit chooseth?
He honor puts on nameless ones,
And means, men own not, useth.

And may not we this truth discern
Throughout creation's plan,—
God perfects praise from infant lips,
And thus hides pride from man.

Prophetic Signs.

"Surely the Lord God will do nothing but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets." Amos 3: 7. "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him; and he will show them his covenant."—Ps. 25: 14. "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you. Henceforth I call you not servants, for the servant knoweth not what his Lord doeth," says Jesus Christ. "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." Jesus has given us the signs that should precede his second coming; and the prophets have witnessed the same. The darkening of the sun in 1780 was a sign of the end of two periods: the tribulation of the saints, and the end of the sackcloth state of the two witnesses—the Old and New Testaments. For immediately after the end of those days, or 1260 years, "the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light; and the stars shall fall from heaven." God had prepared a people previous to the giving of these signs that would know the meaning of them when they took place, and would believe and receive them as truth.

Only 160 years before this sign of the sun and moon being darkened, our Puritan fathers planted their little colony in Plymouth, Mass., a people prepared of the Lord to be ready to receive this light when it appeared. They made their escape in that tribulation from Lincolnshire, England, to Holland,—stayed eleven years in Leyden, and then started for the deserts of America, for the word of God's sake and their posterity, in 1620. Only the minority of the church in Leyden embarked in the Mayflower; the remainder stayed with their aged pastor, Rev. John Robinson, who died in five years after they left Holland. His wife and children, and the remainder of his church, in 1630 followed the Puritans to Plymouth. The charge that godly man gave our Pilgrim fathers when they left Holland, shows the spirit with which he was imbued: "I charge you before God and his blessed angels, that you follow me no further than you have seen me follow the Lord Jesus Christ. The Lord has more truth yet to break forth out of his holy word. I cannot sufficiently bewail the condition of the reformed churches, who are come to a period in religion, and will go at present no further than the instruments of their reformation. Luther and Calvin were great and shining lights in their times, yet they penetrated not into the whole counsel of God. I beseech you, remember it,—'tis an article of your Church covenant,—that you be ready to receive whatever truth shall be made known to you from the written word of God." Bancroft's His., vo. 1, p. 306. They were the people that expected to see the salvation of God, and the glory of the Lord to be revealed to all flesh. The second generation of those men acknowledged themselves to be endowed with the spirit of John the Baptist, and has brought it to pass. John Baptist only began the fulfillment of the prophecy of Isaiah in the desert of Asia, but this people carry out the fulfillment. "The voice of him that crieth in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make straight in the desert a highway for our God. Every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be made low; and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough places plain. And the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together; for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it. The voice said, Cry; and he said, What shall I cry? All flesh is grass, and all the goodliness thereof is as the flower of the field," etc. "Behold the Lord God will come with strong hand, and his arm shall rule for him; behold his reward is with him, and his work before him." This is at present the same cry, and will be till the Lord comes. All flesh is grass, they return to the dust again from whence they were taken, and know nothing, and sleep there till the trump of God awakes them from the dead.

Nahum prophesied at the same time with Isaiah on this subject. Isaiah prophesied what should be done to prepare the way of the Lord, and Nahum told what was done after the way was prepared. "The chariots shall rage in the streets, they shall justle one against another in the broad ways: they shall seem like torches, they shall run like the lightnings." Rough places shall be made plain, and the crooked be made straight, and the mountains and hills made low, and the vallies exalted, in Daniel's time of the end when the book is unsealed, and "many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." This way was foretold by the prophets, and accomplished by this nation for the express purpose of conveying those that give the cry of the "sleep of the dead," and "behold! the Bridegroom cometh." Over two thousand years ago, and the "Abomination of Desolation" spoken of by Daniel the prophet could not destroy it, for the word of our God shall stand forever. When "the spirit of the Lord bloweth upon it: surely the people is grass." "For behold, the day cometh, that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble: and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch. But unto you that fear my name shall the sun of righteousness arise with healing in his wings; and ye shall go forth, and grow up as calves of the stall. And ye shall tread down the wicked, for they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet in the day that I shall do this, saith the Lord of hosts." DOLLY TAYLOR.

Life's Lessons.

Many and varied are the lessons of life; they are made up of contraries, of pleasing and dark passages, so blended as to form a picture often harmonious only in its proportions of light and shade. Experience is a fearful teacher, often capricious in the extreme. We are sometimes allowed to linger a long while in the quiet haunts of peace and enjoyment, with everything that heart could wish to minister to our wants. We become attached to earth and its bright scenes, and dream of it as our Paradise, wherein we shall long find repose, when suddenly the scene and with it life's lesson changes. The wild blast bursts upon us; storm-driven clouds obscure the sunlight; we start up from our day-dreams of joy to find the vision of our earthly Paradise dissolved, vanished, gone, leaving not a vestige behind. With crushed hopes and blighted joys we begin to learn from our great Teacher the sterner lessons of life's vicissitudes.

'Tis ever thus. Earth's joys are not abiding. We may drink ever so deeply from the fount of present bliss—some unforeseen movement may dash the golden cup from our lips, and dissipate the hopes we had fostered in our deluded hearts. The lessons we daily learn are not of our choosing. They are dispensed by a power beyond our control, and each day adds something new to the former either of blessed contentment or unhappiness, of plenty or privation, of love or hate, of a serene mind resigned to Heaven's will, or a heart rent and riven with confused emotions of wild unrest.

Ah! these ever changing lessons, how they wear out the lives of some in trying to learn their intent; while others calmly and serenely receive them as wise dispensations of Providence sent either to cheer, when the heart is desponding, or subdue the kindly emotions of ambition when worldly thoughts are gaining the ascendency. It is true, too true, that nearly all are given bitter lessons to learn sooner or later, when the dearest of earth are removed from sight and we are left to look out upon the moving scene as a blank and void waste bereft of all its former beauties. At such a time, if we can look above the dark desert with confidence to the time of the blest reunion in the great Beyond, and feel that all is safe in our Father's hands, then the saddest lesson of life will be bereft of half its bitterness. 'Tis a blessing then to look up confidingly through the mists and shadows and discern a Father's smiling face beyond, where eternal sunshine reigns.

May the lessons of this life, whether bitter or sweet, teach us true wisdom, and thus fit us for the life to come.

Palmer, Mass. O. P. ALLEN.

Godliness—Persecution.

"Yea, and all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution."—2 Tim. 3: 12.

According to the word of God, if we live godly we shall be persecuted. Many suppose that persecution was confined to the primitive christians, while religion at the present day is so popular, that christians can glide along smoothly with the world, and be saved at last with those who come up out of great tribulation. But I think pure and undefiled religion is quite as unpopular with the world now, as at any former period of its history. It is one thing to be a fashionable professor of religion, and quite another to be an humble, prayerful, devoted child of God. The one seeks for the pleasures of the world, conforms to the fashions of the world, partakes of the spirit of the world, and in short loves the world instead of God; for the inspired penman tells us "if any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." Consequently he is not subject to persecution. While the other, by denying self, by bearing crosses, by coming out from the world, and being separate from it, by living and laboring for the Lord, suffers persecution, and for what? Is it for professing religion, and being a member of some popular church? Nay, verily. It is for living godly in Christ Jesus. Dear brethren and sisters, let us count the cost, and pay the price, whatever it may be, whether joy, ease, friends, money, position in society, or anything else, let us sacrifice all and leave the result with God, and he will take care of us.

There is no sacrifice too great, no cross too heavy, if we may but have eternal life at last, and with the redeemed range the immortal hills of paradise restored, and pluck the fruit from life's fair tree, and and bask forever in the sunlight of God, it is enough; it is all we can ask or desire. That this happy portion may be ours is the prayer of your unworthy sister in Christ. A. E. BENNETT.

Mildly judge ye of each other.

Mildly judge ye of each other,
Be to condemnation slow;
The very best have got their failings,
Something good the worst can show;
The brilliant sun has spots of darkness
On his radiant front, they say;
And the clock that never goeth,
Speaks correctly twice a day.

Do not mock your neighbor's weakness
When his random whims you see,
For perhaps he something like it
Every day beholds in thee.
Folly leavens all our natures,
Soundest metal hath its flaws,
And the rigid stoic scorner
Is no wiser for his saws.

Every mortal hath his hobby;
It may foolish seem to you,
But, remember! bright or simple,
You have got your hobby to.
Let a fellow-feeling warm you
When you criticise your friend;
Honor virtue in his actions,
In yourself his vices mend.

Think not those whom mortals honor
Are the best the earth affords,
For no tongue of praise doth blazon
Forth the deeds which God rewards.
There are fish behind in ocean,
Good as ever from it came,
There are men unknown as noble
As the laurell'd heirs of fame.

A Few Thoughts.

BRO. GRANT:—I wish to throw out a few ideas for the brethren to think upon, concerning the resurrection. Does the coming to life again give us immortality, or our glorified body? I think not. We must be changed before we get it. Phil. 3: 21. It appears that even the righteous dead are waked up to some kind of life; perhaps the Adamic that left them to fall asleep. See 1st Thess. 4: 15–17. If the righteous dead get their glorified bodies when waked up, they get them before the righteous that remain alive till the Lord comes.

Coming out of the grave is only destroying the works of the devil under Adam's fall. They are only brought to life to be judged; one class as candidates for the change to eternal life; the other as candidates for "the second death," which is "the wages of sin." Those that pierced him will be there. When Jesus was speaking to another class, he says, "And you yourselves thrust out;" Sodomites, Ninehvites, and others, yet all in their own order. See 1 Cor. 15: 22, 23, 37. You see by taking this stand-point, the body that is sown is not the one that rises to meet the Lord in the air; but it is the one that is waked up, preparatory to the promised change, before rising to meet him. God gives it this body, so there is no chance to be any other body, or grain. I think the Scriptures harmonize much better from this stand-point, than any other. As the Spirit of God, that dwells in our mortal body, when dead, will quicken, or bring this same body up mortal, ready for a change, or to receive the new clothing of which Paul spoke; the wicked cannot expect it, as they had not sought for it. The whole of the work of the resurrection is not done until they are changed, and then caught up. This is the order, see 1st Thess. 4: 17.

I have only thrown out a little Scripture proof, asking my brethren to kindly look at it from this stand-point, and see how infidelity in all its forms vanishes, when the candidate stands to be judged. I do not believe Jesus taught us, in bringing Lazarus to life, any other doctrine than this. He came back mortal, and Jesus eat supper with him and his two sisters some time after. That is our first pattern or type. This was only bringing back the same body to the same life.

Again, his coming to life by the power of God, or his angels, did not give him his glorified body, but the same wounded one that he showed to Thomas. He told Mary he had "not yet ascended;" and others, later, the Son of man is "not yet glorified." But forty days after he waked up, he was changed, and went up; and is coming in the same manner again. It is enough for us to be as our Lord,—waked up, changed, and raised. It is raised a spiritual body, and enters into eternal life to be forever with the Head. This is the order, and it is comforting. See Thess. 4: 17, 18.

Moral Element Wanting.

Having, in a former article, spoken definitely of the word education, the moral element of which is the subject of the present remarks, it is but just to observe that, as a people, we have fallen from the exalted standard of our fathers in this constituent of education. Nor is the effect confined to the domestic circle, but abounds largely in the system of our public schools. Of late years the educational efforts in our common schools have been mainly directed to the development of the intellectual powers, while the moral culture has been comparatively neglected; hence the intellect has gained the ascendency, and the morals have been dwarfed. Not only has this state of things been emulative in the schools, but it has been fostered in family circle, under the mistaken zeal of professedly christian parents and guardians. Our ancestors regarded the training of the intellect in the common school as subordinate to the culture of the moral faculties, fully persuaded that intellectual instruction is not sufficient, in itself, to insure the moral purity of society. In 1647 the statute by which our free schools were established, provided that a knowledge of the Holy Scriptures should be of the first importance. It is within the recollection of the writer that the Catechism closed the scholastic exercises on Saturday of each week, in public schools of Massachusetts. The candidate for teaching was specially examined respecting his moral character, which was deemed a test in his qualification. Now, this trait in the endowment of the teacher is either quite frequently overlooked, or regarded as a secondary concern; at least, this seems to be the rule; it is hoped there are exceptions.

Thus are we constantly and rapidly passing from the child to the parent—from the pupil to the teacher, actuated by the continued incentives to mental excellence; yet, step, by step, fast losing sight of the chief point—the moral element. Hence may be seen, not only among children, but persons of adult years, a growing tendency to disregard the rights of others; to set aside all deferential respect for superiors in age or rank; in short, to subvert every rule of well-organized society. Now to counteract the progress of this mistaken zeal, and to secure the moral and religious happiness of community, is it not essential that we return to those grand principles which characterized the fathers of our country, which are indelibly written in the book of books, and were clearly exemplified in the teachings and life of Him who was the great Essential of all moral and religious purity.

Do parents labor sufficiently to impress the minds of their children with the elements of divine truth? Do heads of families use their endeavors, however humble, to promote the Sabbath school cause, and to extend its influence? Engrossed, as they frequently are, with the cares of the domestic circle, many mothers often complain of their inefficiency to do any good in connection with this blessed cause; but here they see not the hiding of their power. The mother may be instrumental of untold good in the religious education of one child, for the truth of which we need but consult the authentic records of the past. To the honor of his mother, it could be said of Timothy—"From a child thou hast known the Holy Scriptures."

Pray,—Ask others to pray for you.

Meanwhile indulge in things positively forbidden, the lust of the eye and the pride of life! What mockery! Friend, how dare you solicit the prayers of God's people, when you have no intention of breaking off your sins by way of righteousness? of turning to God with full purpose of heart? We have known mothers request prayers for their unconverted children, while, at the same time, they indulged them in things grievously offensive in the sight of heaven, diametrically opposite to the law of purity, love, and mercy; allow them to costume in all the gay frivolities of fashionable life, in gold, pearls, and costly array; read novels, the insipid, nonsensical trash of the day; attend places of amusement, mingle with associations of a dissipating, corrupting tendency. Awful, fearful inconsistency!

Friends, what do you mean—insult the Lord to his face? "Now, therefore, be ye not mockers, lest your bands be made strong." If you expect God to hear prayer for yourselves or your little ones: "wash you, make you clean," put away your evil deeds, repent, confess your sins, past and present, make restitution, lay aside every weight, "abstain from all appearance of evil"—then there is hope, propriety, and consistency in beseeching God for mercy, in soliciting others to unite with you at the throne of grace. "If I regard iniquity in my heart," says the Psalmist, "the Lord will not hear me." We may pray morning, noon, and evening, says an exchange,) "thy kingdom come," but our prayers will avail nothing without corresponding action.

"How many useless prayers we say,
Because our lives our prayers belie;
Because devotion dies away,
As on the air the echoes die!"

D. F. NEWTON.

Selections.

Never Fret.

The effect of fretfulness is seen not only in the temper and spirit, but in the voice and in the aspect of the face. Hear that woman's cracked and shrieking tone, pitched in a falsette, plaintive, wheezing whine; more disagreeable than the grating of a rusty door-hinge, the filing of a saw, the creaking of a broken chair, or the chewing of unexpected gravel in the teeth. Is that the human voice? Such a voice heard in a house is worse than the smell of brimstone, and it operates like a perpetual mildew, to rot out all energy, and peace, and hope, from the hearts of the whole household, servants, children, companions and lovers. See that face, with an eye glaring but not lustrous; read the picture of self-torture and forceless despondency upon the whole countenance, and tell us if fretfulness that can so transform the human face divine from the image of all heavenly beauty into such a changing, wishy-washy mask of mud, be not a crime against our common humanity of the deepest, meanest kind? Does it not dishonor the Maker of all souls and bodies, and does it not mar both the inward spirit and the outward form of a man or woman?

We say, then, do stop the practice at once; and resolutely refuse to fret at what you cannot cure. Direct your energies, if you have any, (and if you have not, pray to your Maker to give you some,) against the evils in the world in the way of practical work, and not in the way of impracticable fretting, and worrying, and wearing yourself out, and souring your temper, and vexing your friends, and dishonoring your God.—Indian Arcana.

A Persian Story.

Jesus, says a Persian story, arrived at a certain city and sent his disciples forward to prepare a supper, while he himself, intent on doing good, walked through the street into the market place. And he saw at the corner of the market some people gathered together looking at an object on the ground, and he drew near to see what it might be. It was a dead dog, with a halter around his neck, by which he appeared to have been dragged through the dirt, and a viler, a more abject, a more unclean thing never met the eye of man. And those who stood by looked on with abhorrence. "Faugh!" said one, stopping his nose, "it pollutes the air." "How long shall the foul beast offend our sight?" said another. "Look at his torn hide," said a third, "one could not even cut a shoe out of it." "And his ears," said a fourth, "all dragged and bleeding." "No doubt," said a fifth, "he hath been hanged for stealing." And Jesus heard them, and looking down on the dead creature, he said: "Pearls are not equal to the whiteness of his teeth." Then the people turned to him with amazement, and said among themselves—"Who is this? This must be Jesus of Nazareth; for only he could find something to pity and approve, even in a dead dog;" and, being ashamed, they bowed their heads before him, and each went his way.

Sympathy for the Erring.

Of how much of our indignation against even a deliberate wrong would we be disarmed, if we could know for ourselves a tithe of all the sorrow, and trouble, and disappointment the poor erring heart had passed through! What efforts are made in youth to stand up against the pressure of the world, and how, when fallen, from miscalculation, or an over confiding nature, or want of tact, it bravely rose up and tried again; and when hard necessity came and drove it to the wall, how it looked around for help, and waited, still striving to stand upright, and fell while striving; and even when fallen, how it yearned for one more chance to rise and be a man, how loth at last to give up all for lost! could we but see a thousandth part of these struggles, as they rend our brother's bosom, and almost break his heart, how should it disarm us of our vindictiveness, and incline us even, to run to him, and raise him up, and stand by him, and with god-like forgiveness bid him, "Try, try again!"—Arthur's Magazine.

SUCCESS.—Every man must patiently abide his time. He must wait, not in listless idleness, not in useless pastime, not in querulous dejection, but in constant, steady fulfilling and accomplishing his task; that when the occasion comes, he may be equal to the occasion. The talent of success is nothing more than doing what you can do well, without a thought of fame. If it comes at all, it will come because it is deserved, not because it is sought after. It is a very indiscreet and troublesome ambition which cares so much about fame; about what the world says of us; to be always looking in the face of others for approval; to be always anxious about the effect of what we do or say; to be always shouting to hear the echoes of our own voices.—Longfellow.

A SALUTARY THOUGHT.—When I was a young man, there lived in our neighborhood a farmer who was usually reported to be a very liberal man, and uncommonly upright in his dealings. When he had any of the produce of his farm to dispose of, he made it an invariable rule to give good measure—rather more than could be required of him. One of his friends, observing him frequently doing so, questioned him why he did it—told him he gave too much, and said it would not be to his advantage. Now mark the answer of this excellent man. "God Almighty has permitted me but one journey through the world, and when I am gone I cannot return to rectify mistakes." Think of this. But one journey through the world!

THE JUG.—The jug is a most singular utensil. A pail, tumbler, or decanter, can be rinsed, and you can satisfy yourself by optical proof, that it is clean; but the jug has but a hole in the top, and the interior is all darkness. No eye penetrates it, no hand moves the surface. You can clean it only by putting in water, shaking it up, and pouring it out. If the water comes out clean, you judge you have succeeded in cleaning the jug and vice versa. Hence, the jug is like the human heart. No mortal can ever look into its recesses, and you can only judge of its purity by what comes from it.

DEAR CHILDREN:—"Aunt Mary" has written a little story for you about a good little girl, who was sick all the long dreary Winter, and longed for Spring to come again, when she hoped she would be well again. She will be well again, when Jesus comes to make immortal the lovely form of—

Little Lillie Lee.

BY MRS. MARY E. L. HERRON.

"O, when will smiling Spring return,
With butterfly and bee,
With balmy airs and golden skies?"
Sighed little Lillie Lee.

All winter, on her little bed,
In sickness, she had lain,
A lovely, sweet, yet fading thing,
And prayed for Spring again.

"When will the earth grow green again,
With flowerets blooming bright?
When will the birds begin their songs—
Their songs of sweet delight?

"O, when will come, with healing power,
The fresh and rosy Spring,
To melt away these chilling snows,
And health and gladness bring?

"Dear mother, shall I not be well
When wintry days are gone?
And shall I not once more go out
Upon the velvet lawn?"

The mother gazed upon the cheek
Of little Lillie fair,
And saw that dread disease had stamp'd
His fatal impress there.

She fondly pressed her darling child
Close to her throbbing heart,
And thought how wretched she should be
If they were doomed to part.

* * * * * * * *

The sweet Spring came, with beauty deck'd,
The flowerets brightly bloom;
The wild birds sing their songs of love,—
But Lillie's in the tomb!

She died—'t was when the winter died,
Before the flowers were born;—
She died, in happy innocence,
In youth's unclouded morn.

To God she gave her tender heart,
And tried to do his will;
Her little hands were clasped in prayer
To Him who guards from ill.

And when our blessed Savior comes
In glory from the skies,
Then, with the holy, happy throng,
Will little Lillie rise.

In Paradise she'll live again,
Where blooms eternal Spring,
And sigh no more with grief and pain,
But glad hosannas sing!

Led, not Driven!

A mother, sitting at her work in her parlor, overheard her child, whom an older sister was dressing in an adjoining bedroom, say repeatedly, as if in answer to his sister,

"No, I don't want to say my prayers."

"How many believers in good standing," thought the mother to herself, "often say the same thing in heart, though they conceal even from themselves the feeling."

"Mother," said the child, appearing in a minute or two at the parlor door; the tone and look implied that it was only his morning salutation.

"Good morning, my child."

"I am going out to get my breakfast."

"Stop a minute; I want you to come here and and see me first."

The mother laid her work down in the next chair, as the boy ran towards her. She took him up. He kneeled in her lap and laid his face down upon her shoulder, his cheek resting against her ear. The mother rocked her chair slowly backwards and forwards.

"Are you pretty well this morning?" said she, in a kind, gentle tone.

"Yes, mother; I am very well."

"I am very glad you are well. I am very well, too; and when I waked up this morning, and found that I was well, I thanked God for taking care of me."

Did you?" said the boy in a low tone, half a whisper. He paused after it—conscience was at work.

"Did you ever feel my pulse?" asked his mother, after a minute of silence, at the same time taking the boy down, and seating him in her lap, and placing his fingers on her wrist. "No, but I have felt mine."

"Well, don't you feel mine now?—how it goes beating."

"Y-e-s," said the child.

"If it should stop beating, I should die at once."

"Should you?"

"Yes, and I cannot keep it beating."

"Who can?"

A silent pause.

"You have a pulse, too, which beats in your bosom here, and in your arms and all over you. Nobody can but God. If he should not take care of you, who could?"

"I don't know, mother," said the child, with a look of anxiety, and another pause ensued.

"So when I waked up this morning I thought I would ask God to take care of me; I hope he will take care of me, and the rest of us."

"Did you ask him to take care of me?"

"Don't you think you had better ask for yourself?"

"Yes," said the boy, readily.

He kneeled again in his mother's lap, and uttered in his own simple and broken language, a prayer for the protection and blessing of heaven.

Suppose another case. Another mother overheard the same words, calls the child into the room. The boy comes.

"Did I hear you say you did not want to say your prayers?"

The boy is silent.

"Well that is very naughty. You ought always to say your prayers. Go right back, now, and say your prayers like a good boy."

The boy goes back pouting, and utters the words of prayer, while his heart is full of mortified pride, vexation and ill-will.—Mother's Magazine.

Christ our Strength.

Thou, whose little bark has glided
Safe through childhood's quiet stream,
And is launched upon the ocean,
In the transport of a dream;

Listen! on that boundless ocean,
Thou wilt need a hand to guide
Through the storm-clouds of affliction,
Safe to heaven, "beyond the tide."

Human strength indeed is weakness,
Sighs and tears, how vain they are;
But through all the clouds of sorrow,
Shines the "bright and Morning Star."

Mild and loving is thy Savior,
Fair and broad his shelt'ring wing;
Seek, oh! seek his kind protection,
At the cross thy burden fling.

He has borne thy sins and sorrows,
Died upon the cross for thee;
Now he reigns in light and glory,
And thy strength shall ever be.

Baptism and Remission of Sins.

It seems to me that many persons "do greatly err," "not knowing the Scriptures," when they think themselves pursuing an apostolic course in bidding men to "be BAPTIZED for the remission of SINS."

"But does not Peter say so? and did not Peter know?"

We will see what Peter said. First: He was preaching on the day of Pentecost, under the immediate inspiration of the outpoured Spirit. Second: His hearers were, many of them at least, DEVOUT PERSONS, out of every nation. Third: Upon hearing the preaching they were pierced in their hearts, and, turning the preaching into an inquiry meeting, they "said unto Peter, and to the rest of the apostles, men and brethren, what shall we do?" Fourth: Peter commanded them to "REPENT AND BE BAPTIZED, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins." Fifth: If they would do BOTH of these things, they should "receive the GIFT of the HOLY GHOST." Peter did not preach baptism for the remission of sins. He preached REPENTANCE AND BAPTISM for remission. Why need men separate what God has joined? Repentance comes first, and "fruits meet for repentance" with it, and then baptism, with repentance, secures remission. This baptism is not the baptism of the Holy Spirit, because the gift of the Holy Ghost is promised after it is done. The men of Ephesus were baptized, and when Paul had laid his hands upon them they received the Holy Spirit. The Samaritan converts believed Philip, and were baptized; and when Peter and John came down, and prayed for them, and laid hands on them, they received the Holy Ghost. Sometimes the Holy Spirit came before baptism, as at the house of Cornelius; but still baptism was commanded. Sometimes remission of sins may precede baptism, but if so, it is still commanded.

"But does not the apostle speak of baptism as "the washing of REGENERATION?"

Quite likely he does, but does he stop there? No. He adds, "AND renewing of the HOLY GHOST, which he shed on us abundantly." "The washing of regeneration" shows forth our faith in the regeneration or resurrection of the dead, and also exhibits the antedated quickening, already begun in us, through union with Christ the Life; and the renewing of the Holy Ghost is the actual renovation of "the hidden man of the heart," making the person who is "in Christ" "a NEW CREATURE." Talk all you please about "the washing of regeneration," but do not for your soul's sake leave off the "renewing of the HOLY GHOST;" if you do, your baptism or "washing" is a sham, a cheat, a falsity.

"But did not Ananias tell Paul to 'arise and be baptized, and wash away thy sins?' And did not Ananias know the way of salvation?"

Yes, Ananias did know, and so he was sent to Paul, to teach him something more than baptism for the washing away of sins. Let us see. First: Paul had before lived "in all good conscience," according to his light; he was religious, and honest, but misguided. Second: When the Lord appeared to him he was teachable, and said, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" Third: Before Ananias would go to him, the Lord said to him, "Behold he prayeth," and he was called "a chosen vessel," etc. Fourth: Ananias said to him, "And now why tarriest thou? arise and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, CALLING ON THE NAME OF THE LORD."—Acts 22: 16. Washing away of sins, comes not by being baptized alone, but by being baptized after repentance and faith, and in connection with "CALLING ON THE NAME OF THE LORD." It takes a good deal more to make a christian of a man, than merely dipping him in water. He must be converted, changed, renewed.

"But does not Peter tell us that 'baptism doth also now save us?'" Yes, and it does save us. But the baptism which saves is not a baptism torn out of its place in the divine order, and put down as the great "one thing needful." This baptism which saves us, is not "answering" your own "conscience" either; that is, doing as you have been taught, or as you please; but it is "the answer," or test (eperotema), "of a GOOD CONSCIENCE toward God." Now there may be bad consciences, defiled consciences, and seared consciences. The christian's conscience is purged "from dead works to serve the living God." When a man truly repents, and exercises himself "to have always a conscience void of offence toward God and toward men," as did Paul, in expectation of the "resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust," then he has "a good conscience." He believes in that great truth, and acts conscientiously with reference to it. Then, by being baptized, and thus indicating publicly his faith in the resurrection of the dead; being buried with Christ "by baptism into death," he shows his "good conscience toward God" and man. And this baptism which proves his "good conscience toward God," saves him by the resurrection from the dead in which he thus declares his conscientious belief.

"But will baptism save a man?" That depends upon who the man is, and whether he has the good conscience. It would not have saved Abraham before it was commanded. It will not save a wicked man now. It "doth also now save us," christians, "by the resurrection of Jesus Christ," which it commemorates, and the resurrection of his people, which it prefigures.

But can I be saved without baptism?" I cannot tell. God has given me no authority to fix up a way for men to be saved. "Repent and be baptized;" "believe and be baptized," are standing orders. If you think salvation offered freely is too dear, you can try your hand at getting it cheaper. Perhaps you may have done something which lays the Lord under special obligations to you; and if so, he may let you into the kingdom by some side door. I have no objection to his doing it, only I have no authority or power to do it for him. I must obey orders. I can neither save you or condemn you.

"But what will become of all the good men who have not been baptized?" I do not know, I am sure. God has not revealed any thing to me on the point, more than he has to other folks. "Well, but what do you suppose?" O you can suppose what you please. I leave that with you. I think very likely God will save a great many men who did certain things, that would damn me or you either, with present light, if we did them.

"But do you think baptism is essential?" I do not know what you mean by essential. Do YOU think Christ's plain commands ought to be obeyed? If so, who cares whether they are "essential" or not? I will tell you one thing. I do not think that baptizing little infants, before they know any thing about it, is "essential." Do YOU? I do not think that sprinkling a few drops of water in a baby's face, and then pretending that God has "regenerated" the child, and teaching him that by that act he was made "a child of God, a member of Christ, and an heir of the kingdom," is "essential," do YOU? I do not think that sprinkling, or RANTIZING water ON a man, and at the same time pretending that you are BAPTIZING (or plunging) him in water, is "essential," do YOU? I do not think that pretending to be BAPTIZED with the Holy Ghost, when you can produce no promise of God that you should be thus baptized; no instance where it has occurred, as it did on the day of Pentecost, and at the house of Cornelius; and when you fail to show the commonest fruits of the Spirit in your life and conduct, and supply their places with mere rant and bitterness, is "essential" baptism, do you?

I do think that to be filled with the Spirit of God, to walk in the Spirit, and to be led by the Spirit of God in agreement with the written word is "essential," for "if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his."

I do think that "the doctrine of baptism, and of laying on of hands," are among the foundation "principles of the doctrine of Christ," and that being "planted together in the likeness of his death," and being "buried with him by baptism into death," are plainly revealed and commanded in the word of God; "for as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ."

I do think that the Spirit that would cause a man to disobey a plain command of Christ as non-essential, while at the same time he is obeying traditions of men which never were required of christians, if persisted in, would cause the condemnation of any man, even if he had been baptized ten thousand times.

I do think that the meek and quiet spirit which submits itself to God without murmuring, carping, or repining, is in the sight of God of great price; compared with the spirit of disobedience, ignorance, and arrogance, which delights in answering your own conscience, and disobeying God; explaining away all the Scripture which you do not believe, and calling "non-essential" all the commands you will not obey.

God help us to be obedient children, not fashioning ourselves according to the former desires in our ignorance, but as he who has called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of deportment.

The Eternal Lie.

"Thou shalt surely die." "Thou shalt not surely die."

The above declarations of Scripture are unqualifiedly and diametrically opposed to each other. God is the author of the first; the devil of the other. One teaches the mortality and consequent death of the transgressor; the other teaches the immortality and endless life of the disloyal, or sinner. God, the author of all things visible and invisible, is infinitely holy and good in all his attributes. The devil is the origin of nothing but sin and sinners. Christ declares that he is a "liar," "murderer," and "abode not in the truth." John 8: 44. The first conquest he made over our first parents was decidedly bad; but his wicked deception met with such an overwhelming disaster, that he was never known to publish his first lie again for over three thousand years. Then probably thinking that his original teaching and reverse had been forgotten, he by his cunning intrigue ventured out into the open field once more to announce, although in a more complicated manner, his ancient doctrine. At a later date his ideas are more numerous, scientific and logical, having engrafted into the root the pre-existence, pre-intelligence and transmigration of souls through all celestial, terrestrial and marine animals, requiring a space of only three thousand years to perform their out and in-door exercise, before their long and difficult journey should end in a residence once more in a human body. The modern signification of this ancient root, as given by one of his aid-de-camps or lexicographers is as follows: "The soul (or root) is a simple, spiritual essence, immortal, immaterial, intangible, indissoluble, without interior or exterior surface. It is analogous to God. It cannot come in contact with matter, and does not occupy space. It is without figure, form, color, impenetrability, extension, divisibility, gravitation, attraction or repulsion." There! is not that science? I wonder where such a lexicon can be obtained?—at what emporium? Acts 13: 8–10, if carefully studied, will give the desired information.

In going out into all the world to give publicity to his old but newly-dressed theology, he had special regard to the latitude and longitude of the world, to the literature, manners, customs, and devotion of the people. Instead of coming up to the land where the light of revelation shone the most conspicuously, where the patriarchs and prophets,—holy men of old, who spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost,—labored most ardently for the dissemination of truth and righteousness, he backed off down into Egypt, where his surroundings were so congenial to his own origin, character and influence, that his gospel met with an approval pre-eminently desirable to his majesty. Tytler's Ancient History tells us on p. 21, that "Notwithstanding the early civilization and the great attainments of the Egyptians, their national character was extremely low and despicable among the contemporary nations of antiquity. The reason of this is, they were a people who chose to sequester themselves from the rest of mankind. They were not known to other nations by their conquests. They had little connexion with them by commerce, and they had an antipathy to the persons and manners of strangers. There were likewise many circumstances of their own manners which tended to degrade them in the opinion of other nations. All professions were hereditary in Egypt, and the rank of each was scrupulously settled. The objects of the religious worship were different in different parts of the kingdom, a fertile source of division and controversy. Their peculiar superstitions were of the most absurd and debasing nature; and the manners of the people were extremely loose and profligate." Heathen mytholgy sprung from this dark abyss. Here is where immortal-soulism had its second origin. According to Tytler, the Egyptians instructed the Greeks, the Greeks performed the same office to the Romans, and the latter have transmitted much of that knowledge to the world, of which we are in possession at this day. Thus the devil instructed the Egyptians, Egyptians the Greeks, the Greeks the Romans,—Pagans and Catholics,—and Catholics Protestants, and Protestants Spiritualists; so that the origin and onward progress of this false system is plainly discoverable, and the fruit is plenteous and promises an abundant harvest.

Truly the enemy of all truth and righteousness has accomplished a great work in deceiving mankind. But, thanks be to the ever blessed God for the light of revelation which shines so conspicuously along the pathway of his saints in this last generation of men; and that, amidst the perils that surround us upon the very eve of Christ's coming, the standard has been raised, the banner unfurled and wafted to the breeze, and the motto inscribed—"No immortality or endless life out of Christ, the Son of the living God." Man is mortal; his tendency is to decay and death. Would the race obtain these heaven-bought blessings, they must come to Christ with all their hearts and submit to his law and faith. Come, then, dear sinner, I beseech you, come to the great fountain of salvation, and secure a pardon of your sins, and a good title to the kingdom of God, immortality, and all its eternal glories, before the last sands of time shall run out, and you be ushered into the presence of God where your destiny is sealed for woe which ends in the second death.

"Fruit of the Vine."—No. 1.

"I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine, until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom."—Matt. 26: 29

Upon the suggestion of Sister B. Mathewson that she would like my argument again to appear in the Crisis, upon the wine used at the Lord's Supper, I think it would be best to examine the words or phrases which are used in the Bible to express wine, or the fruit of the vine, and in so doing I will endeavor to be as brief as possible.

First, the most common word rendered wine in our English Bible is yayin. It is derived from the verb, yanah, "to squeeze or press," and therefore means an expressed juice. It is a generic term for all such liquor, but never of itself can settle the point whether or not the juice, after it has been squeezed from the grape, has been fermented. In all cases the juice must have been obtained from the fruit before it could have been fermented; but it does not follow that, because it is pressed, therefore it must ferment. Fermentation followed the treading of the press if the husbandman pleased, but if he chose he could prevent it. He might boil it down to a consistence too thick and saccharine to ferment; he might filter it and deprive it of the gluten, or yeast, essential to fermentation; he might mix it with water and vinegar, and thus dilute it beyond the power of producing a strong wine; he might exclude the air by fastening up the bottles immediately, as in the new bottles spoken of by our Lord, and thus prevent its working, for grape juice will not work if the oxygen of the atmosphere be excluded. The juice that Pharaoh drank was yayin, or wine, for it was pressed from the grape. These observations will be sufficient to show that the word yayin, or wine, does not necessarily express a fermented liquor.

2. Tirosh, supposed to come from the root or "head, chief, or beginning," may refer to the head or berry of the grape, or to the first or chief juice that begins to flow from the fruit; it is, therefore, promiscuously rendered in the English version by the terms "wine," or "new wine." In Isa. 65: 8, it alludes to the juice in the swollen or ripe fruit before it was expressed,—"As the NEW WINE is found in the cluster, and one saith, Destroy it not, for a blessing is in it." The wine in the cluster was unfermented, and there was a blessing in it. No one who has carefully examined the effects of inebriating wine will say that there is a blessing in them. The word tirosh is several times in Scripture associated with corn. Isaac mentions "corn and tirosh,"—"corn and new wine." The king of Assyria spoke of "corn and tirosh," and in Ps. 4, David, alluding to the joy of the wicked at the growth of their corn, and the fertility of their vines, says that "their corn and their wine (or tirosh) increased." Here he must refer to the growth of the grape, because he spoke of its increasing, and the wine does not increase after it is manufactured. In this passage, therefore, as in Isaiah, tirosh, or new wine, is used for the grape or fruit of the wine, before it had been gathered, and even before it was ripe. In the same sense the word appears to have been used by the king of Assyria, for, in the same speech in which he speaks of a land of corn and wine, or tirosh, he tells the people to "eat ye every one of his vine, and every one of his fig-tree, and drink ye every one of the waters of his own cistern." Here the people were to eat of the vine and to drink water. In Joel 2: 24, and Prov. 3: 10, tirosh is represented as the fresh juice which burst from the wine-press, and which, therefore, had not fermented.

3. Chamer is translated, in Ps. 75: 8 and Isa. 27: 2, by the word "red," and in Deut. 32: 14, by the term "pure." It is also used for slime, clay, mortar, and bitumen, and for anything thick or slimy. In Deut. 32, it means the "pure, thick, or red blood" of the grape. It is no tautology to call the blood of the grape red or purple, because the juice of that fruit was sometimes white and sometimes black or dark. The arterial blood of our bodies is red, but the venous is called "black blood." In Isa. 27: 2, we read of a vineyard of "red wine," evidently alluding to the color of the grape. "Thou didst drink the blood of the grape, red, pure, or thick." Red was considered the best juice, pure, that which was unfermented and unmixed; thick, that had been boiled. The text, therefore, means, Thou didst drink the purest, sweetest, and the richest blood, or juice of the grape. This word being used with the expression "dam anabim," "the blood of the grape," affords very strong evidence that the liquor drank was not fermented, for a fermented liquor can never with any propriety be called "the pure blood of the vine." Were we by some chemical process to decompose human blood, to dismiss two-thirds of one of its constituent parts, and one-third of another, and then combine the remaining ingredients afresh, we should not call this new product "pure human blood." Yet this is exactly what takes place in making alcoholic wine. The wine in the Lord's cup is said to be chamer, or, "red or purple." But this expression, apart from the context, cannot prove that it was fermented. There is, therefore, nothing in the word chamer, viewed by itself, that necessarily intimates an intoxicating wine.

BRO. GRANT:—The following from the Tract Journal is too significant and truthful to be lost. Should you see fit, it might be re-published for the benefit of your readers. I feel admonished by it, and hope especially all others professing a belief in the doctrines of the Bible will likewise heed its truth. It is sufficiently sad that as a "corrective," a "guide," and a "source of confidence and equanimity," the Bible is contemned by the nation: how much greater may be our sadness that the church, the Gentile church, are in open defense against its plainest and most important teachings.

E. W. HATCH.

"Our Bible—How is it treated?

It must be manifest, at least to every thoughtful christian, that, as a nation, we owe an infinite debt to the Bible, and that there has never been a period in the nation's history when the influence of the Bible was more needed than it is now. We are called to navigate a sea tossed by a fearful storm. Can we move safely without the infallible chart? Can we direct our course to the port of peace if we lose sight of the Star of Bethlehem?

The Bible is needed, especially now, as a corrective of those sins which have provoked the judgments of heaven. No other criterion of character, no other rule of conduct, is impartial or safe. We need to be measured by that, and, wherein we are wrong, to suffer ourselves to be corrected by it. Repentance and reformation must begin here or nowhere.

The Bible is especially needed at such a time as a guide. The nation's path lies through immeasurable difficulties and fearful hazards. All the wisdom of man fails to meet the exigency. Most clearly, we need to beguided by the wisdom which is from above. That wisdom is impressed on the pages of the Bible.

The Bible is especially needed, at such a time, as a source of confidence and equanimity. Many hearts are failing through fear. Any heart is liable to faint in view of calamities existing or impending. And no man can 'in his patience possess his soul' who does not commune with the God of patience in his word. In that word are exhaustless resources of comfort and joy in any and all circumstances.

Such is the value, importance and necessity of the Bible to the nation. But how is it treated? There is much reason to fear that it is sadly neglected, more neglected than in our days of prosperity. The newspaper is important, and it is very proper to read it. But our alarm may well be excited when it is more read, and read more carefully, even by christians, than the infallible word of God. It is a sad comment upon our condition, to make our appeal to the short-sighted and erring wisdom of men, rather than to the infinite wisdom that is from above. Yet it is to be feared that this has been and is our folly as a nation. Even now, in its season of trial and peril unparalleled, it is to be feared that the nation, like many an individual sinner, could trace with its finger the sentence of its own condemnation in the dust of neglect which it still suffers to gather upon the covers of the Divine Constitution.

But who are the nation? Dear reader, you are a part of it. And how do you treat your Bible?"

Heb. 2: 14.

An angel may not fathom
The depths of mortal woe,
Or gushing joys that gladden
The saved below:
But there's a heart can echo
Griefs of the human breast;
Mix the cup for the erring,
Heal, and give rest.

He's met temptation, measured
The bitterest cup for man;
Sounded the depths in mercy,
To gain the gem:
And when earth's spotted leper
Bathes in Christ's healing blood,
He shouts with joy, "Eureka!
My Lord and God!"

What are we looking for?—No. 1.

The history of the world is but a narration of repeated disappointments. The objects of worldly hopes are delusive, imaginary. Desirable they may be, but real and certain they never are. They are but the pictures of vain and bewildered minds, better to anticipate than to realize, always inviting and promising, but seldom fulfilling, and never comforting;—deceptive hopes, alluring multitudes upon multitudes into the broad road that leads to the darkness of despair and death. Degrading are such hopes,—inspiring the multitude with enthusiasm, which they call gladness of heart,—only an over-heated excitement of rival and wicked ambition striving and contending for those things whose existence at the best is but imaginary. O how strange that men should be so zealous in choosing phantoms! It is enough for us to see the effect that worldly hopes produce. We care not what the world is looking for.

What are we looking for? Nor do I mean by we the popular church, the proud and fashionable people, who are so nearly like the world that you are under the painful necessity of looking three times in order to discern the difference between the two, and then coming to the conclusion that the difference consists only in this; that one has a form of godliness, whereas the other has not, but otherwise both are alike, save that the one class are by far the worst. It is not what such are looking for that particularly interests us. An apostate church lifted up by the spirit of pride and fashion, winking at sin, courting the favor of the world, can have no genuine faith, therefore cannot be looking for those things that must inevitably come to pass as the purpose of God is graduallly unfolded and finally consummated. A lukewarm, formal and powerless church, swayed and governed by the political and godless leaders of national and political parties, overheated and feverishly excited in the spirit of national politics, must have gloryingly and shamefully departed from the faith of the gospel; hence from such we turn away, for the things they look for do not satisfy and comfort the hearts of true believers. What are we looking for? Those who have believed from the heart that form of doctrine delivered unto us by the prophets and apostles and prophets of God,—those who are sanctified through the truth, made clean through the blood of Christ, walking circumspectly before the world, doing good unto all men,—what are such looking for? Truly the things they look for must be exceeding great and precious, else they would not be separate from the world and insensible to all its enjoyments and pleasures.

1. We look for the second coming of Christ to judge the world in righteousness. Not as some have taught, spiritually, but literally and personally. Nor as some believe, that his coming is for distant ages on ages in the future. The New Testament Scriptures, so far from speaking of that event indefinitely, always represent the coming of Christ as near at hand. 1 Pet. 4: 7,—"But the end of all things is at hand; be ye therefore sober, and watch unto prayer." The end of all things spoken of here is the same as referred to in 2 Pet. 3—the end of this dispensation, or age, which will introduce the second advent of Messiah. The apostle James speaks also of the same event. James 5: 8,—"Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts: for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh." In Rev. 3: 11, our Lord says himself, "Behold I come quickly!" These are sufficient to show how scripture writers, and consequently the primitive christians, regarded the subject of Messiah's second coming; not far distant, as many would seem to wish and believe now, but near at hand.

2. His coming will be personal and literal. The Scriptures nowhere speak of his coming otherwise than as a visible being. Hence Balaam could say (Num. 24), as he looked down the stream of time and saw Israel's glorious destiny, "I shall see him (Jesus), but not now; I shall behold him, but not nigh." Thus Daniel could say (chap. 7: 13), "I saw in the night visions, and behold one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven"; which is in harmony with the teachings of our Lord himself in Matt. 24: 30,—"And then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." Also in Acts 1: 11. The testimony given by angels at our Lord's ascension, where it is said, "This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." And the language of Paul in 1 Thess. 4: 16,—"The Lord himself shall descend from heaven." From these passages, and many more to which we might refer, we learn the following: 1. That the coming of the Lord Jesus will be a visible coming. 2. That it will be personal. Therefore believing the oracles of God, we look for the speedy personal coming of the Lord Jesus Christ; and judging from the present aspect of things in the world, also the fulfillment of prophecy, we are confident that the day of his coming is not far distant.

Reasons why we look for the Lord's coming:—

1. Because then and there the church will get her reward. Hence says Paul, Heb. 9: 28,—"Unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time, without sin, unto salvation." We do not therefore hope for the reward of salvation until the coming of the Lord and the resurrection of the dead. The doctrine advocated by some, that men get their reward at death, is not found in the Bible; it is one of the traditions of men. It may appear quite pleasing, but it is no where advocated by Jesus or his apostles. They invariably teach that the saints, both living and dead, receive their reward at the resurrection. Thus our Lord said to one, Luke 14: 14, "Thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." Hence Paul could well say, "If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead"; for it was then (not at death) that he expected to receive his reward. "For" says he, (Phil. 3: 20,) "our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ; who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body"; showing that it was at the coming of Christ that he expected to be changed. In 1 Cor. 15: 51, 53, he shows more plainly the nature of the change, and also the time when it takes place—at the resurrection—consequently Paul did not expect to be changed at death, nor to get his reward then. None of the Bible writers expected to receive their reward until the resurrection. David, the sweet singer of Israel, could say in view of it, "I shall be satisfied, when (at death? Nay.) I awake with thy likeness." Ps. 17: 15. Job, strong in faith, could utter the same sentiments with all confidence, saying, "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth; and though, after my skin, worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God."—Job 19: 25, 26. "All the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change come: thou shalt call, and I will answer thee; thou wilt have a desire to the work of thy hands."—Job 14: 14, 15. When will Job's change come? 1 Cor. 15: 51–53,—"Behold! I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed."

Hence, in harmony with Paul, Job expected to be changed at the coming of Christ and the resurrection of the dead. Then the Lord shall call and the saints will answer. Then he will have a desire to the work of his hands, and the slumbering millions of his people will come forth from their dusty beds in all the vigor of immortal life, while the living saints shall be changed. Hear Paul, when about to be offered up, and to depart from this life, knowing that he had fought the good fight, had finished his course and had kept the faith,—"Henceforth," says he, "there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." 2 Tim. 4: 8. Therefore we would love his appearing and look for it, remembering that our Lord has said, "Behold I come

For the Crisis.

Christ our Strength.

Thou, whose little bark has glided
Safe through childhood's quiet stream,
And is launched upon the ocean,
In the transport of a dream;

Listen! on that boundless ocean,
Thou wilt need a hand to guide
Through the storm-clouds of affliction,
Safe to heaven, "beyond the tide."

Human strength indeed is weakness,
Sighs and tears, how vain they are;
But through all the clouds of sorrow,
Shines the "bright and Morning Star."

Mild and loving is thy Savior,
Fair and broad his shelt'ring wing;
Seek, oh! seek his kind protection,
At the cross thy burden fling.

He has borne thy sins and sorrows,
Died upon the cross for thee;
Now he reigns in light and glory,
And thy strength shall ever be.

Baptism and Remission of Sins.

It seems to me that many persons "do greatly err," "not knowing the Scriptures," when they think themselves pursuing an apostolic course in bidding men to "be BAPTIZED for the remission of SINS."

"But does not Peter say so? and did not Peter know?"

We will see what Peter said. First: He was preaching on the day of Pentecost, under the immediate inspiration of the outpoured Spirit. Second: His hearers were, many of them at least, DEVOUT PERSONS, out of every nation. Third: Upon hearing the preaching they were pierced in their hearts, and, turning the preaching into an inquiry meeting, they "said unto Peter, and to the rest of the apostles, men and brethren, what shall we do?" Fourth: Peter commanded them to "REPENT AND BE BAPTIZED, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins." Fifth: If they would do BOTH of these things, they should "receive the GIFT of the HOLY GHOST." Peter did not preach baptism for the remission of sins. He preached REPENTANCE AND BAPTISM for remission. Why need men separate what God has joined? Repentance comes first, and "fruits meet for repentance" with it, and then baptism, with repentance, secures remission. This baptism is not the baptism of the Holy Spirit, because the gift of the Holy Ghost is promised after it is done. The men of Ephesus were baptized, and when Paul had laid his hands upon them they received the Holy Spirit. The Samaritan converts believed Philip, and were baptized; and when Peter and John came down, and prayed for them, and laid hands on them, they received the Holy Ghost. Sometimes the Holy Spirit came before baptism, as at the house of Cornelius; but still baptism was commanded. Sometimes remission of sins may precede baptism, but if so, it is still commanded.

"But does not the apostle speak of baptism as "the washing of REGENERATION?"

Quite likely he does, but does he stop there? No. He adds, "AND renewing of the HOLY GHOST, which he shed on us abundantly." "The washing of regeneration" shows forth our faith in the regeneration or resurrection of the dead, and also exhibits the antedated quickening, already begun in us, through union with Christ the Life; and the renewing of the Holy Ghost is the actual renovation of "the hidden man of the heart," making the person who is "in Christ" "A NEW CREATURE." Talk all you please about "the washing of regeneration," but do not for your soul's sake leave off the "renewing of the HOLY GHOST;" if you do, your baptism or "washing" is a sham, a cheat, a falsity.

"But did not Ananias tell Paul to 'arise and be baptized, and wash away thy sins?' And did not Ananias know the way of salvation?"

Yes, Ananias did know, and so he was sent to Paul, to teach him something more than baptism for the washing away of sins. Let us see. First: Paul had before lived "in all good conscience," according to his light; he was religious, and honest, but misguided. Second: When the Lord appeared to him he was teachable, and said, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" Third: Before Ananias would go to him, the Lord said to him, "Behold he prayeth," and he was called "a chosen vessel," etc. Fourth: Ananias said to him, "And now why tarriest thou? arise and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, CALLING ON THE NAME OF THE LORD."—Acts 22: 16. Washing away of sins, comes not by being baptized alone, but by being baptized after repentance and faith, and in connection with "CALLING ON THE NAME OF THE LORD." It takes a good deal more to make a christian of a man, than merely dipping him in water. He must be converted, changed, renewed.

"But does not Peter tell us that 'baptism doth also now save us?'" Yes, and it does save us. But the baptism which saves is not a baptism torn out of its place in the divine order, and put down as the great "one thing needful." This baptism which saves us, is not "answering" your own "conscience" either; that is, doing as you have been taught, or as you please; but it is "the answer," or test (eperotema), "of a GOOD CONSCIENCE toward God." Now there may be bad consciences, defiled consciences, and seared consciences. The christian's conscience is purged "from dead works to serve the living God." When a man truly repents, and exercises himself "to have always a conscience void of offence toward God and toward men," as did Paul, in expectation of the "resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust," then he has "a good conscience." He believes in that great truth, and acts conscientiously with reference to it. Then, by being baptized, and thus indicating publicly his faith in the resurrection of the dead; being buried with Christ "by baptism into death," he shows his "good conscience toward God" and man. And this baptism which proves his "good conscience toward God," saves him by the resurrection from the dead in which he thus declares his conscientious belief.

"But will baptism save a man?" That depends upon who the man is, and whether he has the good conscience. It would not have saved Abraham before it was commanded. It will not save a wicked man now. It "doth also now save us," christians, "by the resurrection of Jesus Christ," which it commemorates, and the resurrection of his people, which it prefigures.

But can I be saved without baptism?" I cannot tell. God has given me no authority to fix up a way for men to be saved. "Repent and be baptized;" "believe and be baptized," are standing orders. If you think salvation offered freely is too dear, you can try your hand at getting it cheaper. Perhaps you may have done something which lays the Lord under special obligations to you; and if so, he may let you into the kingdom by some side door. I have no objection to his doing it, only I have no authority or power to do it for him. I must obey orders. I can neither save you or condemn you.

"But what will become of all the good men who have not been baptized?" I do not know, I am sure. God has not revealed any thing to me on the point, more than he has to other folks. "Well, but what do you suppose?" O you can suppose what you please. I leave that with you. I think very likely God will save a great many men who did certain things, that would damn me or you either, with present light, if we did them.

"But do you think baptism is essential?" I do not know what you mean by essential. Do YOU think Christ's plain commands ought to be obeyed? If so, who cares whether they are "essential" or not? I will tell you one thing. I do not think that baptizing little infants, before they know any thing about it, is "essential." Do YOU? I do not think that sprinkling a few drops of water in a baby's face, and then pretending that God has "regenerated" the child, and teaching him that by that act he was made "a child of God, a member of Christ, and an heir of the kingdom," is "essential," do YOU? I do not think that sprinkling, or RANTIZING water ON a man, and at the same time pretending that you are BAPTIZING (or plunging) him in water, is "essential," do YOU? I do not think that pretending to be BAPTIZED with the Holy Ghost, when you can produce no promise of God that you should be thus baptized; no instance where it has occurred, as it did on the day of Pentecost, and at the house of Cornelius; and when you fail to show the commonest fruits of the Spirit in your life and conduct, and supply their places with mere rant and bitterness, is "essential" baptism, do you?

I do think that to be filled with the Spirit of God, to walk in the Spirit, and to be led by the Spirit of God in agreement with the written word is "essential," for "if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his."

I do think that "the doctrine of baptism, and of laying on of hands," are among the foundation "principles of the doctrine of Christ," and that being "planted together in the likeness of his death," and being "buried with him by baptism into death," are plainly revealed and commanded in the word of God; "for as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ."

I do think that the Spirit that would cause a man to disobey a plain command of Christ as non-essential, while at the same time he is obeying traditions of men which never were required of christians, if persisted in, would cause the condemnation of any man, even if he had been baptized ten thousand times.

I do think that the meek and quiet spirit which submits itself to God without murmuring, carping, or repining, is in the sight of God of great price; compared with the spirit of disobedience, ignorance, and arrogance, which delights in answering your own conscience, and disobeying God; explaining away all the Scripture which you do not believe, and calling "non-essential" all the commands you will not obey.

God help us to be obedient children, not fashioning ourselves according to the former desires in our ignorance, but as he who has called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of deportment.

H. L. HASTINGS.

For the Crisis.

The Eternal Lie.

"Thou shalt surely die." "Thou shalt not surely die."

The above declarations of Scripture are unqualifiedly and diametrically opposed to each other. God is the author of the first; the devil of the other. One teaches the mortality and consequent death of the transgressor; the other teaches the immortality and endless life of the disloyal, or sinner. God, the author of all things visible and invisible, is infinitely holy and good in all his attributes. The devil is the origin of nothing but sin and sinners. Christ declares that he is a "liar," "murderer," and "abode not in the truth." John 8: 44. The first conquest he made over our first parents was decidedly bad; but his wicked deception met with such an overwhelming disaster, that he was never known to publish his first lie again for over three thousand years. Then probably thinking that his original teaching and reverse had been forgotten, he by his cunning intrigue ventured out into the open field once more to announce, although in a more complicated manner, his ancient doctrine. At a later date his ideas are more numerous, scientific and logical, having engrafted into the root the pre-existence, pre-intelligence and transmigration of souls through all celestial, terrestrial and marine animals, requiring a space of only three thousand years to perform their out and in-door exercise, before their long and difficult journey should end in a residence once more in a human body. The modern signification of this ancient root, as given by one of his aid-de-camps or lexicographers is as follows: "The soul (or root) is a simple, spiritual essence, immortal, immaterial, intangible, indissoluble, without interior or exterior surface. It is analogous to God. It cannot come in contact with matter, and does not occupy space. It is without figure, form, color, impenetrability, extension, divisibility, gravitation, attraction or repulsion." There! is not that science? I wonder where such a lexicon can be obtained?—at what emporium? Acts 13: 8–10, if carefully studied, will give the desired information.

In going out into all the world to give publicity to his old but newly-dressed theology, he had special regard to the latitude and longitude of the world, to the literature, manners, customs, and devotion of the people. Instead of coming up to the land where the light of revelation shone the most conspicuously, where the patriarchs and prophets,—holy men of old, who spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost,—labored most ardently for the dissemination of truth and righteousness, he backed off down into Egypt, where his surroundings were so congenial to his own origin, character and influence, that his gospel met with an approval pre-eminently desirable to his majesty. Tytler's Ancient History tells us on p. 21, that "Notwithstanding the early civilization and the great attainments of the Egyptians, their national character was extremely low and despicable among the contemporary nations of antiquity. The reason of this is, they were a people who chose to sequester themselves from the rest of mankind. They were not known to other nations by their conquests. They had little connexion with them by commerce, and they had an antipathy to the persons and manners of strangers. There were likewise many circumstances of their own manners which tended to degrade them in the opinion of other nations. All professions were hereditary in Egypt, and the rank of each was scrupulously settled. The objects of the religious worship were different in different parts of the kingdom, a fertile source of division and controversy. Their peculiar superstitions were of the most absurd and debasing nature; and the manners of the people were extremely loose and profligate." Heathen mytholgy sprung from this dark abyss. Here is where immortal-soulism had its second origin. According to Tytler, the Egyptians instructed the Greeks, the Greeks performed the same office to the Romans, and the latter have transmitted much of that knowledge to the world, of which we are in possession at this day. Thus the devil instructed the Egyptians, Egyptians the Greeks, the Greeks the Romans,—Pagans and Catholics,—and Catholics Protestants, and Protestants Spiritualists; so that the origin and onward progress of this false system is plainly discoverable, and the fruit is plenteous and promises an abundant harvest.

Truly the enemy of all truth and righteousness has accomplished a great work in deceiving mankind. But, thanks be to the ever blessed God for the light of revelation which shines so conspicuously along the pathway of his saints in this last generation of men; and that, amidst the perils that surround us upon the very eve of Christ's coming, the standard has been raised, the banner unfurled and wafted to the breeze, and the motto inscribed—"No immortality or endless life out of Christ, the Son of the living God." Man is mortal; his tendency is to decay and death. Would the race obtain these heaven-bought blessings, they must come to Christ with all their hearts and submit to his law and faith. Come, then, dear sinner, I beseech you, come to the great fountain of salvation, and secure a pardon of your sins, and a good title to the kingdom of God, immortality, and all its eternal glories, before the last sands of time shall run out, and you be ushered into the presence of God where your destiny is sealed for woe which ends in the second death.

"Fruit of the Vine."—No. 1.

"I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine, until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom."—Matt. 26: 29.

Upon the suggestion of Sister B. Mathewson that she would like my argument again to appear in the Crisis, upon the wine used at the Lord's Supper, I think it would be best to examine the words or phrases which are used in the Bible to express wine, or the fruit of the vine, and in so doing I will endeavor to be as brief as possible.

First, the most common word rendered wine in our English Bible is yayin. It is derived from the verb, yanah, "to squeeze or press," and therefore means an expressed juice. It is a generic term for all such liquor, but never of itself can settle the point whether or not the juice, after it has been squeezed from the grape, has been fermented. In all cases the juice must have been obtained from the fruit before it could have been fermented; but it does not follow that, because it is pressed, therefore it must ferment. Fermentation followed the treading of the press if the husbandman pleased, but if he chose he could prevent it. He might boil it down to a consistence too thick and saccharine to ferment; he might filter it and deprive it of the gluten, or yeast, essential to fermentation; he might mix it with water and vinegar, and thus dilute it beyond the power of producing a strong wine; he might exclude the air by fastening up the bottles immediately, as in the new bottles spoken of by our Lord, and thus prevent its working, for grape juice will not work if the oxygen of the atmosphere be excluded. The juice that Pharaoh drank was yayin, or wine, for it was pressed from the grape. These observations will be sufficient to show that the word yayin, or wine, does not necessarily express a fermented liquor.

2. Tirosh, supposed to come from the root or "head, chief, or beginning," may refer to the head or berry of the grape, or to the first or chief juice that begins to flow from the fruit; it is, therefore, promiscuously rendered in the English version by the terms "wine," or "new wine." In Isa. 65: 8, it alludes to the juice in the swollen or ripe fruit before it was expressed,—"As the NEW WINE is found in the cluster, and one saith, Destroy it not, for a blessing is in it." The wine in the cluster was unfermented, and there was a blessing in it. No one who has carefully examined the effects of inebriating wine will say that there is a blessing in them. The word tirosh is several times in Scripture associated with corn. Isaac mentions "corn and tirosh,"—"corn and new wine." The king of Assyria speaks of "corn and tirosh," and in Ps. 4, David, alluding to the joy of the wicked at the growth of their corn, and the fertility of their vines, says that "their corn and their wine (or tirosh) increased." Here he must refer to the growth of the grape, because he spoke of its increasing, and the wine does not increase after it is manufactured. In this passage, therefore, as in Isaiah, tirosh, or new wine, is used for the grape or fruit of the wine, before it had been gathered, and even before it was ripe. In the same sense the word appears to have been used by the king of Assyria, for, in the same speech in which he speaks of a land of corn and wine, or tirosh, he tells the people to "eat ye every one of his vine, and every one of his fig-tree, and drink ye every one of the waters of his own cistern." Here the people were to eat of the vine and to drink water. In Joel 2: 24, and Prov. 3: 10, tirosh is represented as the fresh juice which burst from the wine-press, and which, therefore, had not fermented.

3. Chamer is translated, in Ps. 75: 8 and Isa. 27: 2, by the word "red," and in Deut. 32: 14, by the term "pure." It is also used for slime, clay, mortar, and bitumen, and for anything thick or slimy. In Deut. 32, it means the "pure, thick, or red blood" of the grape. It is no tautology to call the blood of the grape red or purple, because the juice of that fruit was sometimes white and sometimes black or dark. The arterial blood of our bodies is red, but the venous is called "black blood." In Isa. 27: 2, we read of a vineyard of "red wine," evidently alluding to the color of the grape. "Thou didst drink the blood of the grape, red, pure, or thick." Red was considered the best juice, pure, that which was unfermented and unmixed; thick, that had been boiled. The text, therefore, means, Thou didst drink the purest, sweetest, and the richest blood, or juice of the grape. This word being used with the expression "dam anabim," "the blood of the grape," affords very strong evidence that the liquor drank was not fermented, for a fermented liquor can never with any propriety be called "the pure blood of the vine." Were we by some chemical process to decompose human blood, to dismiss two-thirds of one of its constituent parts, and one-third of another, and then combine the remaining ingredients afresh, we should not call this new product "pure human blood." Yet this is exactly what takes place in making alcoholic wine. The wine in the Lord's cup is said to be chamer, or, "red or purple." But this expression, apart from the context, cannot prove that it was fermented. There is, therefore, nothing in the word chamer, viewed by itself, that necessarily intimates an intoxicating wine.

BRO. GRANT:—The following from the Tract Journal is too significant and truthful to be lost. Should you see fit, it might be re-published for the benefit of your readers. I feel admonished by it, and hope especially all others professing a belief in the doctrines of the Bible will likewise heed its truth. It is sufficiently sad that as a "corrective," a "guide," and a "source of confidence and equanimity," the Bible is contemned by the nation: how much greater may be our sadness that the church, the Gentile church, are in open defense against its plainest and most important teachings.

E. W. HATCH.

"Our Bible—How is it treated?

It must be manifest, at least to every thoughtful christian, that, as a nation, we owe an infinite debt to the Bible, and that there has never been a period in the nation's history when the influence of the Bible was more needed than it is now. We are called to navigate a sea tossed by a fearful storm. Can we move safely without the infallible chart? Can we direct our course to the port of peace if we lose sight of the Star of Bethlehem?

The Bible is needed, especially now, as a corrective of those sins which have provoked the judgments of heaven. No other criterion of character, no other rule of conduct, is impartial or safe. We need to be measured by that, and, wherein we are wrong, to suffer ourselves to be corrected by it. Repentance and reformation must begin here or nowhere.

The Bible is especially needed at such a time as a guide. The nation's path lies through immeasurable difficulties and fearful hazards. All the wisdom of man fails to meet the exigency. Most clearly, we need to beguided by the wisdom which is from above. That wisdom is impressed on the pages of the Bible.

The Bible is especially needed, at such a time, as a source of confidence and equanimity. Many hearts are failing through fear. Any heart is liable to faint in view of calamities existing or impending. And no man can 'in his patience possess his soul' who does not commune with the God of patience in his word. In that word are exhaustless resources of comfort and joy in any and all circumstances.

Such is the value, importance and necessity of the Bible to the nation. But how is it treated? There is much reason to fear that it is sadly neglected, more neglected than in our days of prosperity. The newspaper is important, and it is very proper to read it. But our alarm may well be excited when it is more read, and read more carefully, even by christians, than the infallible word of God. It is a sad comment upon our condition, to make our appeal to the short-sighted and erring wisdom of men, rather than to the infinite wisdom that is from above. Yet it is to be feared that this has been and is our folly as a nation. Even now, in its season of trial and peril unparalleled, it is to be feared that the nation, like many an individual sinner, could trace with its finger the sentence of its own condemnation in the dust of neglect which it still suffers to gather upon the covers of the Divine Constitution.

But who are the nation? Dear reader, you are a part of it. And how do you treat your Bible?"

Heb. 2: 14.

An angel may not fathom
The depths of mortal woe,
Or gushing joys that gladden
The saved below:
But there's a heart can echo
Griefs of the human breast;
Mix the cup for the erring,
Heal, and give rest.

He's met temptation, measured
The bitterest cup for man;
Sounded the depths in mercy,
To gain the gem:
And when earth's spotted leper
Bathes in Christ's healing blood,
He shouts with joy, "Eureka!
My Lord and God!"

What are we looking for?—No. 1.

The history of the world is but a narration of repeated disappointments. The objects of worldly hopes are delusive, imaginary. Desirable they may be, but real and certain they never are. They are but the pictures of vain and bewildered minds, better to anticipate than to realize, always inviting and promising, but seldom fulfilling, and never comforting;—deceptive hopes, alluring multitudes upon multitudes into the broad road that leads to the darkness of despair and death. Degrading are such hopes,—inspiring the multitude with enthusiasm, which they call gladness of heart,—only an over-heated excitement of rival and wicked ambition striving and contending for those things whose existence at the best is but imaginary. O how strange that men should be so zealous in choosing phantoms! It is enough for us to see the effect that worldly hopes produce. We care not what the world is looking for.

What are we looking for? Nor do I mean by we the popular church, the proud and fashionable people, who are so nearly like the world that you are under the painful necessity of looking three times in order to discern the difference between the two, and then coming to the conclusion that the difference consists only in this; that one has a form of godliness, whereas the other has not, but otherwise both are alike, save that the one class are by far the worst. It is not what such are looking for that particularly interests us. An apostate church lifted up by the spirit of pride and fashion, winking at sin, courting the favor of the world, can have no genuine faith, therefore cannot be looking for those things that must inevitably come to pass as the purpose of God is graduallly unfolded and finally consummated. A lukewarm, formal and powerless church, swayed and governed by the political and godless leaders of national and political parties, overheated and feverishly excited in the spirit of national politics, must have gloryingly and shamefully departed from the faith of the gospel; hence from such we turn away, for the things they look for do not satisfy and comfort the hearts of true believers. What are we looking for? Those who have believed from the heart that form of doctrine delivered unto us by the prophets and apostles and prophets of God,—those who are sanctified through the truth, made clean through the blood of Christ, walking circumspectly before the world, doing good unto all men,—what are such looking for? Truly the things they look for must be exceeding great and precious, else they would not be separate from the world and insensible to all its enjoyments and pleasures.

1. We look for the second coming of Christ to judge the world in righteousness. Not as some have taught, spiritually, but literally and personally. Nor as some believe, that his coming is for distant ages on ages in the future. The New Testament Scriptures, so far from speaking of that event indefinitely, always represent the coming of Christ as near at hand. 1 Pet. 4: 7,—"But the end of all things is at hand; be ye therefore sober, and watch unto prayer." The end of all things spoken of here is the same as referred to in 2 Pet. 3—the end of this dispensation, or age, which will introduce the second advent of Messiah. The apostle James speaks also of the same event. James 5: 8,—"Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts: for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh." In Rev. 3: 11, our Lord says himself, "Behold I come quickly!" These are sufficient to show how [illegible] apostles, [illegible], and consequently the primitive christians, regarded the subject of Messiah's second coming; not far distant, as many would seem to wish and believe now, but near at hand.

2. His coming will be personal and literal. The Scriptures nowhere speak of his coming otherwise than as a visible being. Hence Balaam could say (Num. 24), as he looked down the stream of time and saw Israel's glorious destiny, "I shall see him (Jesus), but not now; I shall behold him, but not nigh." Thus Daniel could say (chap. 7: 13), "I saw in the night visions, and behold one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven"; which is in harmony with the teachings of our Lord himself in Matt. 24: 30,—"And then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." Also in Acts 1: 11. The testimony given by angels at our Lord's ascension, where it is said, "This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." And the language of Paul in 1 Thess. 4: 16,—"The Lord himself shall descend from heaven." From these passages, and many more to which we might refer, we learn the following: 1. That the coming of the Lord Jesus will be a visible coming. 2. That it will be personal. Therefore believing the oracles of God, we look for the speedy personal coming of the Lord Jesus Christ; and judging from the present aspect of things in the world, also the fulfillment of prophecy, we are confident that the day of his coming is not far distant.

1. Because then and there the church will get her reward. Hence says Paul, Heb. 9: 28,—"Unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time, without sin, unto salvation." We do not therefore hope for the reward of salvation until the coming of the Lord and the resurrection of the dead. The doctrine advocated by some, that men get their reward at death, is not found in the Bible; it is one of the traditions of men. It may appear quite pleasing, but it is no where advocated by Jesus or his apostles. They invariably teach that the saints, both living and dead, receive their reward at the resurrection. Thus our Lord said to one, Luke 14: 14, "Thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." Hence Paul could well say, "If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead"; for it was then (not at death) that he expected to receive his reward. "For" says he, (Phil. 3: 20,) "our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ; who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body"; showing that it was at the coming of Christ that he expected to be changed. In 1 Cor. 15: 51, 53, he shows more plainly the nature of the change, and also the time when it takes place—at the resurrection—consequently Paul did not expect to be changed at death, nor to get his reward then. None of the Bible writers expected to receive their reward until the resurrection. David, the sweet singer of Israel, could say in view of it, "I shall be satisfied, when (at death? Nay.) I awake with thy likeness." Ps. 17: 15. Job, strong in faith, could utter the same sentiments with all confidence, saying, "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth; and though, after my skin, worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God."—Job 19: 25, 26. "All the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change come: thou shalt call, and I will answer thee; thou wilt have a desire to the work of thy hands."—Job 14: 14, 15. When will Job's change come? 1 Cor. 15: 51–53,—"Behold! I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed."

Hence, in harmony with Paul, Job expected to be changed at the coming of Christ and the resurrection of the dead. Then the Lord shall call and the saints will answer. Then he will have a desire to the work of his hands, and the slumbering millions of his people will come forth from their dusty beds in all the vigor of immortal life, while the living saints shall be changed. Hear Paul, when about to be offered up, and to depart from this life, knowing that he had fought the good fight, had finished his course and had kept the faith,—"Henceforth," says he, "there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." 2 Tim. 4: 8. Therefore we would love his [illegible] that our Lord has said, "Behold I come quickly! and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be." Rev. 22: 12. Thus learn the following:

1. That the saints are not rewarded at death, but at the resurrection.

2. That the resurrection does not take place until the coming of Christ.

3. That it is to that event the church is to look for her reward.

This leads us to another object for which we look, and which we would also assign as a reason for looking for the second coming of our Lord, namely,

Eternal, or unending life. We all feel the want of life, life that knows no ending; and to satisfy this want was one of the objects of our Lord's mission to this world. His language is, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." It is strange that notwithstanding mankind feel the want of life in their fear of death, they yet believe themselves deathless beings; hence the phrases so much in use, such as immortal soul, deathless soul, undying soul, never dying soul, disembodied soul, deathless spirit, and other kindred expressions. We say it seems strange that men should use such phrases to express their undying nature, while every ache and pain so common to human nature can but remind them that they are mortal and dying creatures; while in harmony with the same the voice of the Almighty is heard saying, "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." None of the above phrases are found in the Bible. Nor is there anything equivalent to them in meaning. Therefore we do not believe that man is a deathless being, but, on the contrary, under sentence of death, and must die eternally, and if not raised from the dead must necessarily remain under the power of death forever. Hence it is that our Lord says, "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead yet shall he live." John 3: 16, "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him might not perish, but have everlasting life." It was in view of this that he said unto the Jews, "Ye will not come unto me that ye might have life."—John 5: 40. If Jesus Christ came into the world, suffered and died for the purpose of giving life, it then cannot possibly be true that mankind are in possession of eternal life. If men are immortal, then they are in possession of everlasting life; consequently they are not dependent on Jesus Christ for life, which contradicts the teachings of our Lord; for he says, "I am come that ye might have life." Hence to say that man is immortal is to contradict the teachings of our Lord.

But when do those that believe on him receive everlasting life? Is it when they believe? Nay; if so, true believers, or the people of God, would not die. But now all die; the righteous as well as the wicked; which would not be the case if the righteous were to receive eternal life as soon as they believed. We have eternal life therefore only by faith, not in fact, as says Paul,—"We walk by faith, not by sight." The only sense therefore in which it can be said that we have this life, is by faith in the promises of God, or, as John says, by believing the record that God hath given concerning his Son. 1 John 5: 11, "And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God, hath not life." We learn from this (1.) that God has deposited eternal life in his Son. (2.) That those who believe in the Son have this life. See Col. 3: 3,—"For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God." When do we have it in fact? Col. 3: 4,—"When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." It is then at the coming of Christ that the saints will receive this the greatest of all blessings. Having believed therefore the record that God hath given concerning his Son, we live by faith in hope of everlasting life.

But to show still further that everlasting life is not naturally common to all, we may remark that it is made an object of hope. Titus 1: 2,—"In hope of eternal life, which God that cannot lie promised before the world began." "Hope that is seen is not hope. . . . But if we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it." Rom. 8: 24. Consequently the child of God having faith in the promises of God who cannot lie, lives in hope of eternal life and patiently waits for it. Paul, in Rom. 2: 7, informs us of those who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory and honor and immortality, eternal life, and that such only will receive the reward of eternal life; but if the common doctrine that all men are immortal be true, it would be very inconsistent for the christian to seek for immortality, for he would only be seeking for what he already possessed. But Paul did not believe in the common doctrine, therefore he could exhort the followers of Christ to seek for immortal life, or, as he said to Timothy, "Fight the good fight of faith; lay hold on eternal life," and thereby escape the wages of sin, which is death. The blessed boon of eternal life is not to be received in this age, but in the world to come, where the people of God will enjoy its blessings. See Luke 18: 30; Mark 10: 30. Jesus has said that he would give unto his people immortal life. We believe, and therefore look for the precious gift. GEO. MYERS.

Visit to the Indians.

May 31st, we left Boston for the annual meeting of the Shinnecock Indians, at Southampton, on the eastern part of Long Island, fourteen miles from Sag Harbor. After a rapid ride on the shore line of cars from Boston to New London, we took passage on the convenient, well-managed steamboat Mary Benton, Capt. Bates, and had a pleasant sail to Sag Harbor, where we were met by Bro. Milton Lee, who took us to the Indian settlement, where, as usual, we met a hearty welcome.

It has been the practice of this tribe for many years to have a yearly meeting the first Sunday in June, when their friends return home as they do to Thanksgiving in New England. Besides their own families, many assemble from the surrounding country to participate in their joys. The people take this occasion to visit them and their surroundings. Early in the day, in Shinnecock bay may be seen floating the little sail boats; while from Sag Harbor, Bridgehampton, and the village of Southampton, many come in with their teams, producing quite a lively scene.

A portion of the Indians are Presbyterians, and have a meeting by themselves, having refused to commune with those who are looking for the speedy return of Jesus. When the weather will admit, we have our meetings in a grove. They seldom have any one outside of their own number to preach to them, excepting at these yearly meetings. At other times, Bro. James Lee, (an Indian,) preaches to them. They have two prayer meetings each week, and are striving to be ready to meet the coming Bridegroom, when he shall appear to gather the faithful.

Many of the sons of these Indians go on whaling voyages to the northern seas. Since we last met with them, two years ago, death has several times saddened the hearts of the parents. Bro. James Bunn has lost a son Charles, who died at St. Helena, May 24th, '61.

Bro. David Bunn lost a son Thomas, who was injured while attempting to capture a whale, and died July 24th, 1860, on the coast of Africa, aged 18 years.

Bro. Stephen Walker lost a son Charles, who died March 22nd, 1861, near the island of Bermuda, on his way home from a whaling voyage. It is saddening to think our friends are buried in the sea; but we have the blessed promise from the Lord that the sea shall deliver up the dead which are in it. We tried to comfort the sorrowing ones with the hope of soon seeing those who are sleeping in Jesus, whether on land or in the sea.

At noon we went to the bay, and buried three with Christ in baptism, who expect a "part in the first resurrection," when the Lord comes. Two of them were children of Eld. James Lee,—Milton and Roxana. Milton married Rebekah Bunn, whom some may recollect seeing at our Wilbraham campmeeting some three years since. He was chief mate of a whale ship for four years, which made a successful trip from New Bedford. He is a noble young man, and we hope to meet him in the kingdom with his companion, whom we baptized during one of our former visits to the island.

In the evening we had a pleasant communion season, when sixteen sat down with us around the table to commemorate the sufferings of Jesus. We also had a very interesting and heart-cheering social meeting, which was like a well-watered oasis to one traveling in a desert land. One aged sister, who is said to be about ninety-four years of age, gave an earnest and affecting exhortation. She had proved Jesus to be a dear friend and was not ashamed to stand up for him. She recollects the dark day in 1780, and is expecting the Savior will soon return.

Our visits to this tribe of Indians is ever pleasant, from the fact that they always take pleasure in the performance of their deeds of kindness. It is quite a luxury to meet with those who possess native, genuine, unaffected hospitality, such as is manifested by these "true Americans." They have been much oppressed by the whites, cheated and robbed, but they have borne it with a patience that is rarely exhibited in these last days. They all live in framed houses, which are quite comfortable. In all our travels we have not seen elsewhere so good family government as among these Indians. It is a rare and pleasing sight. In these days it has become the custom for children to rule their parents, and when asked to do any thing, instead of starting at once, as do these Indian children, they either pay no attention to the command, or say, "I shan't" or "I won't;" or else do the very opposite, and parents pass such wicked conduct unnoticed, till their children are fully established in the way to destruction.

These Indians cultivate their land to some extent, raising corn, wheat, oats, potatoes, and garden vegetables; and spend considerable time in taking clams and fish from the Shinnecock bay. They have several horses and cows. Indeed, it may be said they enjoy the comforts of this life, and appear more contented than most of the people of New England. We left them early Monday morning, June 2nd, feeling glad we had made them this visit; and hope, when our Savior returns, to meet many of them in the coming kingdom.—G.

Quoting Scripture.

Again we wish to urge upon our contributors the importance of quoting Scripture precisely as it reads in the Bible,—word for word. If they will do this it will save us much labor. Do not allow yourselves to quote from memory, as you are very liable to leave out or put in words.

If you leave out any words purposely, always put three or four periods in the place of the missing words, thus,— . . . . .

Whenever you quote from any book, always give the language of the author; as one or two additional words, or omissions, may entirely change his meaning, which would be dealing with him unfairly.—G.

Light Advancing.

We clipped the following from one of our exchanges:—

"Rev. H. G. Storer, Congregationalist clergyman of Scarboro, Me., has been placed under censure by his brethren for believing in the annihilation of the wicked, rather than that our heavenly Father will compel them to live forever, to furnish opportunity to torment them forever!"

We are rejoiced to learn that another is released from a belief in the doctrine of eternal torment, than which we think no error ever made so many infidels, or so dishonoured our kind heavenly Father. But if the soul be immortal, either all men must be saved, or the unsaved must experience eternal misery.

We are more and more convinced that the unscriptural doctrine of the immortality of the soul is the root of nearly all the great theological errors in the world. We have reason to praise the Lord that so many now see that man is wholly mortal, and is to get immortality "by patient continuance in well doing."—Rom. 2: 7.—G.

"Horrid looking Things."

It is very evident that those who devise the changes in fashion, especially for women, pay no attention to the teachings of the Scripture, which requires them to dress in "modest apparel;" and as for convenience, we may reasonably conclude that they wish to keep as far from it as possible. If they were properly dressed, in harmony with the laws of life and comfort, many who do not now see a well day, would be adorned with the blush of health, have double the strength they now possess, and thus be able to accomplish a much greater amount of good in the world. It is sad to see how few have courage to go outside of the slavish pale of fashion. Remember the Holy Spirit has prompted a holy man to write, "Be not conformed to this world." Who will listen to the voice of God, rather than bow to popular opinion and the tyrant fashion?

The following description of fashionable bonnets is from the Newburyport Herald:

"The new-fashioned bonnets rise up from the top of the head like the scoops of grocers, and project like the bowsprits of fishing boats, leaving a space to be filled with flowers that would be large enough for landscape gardening. More horrid looking things have not appeared in our day. —G.

The form of Souls.

The demons are now teaching, through their mediums, that there is a spirit man, who slips out of the material form at death, and leaves his body behind, some as a snake does his skin; only he is so etherealized that he can go through glass, or any other solid substance; and yet when he comes back his friends can shake hands with him as really as ever. To us one thing is certain, the whole proof rests on supposition, based on absurdity.

We clip the following from an editorial in the Advent Herald of March 1, 1862:

"We have no reason to suppose that the souls of disembodied men, or their spirits, have other than the same form as the body, and therefore no diffculty in the personal appearance of thosedescribed."—G.

Rebel Plans.

The following extract from the Shelby (Ky.) News shows the desperate plans of the rebels. We may expect a sad state of things in the short future of this world's history.—G.

The News says:—"The measures recently adopted by the traitors, and which they are endeavoring to carry out, may be stated thus:

1. Withdraw all the forces from the Virginia and North Carolina coasts, and concentrate them at some central point in Virginia. These forces to form one wing of the rebel army, to be placed under the command of Joseph E. Johnson, and to move in the direction of Pittsburg, Penn., for the purpose of invading that State.

2. Withdraw all forces from the coasts of South Carolina and Georgia, and concentrate them at Chatanooga, or some adjacent point. This division to form another wing of the rebel army, under the command of Robert E. Lee, and to move in the direction of Louisville, for the purpose of invading Kentucky and Ohio.

3. Withdraw the forces from the coasts of Florida and Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas and Arkansas, and concentrate them at Corinth. This wing to be commanded by G. T. Beauregard, and to move in the direction of Paducah, with the intent of invading Illinois and Indiana.

This plan was formed by a full council of traitors. It is unnecessary for us to give the source of our information. Suffice it that our informant obtained it from a native of this State, now a resident of another State, and whose name has often been given in the newspapers in the Southern States as a trusted and confidential agent of the traitors against the Union. Socially and politically he stood among the most prominent before the rebellion."

"From Greenland's icy mountains."

WATERBURY, VT., JUNE 2ND. We take the cars at Boston, and after a journey of not more that two hundred miles find ourselves in the valley of the Onion (alias Wonoski) river, which at this place divides the Green mountains, making a western course until it empties into Lake Champlain. But think of it, ye who dwell in sunny climes! here are mountains whose summits are covered with immense fields of snow; presenting a singular contrast, in the glare of a mid day sun, to the warm and verdant valleys below. And yet it is not on the mountain-top only that snow is found; twenty-three miles north of this place, near the junction of Green and Lamoille rivers, I found snow-banks in existence three days since by the road-side—the snow in large banks in one part of the field, and farmers tilling the soil in another. But it is said the last winter has been unusual for the great depth of snow that has fallen in Vermont. And yet it must not be understood that this is any other but a snowy region, being given to cold frosts nearly nine months out of the twelve. It does not require a very fertile imagination to apply a portion of the old missionary hymn to the Green Mountains of Vermont; although the people are perhaps in no greater need of missionary labor than are those of other portions of the christianized community.

If it is possible to find conditions of men favorable for religious enjoyment in one place more than in another, it seems that they must be found in the rural districts of Vermont. Here is a robust, industrious, intelligent, and apparently happy people. One familiar with western life can hardly fail to be impressed with the contrast between life on the prairies, and life among the Green Mountains. On the prairies, we witness one broad, blank expanse of land, without variety, and without echo, with a general scramble for the world. Here is the sublime, "cloud-capt summit," and the beautiful, sequestered vale, resonant with the songs of birds, the woodman's axe, the cow-boy's whistle, and the pratle of ruddy-faced children. Unlike many pastures of New England, this region is remarkably free from stones, so that the fields present a most charming appearance. Along the several valleys are to be found very numerous villages of small white cottages, with surroundings every way calculated to give an air of comfort and contentment. For example, in a recent excursion up the Lamoille valley, in company with our old friend, W. S. Howden,—who by the by is one of the old Second Adventist stand-by's, in for a good share of the Tract Fund, and ready for more when necessary,—we passed several beautiful fountains set in the midst of artificial ponds, alive with trout gathered from the mountain streams. In going up this valley, we pass Mansfield mountain, which lies at the west of us, said to be the highest peak of the Green Mountains; like the Camel's hump south of the Onion river valley—the next highest peak—it is now covered with snow; so that the spacious hotel in the vicinity of its summit is yet unoccupied. On our east was likewise a chain of hills or mountains, running parallel with, and generally belonging to the Green Mountain range. The enchanting beauty of this mountain scenery, as seen in a clear summer morning, or at sun setting, must be witnessed in order to be appreciated. Bostonians may gather a small conception of it by visiting their art galleries, but as is said of the "Delectable Mountains" of Paradise, What is such an ideal compared with the realities!

I have already remarked that Vermont appears auspicious to religious enjoyment. The general healthful moral appearance of the people strongly impresses one in this wise; and it is probably not to be questioned that in many respects the people of this State far exceed the condition of their fellows in other parts; yet human nature is not without evidence of its depravity even here. Among the wilds of the fishing streams in the mountains, when asking what religious privileges the people enjoyed, we were told there were none, except a Spiritualist meeting; the devotees of which it was said were very numerous. This diabolism is like the frogs of Egypt—every-where.

The doctrine of the speedy coming of the Lord has been extensively proclaimed in this State, leaving as its fruits a large number of healthful congregations. Among these we should judge the congregation of Waterbury stands number one. They have an elegant and well finished church edifice, with spire, venetian blinds, and other appurtenances; a good choir, etc., etc. Rev. David Bosworth, a nephew of the late William Miller, is their pastor; he is a man of good abilities, and we should judge well appreciated in the community. Among the influences that have conduced to spread, and perhaps in a measure popular thee doctrine of the soon coming of the Lord, may be mentioned the fact that his reverence, the Bishop of the P. E. Church of Vermont, is an avowed believer in the doctrine.

Among the incidents that will be read with interest by our subscribers is the following which I clip from a late Boston Journal:—

"Our foreign exchanges report the death of the Rev. Dr. Wolfe, the celebrated eastern traveler. He expired near Taunton, England, on the 5th inst., in the parish of which he was vicar."

Dr. Wolfe is the same we made late notice of in the Biographical Sketches published in the Crisis. He was a strong man and earnest in his faith and hope of the Second Advent. It is hoped some more extended notice of his last days may be placed at our disposal for the benefit of our readers shortly.—M.

CORRECTION.—In the extract from Herman Schultz, given by Bro. Reimer, in the last Crisis, sixth column, on the second page, near the close of the fourth paragraph, it reads:—"Any thing created cannot be a part of God; therefore nothing which is created, can have the fountain of life within itself which is in God alone. But that which has not the fountain of life within itself, its existence is dependent on some other being; therefore is not mortal, though it may exist forever." It should read, "therefore is not *im*mortal."—G.

Book Notices.

HUDSON'S NEW TRACT.—"The silence of the Scriptures concerning the Immortality of the Soul, etc.," is now ready for delivery. Single copies 5 cts; though to those who wish to scatter them, they will be furnished at a cheaper rate. A copy well read is worth 25 cents at least.

A new edition of "The rich man and Lazarus," by Hudson, is now ready. It is much improved by the addition of six pages of excellent matter on Josephus, and that humbug discourse concerning Hades, which some of our great men have made so much of in proof of the Jewish ideas on the intermediate state. It shows clearly that Josephus never wrote that extract, if indeed it ever needed any showing that a treatise containing a score or two of quotations from the Gospels and Epistles, some of which were probably not written till long after Josephus was dead and buried, were not written by him. It also examines the credibility of Josephus himself, and leaves him in rather a questionable attitude. Probably when this tract is well digested, we shall hear no more from candid readers about "Josephus' discourse concerning Hades." Let it be scattered around.

A new and enlarged edition of "The Doctrine of Endless Misery an occasion of Scepticism, by Sir James Stephen," is also now ready. A good tract, by a very eminent man. Price of each tract 5 cents single, $3 per one hundred. Address orders to H. L. HASTINGS, Boston, Mass., or to MILES GRANT. H. L. H.

The Numerical Prediction.

ELD. MILES GRANT:—The numerical prediction given by B. W. J. may, I think, be read something like this:

Louis Napoleon Buonaparte, the representative of the people of ten provinces, will be President of the indivisible, democratic French republic, by universal vote, about the nineteenth century. The figures are easily rendered: Louis Napoleon Buonaparte, representant du peuple de dix departements sera president de republique Francaise indivisible, democratique par le suffrage universel vers dix neuvieme siecle.

Yours truly, LUCY M. CHAFFEE.

INQUIRIES.—A good sister in Mass. inquires for Bro. BENJAMIN SPAULDING, saying she has been interested in his mission from house to house, down in Eastern Maine. She is anxious to know how he prospers.

Will Sister JOANNA LATHAN give her address in the Crisis. Several friends are anxious to write her. In the Lord,

In Yarmouth, Me.

It will be noticed by my numerous correspondents and friends that my P. O. address is changed from Richmond to Yarmouth. By remembering this, you will save many letters from being subjected to extra postage, and I shall get them sooner. In the providence of God, I am moved to this place, hoping thereby to be able to do the most with the least physical labor. The injury I received two years ago has deprived me of my usual ability to travel and support my family by my labor; therefore I must conform to such circumstances as duty seems to indicate. I have left a good society of brethren and sisters, who are very dear to me. They are among the best associates I ever had, and are endeared to me by many tokens of kindness. We have toiled and suffered together in the gospel hope, and enjoyed many blessings together in the Lord, in the love and unity of the gospel of Christ. We still hope to dwell together in the soon coming kingdom of God.

We are favored here also with a good society of kind and faithful brethren and sisters, whom we love in the Lord; and with whom we hope to enjoy the smiles of our blessed Savior, in unitedly striving for the advancement of his cause; but I can feel but little hope of ever being able again to engage in the work as I have done. It has subjected me to some of the most severe trials I have ever endured; to realize my physical weakness, and contemplate that I could not travel and preach "the gospel of the coming kingdom," and "sound the alarm," as formerly. I am scarcely able to do anything, yet in good health except in the spine and legs. It seems hard for me to be reconciled to do nothing, but God knows what is best. May the Lord do with me what seemeth him good; only save me at last through Jesus Christ my Lord. Brethren, pray for me, that my faith fail not. Yours in Christ, still looking for his return. I. C. WELLCOME.

From Eld. H. Grew.

DEAR BRETHREN IN THE LORD JESUS:—To the God of our salvation, who delivereth us us from all evil, and to our sympathising High Priest, who is touched with a feeling of our infirmities, I owe a tribute of grateful praise. To you, beloved in the Lord, I also owe a testimony to the immutability of the exceeding great and precious promises given to comfort you in the house of your pilgrimage. May the Lord increase our faith in his blessed word.

In perfecting the work of redeeming love in his children, our Father's providential dealings with us are most graciously designed to confirm in our experience the truths of his holy word. By bodily affliction and mental conflicts, appointed in the "Covenant ordered in all things and sure," we obtain a knowledge of our own sinfulness, unworthiness, and helplessness, and of the superior efficacy of the grace of God, which we could not obtain in any other way. In my recent confinement the Lord has taught me that, after all the manifestations of his grace to me, I am just as dependent on that grace as when I first believed. It is still true that "in me, that is in my flesh, dwelleth no good thing." Still true that, without Christ, I can do nothing acceptable to God. Blessed be his holy Name, he teaches us that, though we are great sinners, he is a greater Savior, though many are our afflictions, out of them all he delivers us. More than this; he causeth them to work for our eternal good. Shall we not then resign ourselves unconditionally to his holy and blessed will?

The heaven-born soul pants after assimilation to God. To be a partaker of his holiness is our highest glory. Is there any greater proof of his love, than his casting us into the furnace to refine us, that we may reflect his own image? O blessed, wondrous love, that thus prepares us for a more glorious immortality!

Dearly beloved, in this infinite love and wisdom let our souls sweetly rest in unconditional submission amid the trials of our holy faith. Under the influence of redeeming love, let us feel more deeply and more constantly our obligations to live not unto ourselves, but unto Him who died for us and rose again. May the hope of his speedy coming to take us to himself, not only sustain us in all our afflictions, but animate us to make nobler sacrifices for him.

Yours in christian love, and in hope of meeting you in the City where "the inhabitant shall not say I am sick."

Philadelphia, June 2nd, 1862.

We can heartily unite with our aged Bro. Grew in thanking the Lord for his recovery; and our prayer is that his last days may be his best.—G.

From Charles C. Tuck.

TO THE SAINTS OF GOD SCATTERED ABROAD:—Although we may not be personally acquainted with each other, owing to the circumstance of our being scattered over so wide a territory, and the impossibility of greeting each other face to face in this life, yet there is in the hearts of God's saints an ever-living fountain of love for each other, which all the trials and troubles and perplexities of this world cannot cause to fail; but they only help to make the fountain deeper, the love stronger and more enduring. Such, then, is the bond which binds the children of God together; and though mountains, rivers, and vast intervening distances may separate them, and make them what the world calls strangers, yet that love and affection which they bear for each other in the truth, makes them no longer strangers, but brethren and sisters in the same heavenly family. Often, as I think of you, brethren, scattered all over the wide world, bearing the taunts and reproaches of this wicked and adulterous generation, and all because of your undying love for the truth, I would earnestly wish, like the "seraphic Samuel Rutherford," that "time and days" might be "shoveled out of the way," that I might see you face to face, and shake the friendly hand, see the smile of affection, and exchange an encouraging and sympathetic word. Oh! how much need there is in these times of danger, that the hearts of God's children should be knit together in love; not contending about doctrines of minor importance, to no profit, but striving to build one another up on our most holy faith.

Truly, these are times of great danger to those who are striving for the kingdom of God, and nothing but an unswerving obedience to the commands of our Leader will carry us safely through. If we keep his commandments, and follow him closely, our progress will not be a doubtful one, but, like the rider which John saw in the Revelations, we shall go forth "conquering and to conquer." But if we turn from the path which our Leader has pointed out, and heed not the signs which are written in his word, we shall perish by the way. Let us take heed unto the sure word of prophecy, and then it will always be a lamp unto our feet, and a light unto our path. How brightly the gospel light shines to those who keep their eyes upon it. Instead of fading, and growing more dim, it grows brighter and brighter, and will even to the end of the world. And as the children of God see the light, and rejoice in it, all those who are not "looking for that blessed hope," and do not love the appearing of Christ, are walking in darkness. They do not understand. And thus the prophecy of Daniel is fulfilled before our eyes: "The wicked shall do wickedly, and none of the wicked shall understand." To my mind this is one of the plainest fulfilments of prophecy that could possibly be.

Seeing, then, that the whole world of mankind, comparatively speaking, have rejected "this gospel of the kingdom," let us, the little flock, give the more earnest heed to it, and let our light shine; thus so ordering our lives and conversation that we may at least do no harm, but if possible some little good, and be accounted worthy to obtain that world which is to come.

Yours, with christian love and fellowship, CHARLES C. TUCK.

Extracts from Letters.

W. F. BRECKENBRIDGE, Wells Forge, writes:—"Living as we are in these perilous times, which I believe are fulfilling the sure word of prophecy, I rejoice that we can by the eye of faith look beyond these scenes of war and bloodshed, trials, and tribulations, to Him who endured patiently, even unto death, and at last came off victorious over death and the grave, and is now seated at the right hand of God. It is a blessed thought, and a glorious hope, that that same Jesus is soon to leave the mediatorial seat and come back to the earth, to gather the lonely and waiting ones to himself. Feeling desirous of a home in God's everlasting kingdom, and being willing to work in the vineyard of the Lord, I find myself in duty bound to comply with the apostle's exhortation, not forsaking the assembling of ourselves, etc., but exhorting one another and so much the more as we see the day approaching. We are so scattered up and down the earth, we cannot all meet this side of the judgment; yet I trust that our editors will suffer the word of exhortation from one another in the columns of the Crisis. Let us give each other the word of exhortation, to edification. Who of God's waiting ones is willing to take up the cross and write to some poor brother or sister, weary and almost ready to go back to the world and to death? We know not what brother or sister we may strengthen; we care not where the seed is sown, if it brings forth to the glory of God. Let us be alive to the cause of Christ now in this time of coldness, darkness and peril. Let us have that living faith, that we can clasp God's word as the guide of our lives, regarding its precepts as that by which we must be judged at the bar of God. Let us wake up to the 'lively hope,' and be faithful, with the wedding garment on, and our lights burning."

JOHN CLIFFORD, Island Pond, Vt., writes: "I am still looking for the same blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the Savior, which blessed hope has been an anchor of the soul amid these perilous times. I believe that the signs of Jesus' coming are nearly all in the past, and my heart rejoices exceedingly in view of the prospect that is just before us. We have seen and are having distress of nations, with perplexity; and soon men's hearts will fail them for fear, for the powers of heaven will be shaken. We hope that some of God's servants who may be passing this way will stop and preach the word. This is a thriving business place, and there are but few professors, consequently there is not much sectarianism. Should any of the servants of the Lord stop at this place, they can call on Bro. Amos Dyer, who lives on the hill near the meeting-house."

SETH WOODRUFF writes from Unionville, Ct.:—"Often have I been comforted and my drooping spirits refreshed while reading some of your letters, dear brethren, in the Crisis. How blessed are the words of divine truth in these moments of time passing between us and the judgment. Believing we are almost home, how important it is that we give heed to those admonitions left for us, by which we may escape the evils and errors of these last days, and be accounted worthy to stand at last among the redeemed on Zion's hill. The Master says, 'Fear not, little flock, it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom.' Let us not forget the assembling of ourselves together. Shall we be discouraged because there are but two or three at the prayer-meeting? The Master has promised to meet with even two or three that gather in his name. May the Lord inspire our hearts to press forward. O that we may realize the responsibility that rests upon us! Let us watch unto prayer. I trust the laws of God are put into our minds and written in our hearts, that we may take heed to our ways and at last find a resting-place in the kingdom of God."

Mary L. Pratt writes from Vineland, Wis.:—"I still love the truth and the people of God, although sorely tempted by the devil and tried on every hand by cold-hearted professors who care for nothing but the world. I have been sometimes nearly overwhelmed in temptation's fiery gulf, and have greatly feared lest my little bark should be stranded on the rocks and quicksands; but I want to overcome and wear the crown of glory at last in the kingdom, where I may live forever with those dear ones from whose society I am separated here. There is not one of like precious faith for miles around. To meet with one of God's dear saints and have a season of conversation, would be like a refreshing draught of cold water to a thirsty soul; and to enjoy one of your social meetings would be like fertile oases in a sandy desert.

I should not know what to do without the Crisis (precious paper!) in the midst of my conflicts and deprivations in this far west; and the dear ones who write for it—many of them I know, and have heard preach. I know not as I shall ever meet you again, but my strong desire is to meet you in that happy Eden home where we ne'er shall meet again."

Maine Mission Fund.

As we are now entered on the last quarter of the year of our Maine mission enterprise, and wish to be settling up our accounts, and pay our bills before the annual conference, preparatory for a new effort, we suggest to those of our brethren and friends who have subscribed and not yet paid, that it will aid us much by each one putting the amount subscribed in a letter and sending it by mail to me, at Yarmouth. In places where several are in arrears just put your mites together, and let one send all in one letter. Brothe Fassett will visit some of the places where you live; but it is not certain to what extent, nor when. We are hoping to see this mission live through these depressing times, and the hearts of the brethren encouraged to renewed efforts for the coming year. I. C. Wellcome, Treasurer.

Yarmouth, Maine, June 4th, 1862.

"Thessalonica; or, the Model Church."—"I have read this work with great interest. It is a lively picture of primitive faith and practice. The larger part of the book consists of discourse which invites the imitation of the reader, and encourages the christian hope. It is addressed to the conscience and the heart. Let it be read accordingly, and its fruit will appear in the growing patience, gentleness, kindness, zeal, labor and joy of christians in these days of trouble, and doubt, and fear. We hear of Bereans searching the Scriptures for doctrines which may after all never get below the head. To be truly a Berean is a truly good thing. But to be Thessalonian is better still, as character is better than the mere profession of truth."—Prof. C. F. Hudson, author of Debt and Grace.

FOREIGN NEWS.

By the arrival of the Steamship, City of New York, we have intelligence from Liverpool to the 21st ult., Queenstown 22nd.

The Times speaks of the retreat from Yorktown as a great reverse to the Confederates, and affirms that if Richmond is captured it will be a tremendous victory to the Federals. It metaphorically enlarges upon the difficulties that must arise in governing the South, when the Federals, by continued victories, have brought the secessionists within their power.

The Daily News says: "Although the fall of New Orleans in a military sense cannot be overrated, it is of far greater importance in its social, commercial and political results, as the position of the Mississippi opens the way for the industrial energy of freedom, and altogether destroys the political position and territorial prestige of the Southern Confederacy. The great territories of the West are lost to the slave confederation, and this alone is a suitable recompense for all that has been spent in the war. It is an enormous gain, not only for the Union, but for Europe, for humanity and civilization." It also praises the North for conducting the struggle as free citizens ought to do.

The Paris correspondent of the London Post gives a rumor that the French government has decided to withdraw its troops from Mexico as soon as possible, but nothing confirms this.

It is reported from Italy that the Austrian troops are in campaigning order, and have occupied the hill of Lagoda Garda.

THREE DAYS LATER.—ARRIVAL OF THE PERSIA.

New York, June 5. The steamship Persia, from Liverpool 24th and Queenstown 25th, arrived this morning.

It is reported that the French government has resolved on the occupation of Mexico under every contingency, and that next fall every strategic position of the country is to be seized. The occupancy to extend three years, to allow time for the development of the national will.

It is reported that France has formally demanded the expulsion of the ex-King of Naples from Rome.

The consistory at Rome unanimously voted for the canonization of the Japanese martyrs. Twenty-three cardinals and 120 bishops were present.

A Turkish army of 20,000 had assembled in Albany, and was about to enter the Montenegrin territory.

FOUR DAYS LATER.

Cape Race, June 6. Steamship City of Washington, from Liverpool May 28th and Queenstown 29th, arrived off this point at 7 o'clock this evening.

The Journal de Rouen announces the discovery of a common wild plant which will enable manufacturers to dispense with American cotton.

It is reported that M. Thouvenal has sent a letter to the Papal Government to the effect that France has no intention of making any change in the aspect of the Roman question.

ONE DAY LATER.

Cape Race, June 7. The steamship North American, from Liverpool 29th, and Londonderry 30th, passed here at noon to-day.

France. A Paris Journal states that Count Montebello has been appointed Commander-in-Chief of the French army at Rome.

Italy. According to news from Rome, the family of Francis II. was preparing to leave that city.

Spain. The government is about to build seven iron frigates.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

From before Richmond.

June 2. The rebel officers were unable to rally their troops this morning. They retreated toward Richmond. Our men have moved forward to Fair Oaks, five miles from the city. Jeff. Davis and Gov. Letcher were both at the fight of yesterday.

Gen. Hooker made a reconnoissance to-day on the Williamsburg turnpike to within four miles of Richmond, without meeting the enemy in force. Every one feels sanguine of the fall of the rebel capital when our troops advance for an engagement.

We have taken some five hundred prisoners, among whom are several prominent officers.

Our loss in the two days' engagement in killed and wounded will amount to three thousand, a great number of missing, who will probably return.

The enemy's dead left on the field amount to over 1200.

June 5th. The severe storm which set in Tuesday afternoon lasted during the whole of yesterday. The water in the Chickahominy rose to an unprecedented height. The railroad trains from White House to the late battle field were detained several hours, and the telegraph line was down in several places.

A contraband who left Richmond Sunday night states that all carts, furniture cars, ambulances and carriages that could be found were impressed into the service for the carrying of the dead and wounded from the battle field, and that the hotels, together with a number of public and private buildings, were turned into hospitals. All the information shows that the enemy suffered terribly.

McLellan's Headquarters, June 3d. The following address was read to the army this evening at dress parade, and was received with an outburst of vociferous cheers from every regiment:

Headquarters Army of Potomac,
Camp near New Bridge, Va., June 2.

Soldiers of the Army of the Potomac! I have fulfilled at least a part of my promise to you. You are now face to face with the rebels, who are held at bay in front of the capital. The final and decisive battle is at hand. Unless you belie your past history the result cannot for a moment be doubtful. If the troops who labored so faithfully and fought so gallantly at Yorktown, and who so bravely won the hard fights at Williamsburg, West Point, Hanover Court House and Fair Oaks, now prove worthy of their antecedents, the victory is surely ours.

The events of every day prove your superiority. Wherever you have met the enemy you have beaten him. Wherever you have used the bayonet he has given way in panic and disorder. I ask of you now one last crowning effort. The enemy has staked his all on the issue of the coming battle. Let us meet him and crush him here in the very centre of the rebellion.

Soldiers, I will be with you in this battle, and share its dangers with you. Our confidence in each other is now founded upon the past. Let us strike the blow which is to restore peace and union to this distracted land. Upon your valor, discipline and mutual confidence the result depends.

(Signed,) G. B. McClellan,
Major General Commanding.

June 6. Two deserters who came in this morning state that General Joseph Johnson was seriously if not mortally wounded in the groin by a minnie ball, during the late battle, and that Gen. Smith is now in command.

These deserters state that the rebel loss is estimated at 10,000 in killed and wounded and missing.

No troops are in the city excepting those doing guard duty, and attending to the sick and wounded, all being compelled to remain outside. There were no signs of evacuation, but on the contrary, everything goes to show a determined resistance on the part of the rebels.

Gentlemen direct from Washington say the number of killed and wounded in the recent engagement will probably amount to seven thousand.

From Corinth.

Washington, June 4. The following dispatch was received this afternoon at the War Department:

Hon. Edwin M. Stanton, Secretary of War. Gen. Pope, with 40,000 men, is thirty miles south of Corinth, pushing the enemy hard. He already reports 10,000 prisoners and deserters from the enemy, and 15,000 stand of arms. A farmer says that when Beauregard learned that Col. Elliot had cut the railroad on his line of retreat, he became frantic, and told his men to save themselves the best way they could. We have captured nine locomotives and a number of cars. One of the former is already repaired and is running today. Several more will be in running order in two or three days. The result is all I could possibly desire.

Signed) H. W. Halleck.
Major General Commanding.

Chicago, June 4. A special dispatch from Cairo says: "Immediately on the occupation of Corinth a force from Gen. Pope's division was sent in pursuit of such rebels as fled westward.

Gen. Granger, in command of two regiments of cavalry, soon came on the rear of the enemy six miles southwest of Corinth, and engaged in a fight. He lost 50 men, but was afterwards largely reinforced, when the rebels were surrounded.

It is said that from 5000 to 10,000 have been captured. A portion of them had reached Pittsburg Landing, en route for Northern military prisons.

Corinth, June 5. Gen. Halleck moved his headquarters here to-day, occupying the house formerly occupied by Gen. Bragg. Gen. Thomas occupies the one formerly occupied by Gen. Beauregard.

The enemy are reported 80,000 strong between Baldwin and Okolona.

An English officer who deserted says, high Confederate officers told him that they left here 120,000 strong; but when they arrived at Booneville 50,000 had deserted, mostly Alabamians, Louisianians, and Mississippians.

Cairo, June 6. Fort Wright has been evacuated. We are now in possession. A steamer has arrived from the fleet. At the time she left flames were breaking out in the barracks at Fort Pillow, and the gunboats had dropped down the river.

New York, June 6. The Tribune's special Washington dispatch says a released Union officer, who was ten days in the hands of the rebels at Winchester, says the rebels seemed to look forward to the destruction of their great armies as a thing sure to happen sooner or later, in which case they have made up their minds to take to the bush and wage a guerrilla warfare, in which they said they felt themselves at home.

It will appear by a corrected dispatch of Gen. McClellan's, that the name of the battle field before Richmond is "Fair Oaks," instead of "Seven Pines," as it has been hitherto designated.

New York, The Fortress Monroe correspondent of the Philadelphia Press says: From City Point, I learn that our war vessels in the James river, above City Point, have run the batteries at Drury's Bluff, and it is rumored that the Monitor has passed through the obstructions, sinking the rebel gunboats about Richmond.

If this be true, the Monitor by this time is at the Rocketts.

A number of powerful gunboats have gone up the river during the past two or three days, and our fleet before Richmond is now quite formidable, consisting of twenty vessels armed with the very best of naval ordnance.

Washington, June 8. Advices have been received from Com. Davis, at Memphis, announcing a battle between his fleet, aided by Ellet's ram flotilla, and the rebel fleet of eight gunboats and rams. The engagement commenced at 5.30 on the morning of the 6th inst., and ended at 7 A. M., in a running fight, the result of which was the capture or sinking of seven of the rebel fleet. One escaped by superior speed. Ellet, who is seriously but not dangerously wounded, is highly complimented for his gallantry and skill.

Memphis surrendered immediately after the engagement, and was placed under military authority.

Washington, June 8. The following statement of the loss in the battle of Fair Oaks has been received at the War Department:

Hon. Edwin M. Stanton, Secretary of War: Statement of the killed, wounded and missing of the 31st of May, and June 1st, in front of Richmond.

Gen. Sumner's corps, 2d—183 killed, 894 wounded, 146 missing.

Gen. Heintzelman's corps, 3d—259 killed, 980 wounded, 155 missing.

Gen. Keys' corps, 4th—448 killed, 1753 wounded, 621 missing.

Total—980 killed, 3627 wounded, 1222 missing.

The grand total of killed, wounded and missing is 5739.

A nominal list will be furnished as soon as the data can be received.

(Signed) G. B. McClellan,
Major General Commanding.

Off Charleston, S. C. Our gunboats are within four miles of Charleston, by way of Stono Inlet, and we expect soon to attack it.

Philadelphia, June 7. The gunboat Bienville has arrived with three schooners in tow. They were captured off Charleston, and are named Providence, Locvilla, and Rebecca, from Nassau.

The Tribune editorially says: We learn through a private channel, in which we confide, that the Unionists of Texas will soon be heard from. We understand that their arrangements for restoring their State to the Union have been quietly matured, and that they have ere this thrown the old flag to the breeze under the lead of Gen. Sam Houston. We cherish strong hopes that the rebels of Texas will soon turn up missing, and that old Sam and Uncle Sam will have possession of the State.

New York, June 7. The Times' correspondent states that John Washington, an aid on Gen. Johnston's staff, while carrying a message through the woods, unconsciously rode into our lines. On his person was found a book containing a complete list of our army divisions, corps, regiments, and officers, together with its disposition before Richmond.

This capture proves that the rebels have other more reliable means of obtaining information than by collecting it from newspapers. Washington was a cadet at West Point and only graduated last year. On his person and in the same book which contained the disposition and number of our officers, was a full and complete statement of the rebel force now under Gen. Johnston and its disposition likewise.

Louisville, Ky., June 9. Our forces now occupy Baldwin, Guntown, Jackson and Bolivar. Railroad repairs are progressing rapidly. The enemy passed Guntown last night, retreating southward from Baldwin. It is estimated that 20,000 have deserted since they left Corinth, mostly from Kentucky, Tennessee and Arkansas regiments.

It is believed by country people that Beauregard cannot enter Columbus with half the troops he brought away from Corinth. The whole country north and east of Baldwin is full of armed soldiers returning to Tennessee and Kentucky.

Gen. Pope telegraphs from the advance that the prisoners who first desired to be exchanged, now want to take the oath of allegiance.

The enemy drove and carried off everything for miles around. The wealthiest families are destitute and starving. Women and children are crying for food, and all the males have been forced into the army.

New York, June 9. The Times says the Rev. Dr. Styles, who has resided in Richmond for the last year, states in a private letter that the Confederate army there numbers two hundred thousand men, and that it is well disciplined and determined to make a desperate fight in defence of the city.

Charleston, June 7. The enemy's gunboats are moving up as if to engage our batteries. Great excitement prevails, as the gunboats are in sight at times. Every confidence is felt in Gen. Gist's ability to drive the invaders off. There is still heavy firing in that direction, and it is rumored that 100 Yankees more have been captured.

Gen. Gist's last dispatch says that the prisoners we took this morning report the enemy landed 1700 strong on Battery Island and on John's Island.

New York, June 9. The Times' Washington dispatch says the Secretary of the Treasury intends to ask Congress to authorize a further issue of $150,000,000 demand Treasury notes.

Terrible Freshet in Pennsylvania.

Easton, Pa., June 5. A terrible freshet prevails in the Delaware and Lehigh rivers. The water reaches the second stories in the lower part of the town.

All the bridges between here and Mauchchunk are swept away. Lehigh bridge is partly gone; it will probably be totally demolished. All the canals are under water.

The iron works have stopped, and the railroads are submerged. Many people have been drowned in their houses.

The freshet in the Delaware is equal to that of 1841. Large quantities of furniture, store goods, bridges, houses, cattle, etc., are going down the river. All the bridges on Broadhead's Creeks, except the railroad bridges, are gone. It is impossible to arrive at any thing like an accurate estimate of the damage, but it is reported at ten millions.

There is no doubt that many lives have been lost. It is reported that one house, containing a family of seven persons, was carried away and broken to pieces against one of the bridges on the river above.

☞ Archbishop Hughes, at the reception by the Emperor Napoleon, had the privilege of blessing his son, "the imperial Boy," who was brought in for that purpose.

☞ The number of horses in the world is estimated at about 27,000,000; of this number, the United States have 5,000,000. The general estimate has been eight to ten horses in Europe for every hundred inhabitants.

☞ The wealth of the Rothschilds is estimated at 800,000,000 francs, a sum that in gold would task the strength of fifty horses to draw it.

Special Notice.

The Grove and Campmeeting advertised to commence at Tremont, Mass., June 24th, is changed to July 1st.

A Mistake.—In my letter in the Crisis of May 28th, I said that they were shut out of the school-house in East Canaan; I should have said, shut out of the school-house in Orange. B. P. Manning.

Campmeeting at Wilbraham.

It is thought best that our great annual gathering at Wilbraham commence this year Monday, Aug. 25th, and continue one week. Particulars hereafter.

F. H. Berick, Miles Grant, Geo. T. Adams, } Committee of Arrangements.

Notice.

Edwin Burnham expects to commence efforts in one of the churches in the city of St. Johns, N. B., on the third Sunday in June. If the friends in the Provinces wish to correspond with him while there, they can address him in care of S. F. Mathews. Edwin Burnham.

Notice.—R. I. Q. C.

The Rhode Island Quarterly Conference will hold its next session at River Point, R. I., commencing Wednesday, June 25th, at 2 o'clock, P. M. We expect this to be one of the best meetings the conference has ever held, and hope it will be largely attended. Brethren in the ministry, and delegates from churches, let the church in River Point be cheered by your presence and strengthened by your councils. H. F. Carpenter, Sec.

May 26th, 1862.

Notice.

A special conference of the Iowa, Minn., and Wis. Christian Conference will be held in connection with the grove meeting at Hesper, Almikee Co., Iowa, July 4th, 1862. Hope to see many preachers and delegates, as there is business of importance, in which all are interested. Wm. Sheldon, Pres.
Peter S. W. Deyo, Clerk.

P. S. We expect to have the New England Mission Tent.

Notice of Eld. J. V. Himes.

I shall commence a series of meetings in Melbourne, C. E., Wednesday, June 18th, and continue over the Sabbath, or longer, and shall also visit Danville, and other places in the vicinity, as the door may open. My address will be Melbourne from the 15th of June and onward—but Boston, Mass., till then. Any persons or societies wishing lectures on the personal coming of Christ, and the signs and time of the nearness of the event, will address me without delay. J. V. H.

Notice.

The Lord willing, there will be a conference meeting in Buchanan, Mich., to commence on the evening of the 26th of June, and continue over the following Sabbath. We hope to see a general gathering of our scattered friends at this meeting. Let us make this meeting a subject of prayer, that much good be accomplished. Bro. Israel Dammon is expected to be present.

D. R. & M. S. Mansfield.

Grove and Camp Meeting.

Good news to the happy souls who gathered last year at Tremont, Mass., for divine worship in the grove. There will be another grove and campmeeting in the vicinity of the Tremont Depot, West Wareham, Mass., commencing Tuesday evening, July 1st, 1862, and continuing over the following Sunday. Eld. M. Grant, H. L. Hastings, if possible, and others will be present to preach the word. Many things promise to make this an interesting and profitable meeting. First, the blessing of God upon us last year. Those who were there will welcome us again, and bring others with them. Second, its location—easy of access to many churches. It is situated on the Fairhaven and Boston, R. R., at its junction with the Cape Cod R. R.; fare reduced on this road from Middleboro and New Bedford. We expect a good representation from New Bedford, Mattapoisett, Plymouth, Carver, Middleboro, Taunton, and perhaps from Boston. Third, its accommodations; a beautiful grove, in the midst of an orderly people; good board provided cheaper than by ourselves; lodging in private dwellings near by, or in tents, as chosen. Fourth, the cheering evidences that we are nearing our eternal home, cannot fail to awaken an unusual interest in every believing heart. Come then, one and all, prepare for a good meeting; pray much about it; come to labor for precious souls; come full of the blessing of Christ; come early; come to stay through the meeting; come, and may many kind friends in Tremont bless the day of our coming. In behalf of many brethren,
H. F. Carpenter.

Special Book Notice.

To Correspondents.

E. Evans—Will you please to give us the Post Office to which your paper has been sent? Until you do this, or give us your name in full, we cannot make the change you request. We have two of the same initials in Canada West—Edward and Ephraim—which is it?

Geo. W. Smith—We have credited your remittance of last month to the paper sent to J. Buckingham, which we shall now send to your name, as we understand you to direct. Is it right? The pamphlet was sent as first ordered.

N. Warner—It was our mistake in entering you as a new subscriber, when you made your last remittance. Correcting the mistake, your last paid to No. 348.

Harvey Pratt—Sent tracts June 5th.

We would say to the one who requested us to "make a mark on the corner of Mrs. David Kilby's paper," that the note was received, but the address is wanting. Please give it.

Bro. G. A. Lewis—We are out of "Reasons for my Hope," but expect some soon, and will endeavor to forward a copy as soon as we can.

Bro. G. W. Bailey—We have forwarded the letter to Bro. Burlen.

L. Wetherbee's P. O. address is Bradley, Me.

Letters Received.

Reasons for my Hope, and the Tokens of its Speedy Realization. 2d 1000. Paper, 25 cts. Cloth, 40 cts.

Containing an exposition of the hope of the Church—abounding in facts pertaining to Prophecy, the signs of the times, the increase of knowledge, spread of the Gospel, Missions, Travels, Bible translations, Bible societies, &c. The Statistics alone are worth many times the price of the book.

Retribution; or, The Doom of the Ungodly, after the Resurrection of the Dead, Just and Unjust. Paper, 30 cts. Cloth, 60 cts.

A solemn and earnest argument in proof of the resurrection of the dead, just and unjust; the punishment of the ungodly in the lake of fire, the second death; and a refutation of the notion that wicked men have no resurrection, judgment, or conscious punishment after death. Judging from the reception it meets with, it hits the nail on the head.

Pauline Theology; or, The Scripture Doctrine of Future Punishment, as taught in the Epistles of Paul. 12th 1000. Paper, 15 cts.

This work contains the passages on future punishment found in Paul's fourteen Epistles. His words are quoted and defined in Greek and in English. Many, upon reading it, have given up their sectarian theology to embrace the theology of Paul. The wide circulation of the work, which has never been refuted, indicates its value and interest.

The Old Paths; or, The Primitive Doctrine of a Future Life. 3d 1000. Paper, 15 cts.

Beginning where Pauline theology closes, this treatise exhibits the teachings of all the Apostolical Fathers, as found in the writings bearing their names, such as Barnabas, Clement, Hermas, Ignatius, and Polycarp, giving large quotations illustrating their opinions upon the questions of Life, Immortality, Future Punishment, and the Kingdom of God.

Tracts on Immortality: containing Pauline Theology, The Old Paths, Milton on the State of the Dead, and other minor tracts. Bound in cloth, 30 cts.

Tracts on Prophecy: containing more than Twenty pointed, stirring, and earnest Tracts on Prophetical and Practical subjects. Bound in cloth, 30 cts.

The Perfect State; or, Forever with the Lord. A Book of Instruction and Consolation. Preparing. $1.00.

This work contains a statement of the Scripture teachings concerning how men shall come to be forever "with the Lord," including lengthy and critical discussions of Paradise, Hades, Sheol, the Intermediate State, and other matters of interest; while it serves to cheer the heart-stricken and with the hope of glory when Christ, who is our life, shall appear.

The Voice of the Church on the Coming and Kingdom of the Redeemer: or, a History of the Doctrine of the Reign of Christ on Earth. By D. T. Taylor. Edited and revised by H. L. Hastings. 4th edition. 420 pp. 12mo. Price, $1.00.

This is the ablest work extant on this subject. It proves that the common notion of the world's conversion was unknown to the Church of Christ for 1500 years. It quotes the views of some four hundred of the greatest theologians known, giving an account of each, and presenting their statements on either side in their own words. Multitudes of commendatory notices from ministers and papers, of all kinds, might be quoted. Read it and be satisfied.

Spiritualism a Satanic Delusion and a Sign of the Times. By William Ramsey, D. D. Edited by H. L. H. Price, cloth, 60 cts. Paper, 25 cts.

A masterly exposure of the grand delusion of the age, which has shielded many and recovered some from this snare of Satan. The author, a profound scholar, long conversant with pagan superstitions among the heathen, while a missionary in India, has shed much light upon the question of this strong delusion.

Wayside Gleanings. By Fannie Parry. The gathered Memorials, in Prose and Verse, of one who fell asleep in early life. Elegant cloth binding, 60 cts.

God is Faithful.—1 Cor. 10: 13.

Courage! pilgrim, let the burden
That is pressing on thine heart
Yield to this divine assurance,
Bid the weight of care depart.
Look aloft, the same forever
Is thy Maker, faithful, true,
And to-day his love, unchanging,
As before, doth care for you.

Not "above that ye are able,"—
Trust that never failing word;
Clouds may gather thick around thee,
And e'en thunder tones be heard,
Grace is given to endure it,
All the subtle foe may bring;
Only trust and not be fearful,
There is strength in Israel's King.

Yet a little longer, pilgrim,
Struggle on, and there is rest,
Freed forever from temptation,
Thou shalt be supremely blest.
'Tis a warfare fierce, unending,
Till this mortal life is done,
Yet press on a little longer,
And the victory will be won.

An Exposition of Phil. 1: 21.

BY T. WHEELER.

"For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain."

Let it be understood that Paul was at this time a prisoner at Rome, and liable to suffer death by martyrdom. The text I have quoted is not an independent sentence, but only a conclusion of a previous statement. The statement is this,—"Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether it be by life, or by death" (verse 20). How can this be, Paul? How prove it? "For, (or because—Sawyer,) to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain." Therefore, to correctly interpret the conclusion in verse 21, we must keep our eye upon the statement in verse 20. Verse 21, fully expressed, would read thus,—For me to live is Christ, and for me to die is gain. It will be noticed that the words "Christ," and "gain," in the two clauses of the sentence, are designed to express or convey the same idea; that is, the result will be the same, although following from different conditions—life and death. For me to live is Christ, and for me to die is Christ; or, for me to live is gain, and for me to die is gain.

That this idea is correct will be seen from the statement in verse 20,—"Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether it be by life or by death." In either case, whether Paul lives or dies (by martyrdom), the result is the same—"Christ shall be magnified." How would Christ be magnified equally by Paul's life or death (by martyrdom)? Answer. If he lived he would preach Christ, and thus advance his cause; if he died (a martyr), the re-action would only advance the cause, rather than hinder it. Says Paul,—"The things which happened unto me have fallen out rather unto the furtherance of the gospel." Again he says,—"And many of the brethren in the Lord, waxing confident by my bonds, are much more bold to speak the word without fear." Phil. 1: 12, 14. Thus, if Paul's life was spared, Christ would be magnified, and if it should be taken, the esult would be the same; he would be magnified.

Now, then, for the text,—"For me to live is Christ, and to die is gain." This text suggests three questions, viz.; 1. "Die." What death is meant? Natural, as we usually call it (though incorrectly, the Scripture terms it "commmon death," see Num. 16: 29); or, an unnatural or a violent one—a martyr's death? 2. "Gain." What is the gain? 3. Who is the gainer; Paul, or Christ? It will be noticed that these three questions have already been answered in this article. The death in Paul's mind was that of a martyr, as the context plainly shows. The "gain" was—Christ magnified, and hence the gainer was Christ, and not Paul. The popular view of this text is, that Paul is the gainer, and hence it is inferred that it is gain for all christians to die, under all circumstances.

We will suppose that the text designs to teach that Paul was the gainer. When we consider the condition that Paul was in, constantly subject to persecutions, bonds and imprisonments, the thought arises, would it be to infer that all christians under all circumstances, suffering no persecution, would be gainers by dying? This inference, for so it is, is wholly assumed and unwarranted. If we are all gainers by dying, then the gain must be of a positive nature, rather than negative. But if our gain is positive, pray what is it? for we as Adventists readily concede that until the resurrection we get no glory, no crown, and no reward. Then what can it be? Let him answer who can.

Again. If we gain more in dying than by living, is not the sentiment of the poet true where he says—

"Death gives us more than was in Eden lost"?

Would not this convey the idea that life was a curse and death a blessing? Let us be careful and not reverse the Bible, and imagine that God and Satan have changed characters. God has given us life, and sin has given us death. Life is a blessing, and death is a curse. May the Lord help us to be wise, so that we may choose the blessing and not the curse. Whoever chooseth death, rather than life, I am fearful will get his wish.

But we have supposed Paul to have gained something by dying; what is it? It must have been of a negative nature. He would have no more suffered persecution; he would have rested from his labors. See Rev. 14: 13. In the grave "the wicked cease from troubling; and there the weary be at rest."—Job 3: 17. "The righteous is taken away from the evil to come."—Isa. 57: 1. Death gives us only dissolution, ruin and loss; but, when Christ our Life-giver comes, he will reverse things—turn the scale, and give us immortal life. Bless the Lord! Our great pay-day comes not at death, but at the resurrection.

If it is true that there is something to be gained by death, more than we enjoy in this life, so that it is desirable for us to die, what did Paul mean where he said, "If after the manner of men I have fought with beasts at Ephesus, what advantageth it me, if the dead rise not?"—1 Cor. 15: 32. Here Paul predicates everything upon the resurrection. Without that, there was no advantage. If Paul, or any one else, gains anything positively by dying, then so much is gained,—there is so much advantage. According to verses 23 and 24, as it stands in our version, Paul seems to indicate that he had a desire for death, dissolution, the unclothed state, or the intermediate state. But it will not do to thus interpret Paul here, when he in another place (2 Cor. 5) expressly contradicts it in saying,—"Not for that we would be unclothed." I have no desire for death, dissolution, or the intermediate state. Paul "earnestly" desired "to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven." It was the immortal body that Paul so earnestly desired; he wished to be clothed upon with this body, immortal body; but this immortal body we only get at the resurrection, not at death. Says Paul,—"Yet what I shall choose I wot not." This choice was between life and death. He then gives his reason,—"For I am in a strait betwixt two (life and death), having a desire to depart, and to be with Christ; which is far better."

Between life and death Paul had no choice. But there was a third thing which he did desire, and this desire was "to be clothed upon." To illustrate; between a lemon and an orange Paul had no choice; but here is an apple which he has a desire for. Paul says in 2 Cor. 5: 6,—"Whilst we are at home in the body, we are absent from the Lord." The natural inference from this text would be that, immediately upon death, or dissolution, we should be with the Lord; or, as the 8th verse has it, "Willing rather to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord." But this does not necessarily follow. See first verse,—"For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal, in the heavens." The very natural inference from this verse is, that immediately upon dissolution we receive our house from heaven; but we know from the context that this was not Paul's idea. The house from heaven is explained to be—"that mortality might be swallowed up of life," which will not be until the resurrection.

Whoever would correctly understand Philippians, 1st chapter, must have an eye upon 2 Corinthians, 5th chapter. The Bible should be so interpreted as to harmonize, for it is a beautiful and concordant book when understood.

There is one other point I wish to notice, in Phil. 1: 23. "For I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart, and to be with Christ." The word "depart," I am informed, has for its original, analuo, and means anything rather than dissolution. I understand that this word analuo occurs but once more in the Greek Testament, viz., Luke 12: 36,—"When he will return from the wedding." The word return is analuo, and means return; if it had been thus rendered in Phil. 1: 23, all would have been clear—"having a desire for the returning, and to be with Christ."

For the Crisis.

A Short Sermon.

"Be not conformed to this world; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God."—Rom. 12: 2.

Paul is here entreating his brethren not to be conformed to this world, as though he perceived a danger in this direction of their being led away by the evil influences that were around them; and knowing the Master had said, "Ye are the light of the world," "the salt of the earth"; but if they were conformed to the world, they could not be lights; hence the exhortation was given. God's people have ever been "a peculiar people, zealous of good works." They have ever been a separate people, walking in another direction from the people of this world. They are transformed by the renewing of their mind. The things they once hated, now they love; and the things they once loved, now they hate. Thus have God's people ever walked. Is the way wider now? No. It has always been a straight and narrow way, with here and there a traveler. Never were dangers so great as now. The spirit of the world at the present time is all calculated to lead men astray.

Hear the apostle John in his first letter: "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world."—1 John 2: 15, 16. Dear brethren and sisters, let us see that we do not conform to the world in any thing. If we are not on our watch, we shall be led astray ere we are aware of it. Let us see that we follow Christ, and not men. Let all that we do, whether we write, speak, eat, or drink, be done with an eye single to the glory of God. Let us not stop and ask the question, what will this one say, and that one, but what will God say? Let us be ready; the Master will soon come; and his bride will be without "spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing." Let us remember that it is the pure in heart that will see God. "As he which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation."—1 Pet. 1: 15.

May the Lord bless you all, and lead you by his Spirit in all things, is the earnest desire of your Bro in Christ,

G. A. Streeter.

Extracts from Herman Schultz,

"Though by his creation man has become a being, which possesses many superior qualities over the rest of visible creatures; to him is given a spirit (mind), which, after the divine image, may decide by itself, is conscious of being a free being, is what is generally called personality, to him is given the dominion over all nature. (Gen. 1: 26, etc.) Yet all this does not separate him from the created beings; the life-giving power of God may at any time be withdrawn from him. If this were impossible with man, the divine spirit of life would be a part of him, and in consequence of this, man would in his physical nature bear within him a part of God. This, however, would drive us to a pantheistic idea of the divine being."

"Men were never created immortal, but they may become immortal,—only the power to attain to immortality God laid into man at his creation. To become spiritual, is the foundation upon which man may obtain immortality; with this agrees Schelling and R. Rothe. With the latter it is a fixed belief that this spirituality must be accompanied by a close communion with God, without which there is only such a kind of life which may at any time live itself out. Also Prof. Oettinger does not teach a natural, but only such an immortality of the soul which has for its author the Lord Jesus Christ."

"It is true, we could not have any real idea of immortality, if it did not exist, as we could not have any idea of one hundred dollars, if they had no existence; but this does not prove that a man must have both in possession. To say that in every soul there is an idea of immortality, is not true; this proves the fact that many deny it, both by word and deed."

"As we remarked before, it is at the least an unproved acceptation, that the spirit of man received the idea of immortality at his creation, a hyypóthesis, which, if we consider men in their experience, must strictly be denied. The idea of immortality is not found in millions of men, and has for centuries not been in the mind of man in general. In ancient times only the most illuminated minds were capable to comprehend the idea of immortality, and from that time to this very day we hear through all classes of society the cry of materialism: 'let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we are dead.' So we see that the assertion'—'all men have an idea of, or a desire after immortality, therefore they must be immortal,' falls to the ground."

"It is true man, as he should be, bears within himself infinite germs; but he may choke and kill them, so that nothing remains of them. Therefore this proved, all (men have a desire after immortality, therefore they are immortal, etc.,) must look for better foundations; it must bring forth some close connection or union with the divine being, according to which man may feel within him such infinite germs, the same as Plato does when he says: 'anima haeret divinis.' But this puts man into a different position altogether. For if the soul is immortal because it is a part of God, then immortality is not a created attribute, which would inseparably cohere to man's nature; for if this was the case, we would physically bear within us a part of God. Immortality then can only be based upon something which is independent, ethical, for only in liberty (spiritual) we are united to God. All this shows us that man has not immortality within him because of being created a man. That which is common to all men, (leaving out of sight all moral and natural differences) which, in spite of Schelling and Weis, is common to the lowest negro as well as to the greatest German philosopher,—the common nature of man does not bear within itself immortality, i. e., the impossibility to perish, even this very day."

"Body and soul here are equally separate from God; no self-created spirit can separately be equal to God; there is one Spirit of God, which calls all individual creatures to life, which animates all; but this is not a part of man, but his cause, the same as it is the originator of all life. Though we are of divine origin, (Acts 17: 27,) as God calls Israel his son, and the king of his people his child,—(Ps. 2: 5) though we can feel him within us; yet, according to our nature, as men we are creatures, and can perish, are not immortal, but mortal man." L. Reimer.

The Prayer and Promise.

"Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom."—Luke 23: 42.

How beautifully suggestive the prayer of the dying thief! How delightful the thought, to be remembered at the coming and in the kingdom of our God! How appropriately can we each utter the same prayer! O! to be remembered then will more than repay us for having ceased to be remembered by our friends here; and the beautiful reply of our Savior, "Thou shalt be with me in paradise," is so fraught with import, so full of meaning, as to cause the poor way-worn pilgrim heart to involuntarily sigh for the joys of paradise restored. Here calamities befal us, misfortunes beset us, adversity comes in tornado gusts upon us, afflictions come, and where are our loved ones? Echo answers where? Poets may sing of the loveliness of death, romance may paint its beauties, but stern reality points to yonder cemetery; there, side by side, are two little graves which show that a mother's heart is riven with anguish. Again disease comes with its relentless hand, and almost imperceptibly undermines the constitution of a dear husband, who, pale and emaciated, shows unmistakably that he too is a marked victim for the insidious foe. O the many trials of life, the many fresh wounds which our poor lacerated hearts are constantly receiving, the many blighted hopes which darken life's horizon, the many days of sadness, the many nights of anguish,—although they sometimes serve to dishearten us, yet they beget within us the desire, and even indite the petition, "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom." Then how cheering the thought, how like the oasis in the desert to the weary traveler comes the heart-cheering promise, "Thou shalt be with me in paradise."

"O glorious day, O blessed hope,
My heart leaps forward at the thought."

A few more ills, a few more toils, a few more heart achings, and we are home; saved at last; reunited with loved ones in paradise restored. A. E. Bennett.

Who Cometh?

TO THE AUTHOR OF COMING STRUGGLE.

The human family has always been subject to the annoyance of Satan. He destroyed the happiness of our first parents in Eden. Since which time he hath vexed mankind "with all deceivableness of unrighteousness." He greatly afflicted Job; moved David to iniquity; tempted Christ; and finally, has always been busy to promote his own cause. To accomplish which, he presented himself among the sons of God; often quoted Scripture, though he had no regard for it; is transformed into an angel of light; in short, becomes all things to all men, that by all means he may deceive some. Here he follows Paul, just about as he follows the Bible and good in general, only varying about one word in a dozen, so as to give an opposite meaning.

That Satan wrought wonders in ancient times, and in the days of our Savior, is certain. Men were possessed of devils, who went out of them, into swine, and performed actions. Who will say it was a delusion? that no devils were there? that our Savior did not cast out devils, actual devils? There were witches, wizards, soothsayers, magicians, &c. But these were not generally publically known. They wrought in secret; generally being intimidated by law and by public opinion. But the works of the Devil were made manifest through these mediums. Doubtless, Satan had living mediums through whom he acted in all cases of possessing of devils, or bewitching; but never did he in those days what the prophets foresaw that the wickedness of the world, in the last days, would enable him to accomplish. Nor do we suppose that Satan has wrought six thousand years at his trade and learned nothing. Nay, but he hath grown wise in his craft. If we carefully follow divine record, we find that he has been developing from the beginning. "Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils." Satan, seeing the development of the sciences, and the taste of mankind for them in these last days, stepped forward with mesmerism, saying, it is a new science; introduced it into many high places and high families; yes, and into many good families. This well established, to prepare the way, he brings forth Spiritualism. Now greater wonders are performed. It deceives many. It fills its ranks, to a great extent, from the so-called faithful; they departing from the faith. But when their craft is questioned, they say, "O, don't be frightened, it is only Mesmerism." So it may be, and Mesmerism nothing but Spiritualism, and Spiritualism nothing but ancient witchcraft.

Paul to the Ephesians, calls Satan the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience. His habitation is in the air; but his works are with the children of men. John, in the Isle of Patmos, tells of "things which must shortly come to pass." And among the many wonders, he breaks forth with a "Woe to the inhabiters of the earth, and of the sea, for the devil is come down unto you having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time." Satan has always aimed to imitate, and to counterfeit whatever God does. And now, that he hath come down unto us, is it not for some new development of his power? And what marvel, if, in imitation of the Christ, he should make a personal advent? Spiritualists tell us of a "Coming Man;" one, of course, more powerful in signs, wonders, and wickedness than themselves. "For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall shew great signs and wonders; insomuch that if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect." Wherefore, "my brethren, be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might. Put on the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities; against powers; against spiritual wickedness in high places." Miner Cawkins.

A Mother's Love.

Lines written by a mother in her son's Bible.

Remember, love, who gave thee this,
When other days shall come;
When she who had thy earliest kiss,
Sleeps in her narrow home;
Remember 'twas a mother gave
The gift to one she'd die to save.

That mother sought a pledge of love,
The holiest, for her son,
And in the gift of God above
She chose a goodly one;
She chose for her beloved boy
The source of life, and light, and joy;

And bade him keep the gift, that when
The parting hour should come,
They might have hope to meet again
In her eternal home;
She said his faith in that should be
Sweet incense to her memory.

And should the scoffer, in his pride,
Laugh that fond gift to scorn,
And bid him cast that gift aside,
That he from youth had borne;
She bids him pause, and ask his breast
If he or she had loved him best.

Big Words and small Ideas.

Big words are great favorites with people of small ideas and weak conceptions. They are often employed by men of mind, when they wish to use language that may best conceal their thoughts. With few exceptions, however, illiterate and half-educated persons use more "big words" than people of thorough education.

It is a very common but very egregious mistake to suppose that long words are more genteel than short ones—just as the same sort of people imagine high colors and flashy figures improve the styles of dress. They are the kind of folks who don't begin, but always "commence." They don't live, but "reside." They don't go to bed, but mysteriously "retire." They don't eat and drink, but "partakeof refreshments." They are never sick, but "extremely indisposed." And instead of dying at last, they "decease."

The strength of the English language is in the short words, chiefly monosyllables of Saxon derivation, and people who are in earnest seldom use any other. Love, hate, anger, grief, joy, express themselves in short words and direct sentences; while cunning, fasehood and affectation delight in what Horace calls verba sesquipedalia—words a "foot and a half long."

A Hint to Young Ladies.

Loveliness! It is not in your costly dress, ladies, your expensive shawl, or gold-laden fingers. Men of good sense look far beyond these. It is your character they study—your deportment. If you are trifling and loose in your conversation, no matter if you are as beautiful as an angel, you have no attraction for them. It is the loveliness of nature that attracts the first attention, it is the mental and moral excellence and cultivation that wins and continues to retain the affection of the heart. Young ladies sadly miss it who labor to improve their outward looks, while they bestow little or no thought on their minds and heart. Fools may be won by gewgaws and fashionable and showy dresses; but the wise, the prudent and substantial are never caught by such traps. Let modesty and virtue be your dress. Use pleasant and truthful language, study to do good and to communicate, and though you may not be courted by the fop, the truly great will love to linger in your steps. "Take away the dross from the silver, and there shall come forth a vessel for the finer."—Prov. 25: 4.

Why should anybody Swear?

I can conceive no reason why he should, but ten thousand reasons why he should not.

1. It is mean. A man of high moral standing would almost as soon steal a sheep as swear.
2. It is vulgar, altogether too mean for a decent man.
3. It is cowardly, implying a fear either of not being believed or obeyed.
4. It is ungentlemanly. A gentleman, according to Webster, is a genteel man—well bred—refined. Such a one will no more swear than he will go into the street to throw mud with a clod-hopper."
5. It is indecent, offensive to delicacy, and extremely unfit for human ears.
6. It is foolish. "Want of decency is want of sense."—Pope.
7. It is abusive; to the mind which conceives the oath, to the tongue which utters it, and to the person at whom it is aimed.
8. It is venemous, showing a man's heart to be a nest of vipers, and every time he swears, one of them sticks out his head.
9. It is contemptible, forfeiting the respect of all the wise and good.
10. It is wicked, violating the divine law, and provoking the displeasure of Him whose name is taken in vain.—Selected by G. W. G.—Harbinger.

☞ The necessities which confine men to particular employments are the chief support of good habits. Men resemble the masts of a ship, which must be tied down to keep them steady.

A good woman never grows old.—Years may pass over her head, but if benevolence dwell in her heart, she is as cheerful as when the spring of life opened to her view. When we look at a good woman we never think of her age, she looks charming as when the rose of youth first bloomed on her cheek. That rose has not faded yet—it will never fade. In her neighborhood she is the friend and benefactor. Who does not respect and love the woman who has passed her days in acts of kindness and mercy? We repeat, such a woman can never grow old. She will always be fresh and buoyant in spirit, and active in humble deeds of benevolence.

The way to do good.—It often happens, in our efforts to do good, that a tender interest manifested in the temporal wants of those whom we would benefit, opens a way for their spiritual profiting. As is wisely said by Mr. Barnes, "If we wish to incline others to our opinions, or to bring them to be christians, nothing is better adapted to it than to show them kindness, and even to minister to their temporal wants. Benevolence toward them softens the heart, and inclines them to listen to us."—Tract Journal.

To keep Bugs from Melon Vines, etc.—G. Roys, Hartford Co., Conn., says the cheapest and most effectual remedy for the striped bug, is to cover the plants with cotton, thus: take the common cotton batting, separate it into very thin layers, and spread over the plants as soon as they appear, putting a little dirt on each corner to prevent the wind from blowing it off. He has tried it for several years with entire success. The plants may attain considerable size before removing the cotton, which stretches as they grow. If thinly spread, the cotton does not interfere with light and moisture, while it entangles the insects.

☞ A week filled up with selfishness, and the Sabbath stuffed full of religious exercises, will make a good Pharisee, but a poor christian. There are many persons who think Sunday is a sponge, with which to wipe out the stains of the week. Now God's altar stands from Sunday to Sunday, and the seventh day is no more for religion than any other. It is for rest. The whole seven are for religion, and one of them for rest.

Do Right.—Do right though you have enemies. You cannot escape them by doing wrong; and it is little gain to barter away your honor and integrity, and divest yourself of moral courage, to gain what?—Nothing. Better abide by the truth—frown down all opposition, and rejoice in the feeling which must inspire a free and independent man.—Indian Arcana.

☞ Beecher says, "The devil does not trap us twice alike. If yesterday he came through vanity, to-day he will come through pride. If to-day he comes on one side, to-morrow he will come on another. And we are always watching the hole that he came in last, while he is coming in at another. We are guarding an empty hole while he is digging a new one."

Talk with your Child.—A want of familiarity between parents and children upon religious matters, and a constrained intercourse between them, is a key to the failure of many parents in their efforts to train up their children in the way they should go, as well as a fruitful source of infidelity in the child.

How to Cure Corns.

I do not understand why it is that woman arranges her dress with so little regard to its uses. One would suppose that in some of its parts utility and beauty might be found to be consistent. But there is not a single article of clothing which enters into her wardrobe, from her head to her feet, which is well adapted to serve the purpose for which it is apparently designed. If she wears a bonnet, it is so constructed that it is of no use as a cover to her head. If she wears gloves, they are so tight as to obstruct the circulation in her hands, and render their free use impossible. If she wears a dress, it is so fashioned as to hinder the natural movement of every muscle in the body. If she wears shoes, they are so poorly fitted as to cripple her in those organs and make it as rare to find a woman with a properly shaped foot in the christianized and highly enlightened United States as in China. What ever put it into the heads or hearts of women, or men, or of both, that we are naturally so outrageously formed or *de*formed that it is desirable that every part of us should by some means be gotten into different shape from that in which it was made, I can not conceive.

Why could not a lady's shoes be shaped like her feet? Instead of that, the shoes are shaped to the shoemaker's ideas, and the feet are fitted into them. There is not one shoemaker in a hundred that has sufficient good sense to know that the sole of a shoe should be as wide as the foot. They will make the sole of a lady's shoe about half as wide as her foot is when set flat on the floor, expecting her to tread on the upper leather at each side; unless it is so tight as to crowd the foot up, making it as much like a toad as like a beautiful and well-formed human foot.

And this is the way corns are made. The shoe presses upon the joints, forming callosities which are often very sensitive and painful, and generally render the foot *un*handsome in form. The cure for this state of things, then, according to our philosophy, is, for the person suffering, to wear shoes so large as to remove all pressure, and allow free circulation of the blood. This is the scientific mode of treatment, and any treatment which does not include this is quackish. It is rather trying, I know, for there is many a woman who would prefer extreme suffering with corns to a cure by this means. Such should be permitted to suffer: I would not relieve them if I could. But when persons "repent, and do works meet for repentance," that is, exchange tight shoes for loose ones, they not unfrequently continue to suffer from corns for a long time. In many such instances I have found the following treatment to afford permanent relief. Have two vessels, one containing hot and the other cold water, (neither temperature need be extreme, but about as hot and cold as can be comfortably borne,) and dip the affected foot or toes alternately in each, holding it in about five minutes, and continue this process half or three quarters of an hour. In some cases, one application of this sort will be sufficient. In others, it may be needful to repeat it every other day for a week or fortnight.

I expect somebody, now, will be calling me a hot-water doctor, since I have advised hot applications in repeated instances and for various difficulties, while it is so common to recommend cold water. But when I find a certain course is productive of great comfort and no harm, I wish others to become acquainted with it, whether it is fashionable or not.—Harriet N. Austin, M. D.

Unhealthy Houses.

A man requires ten cubic feet of air every minute, in order to supply an amount of oxygen sufficient for the wants of the system. The air enters the lungs full of oxygen, it leaves them without an atom, hence that which leaves the lungs is so wholly unfit for breathing purposes, that if re-breathed, unmixed with any other air whatever, it would cause instant suffocation. This unnutritious air is so very light that when out of doors it rises instantly toward the clouds, as may be seen any frosty morning; but when a person is in a close room, this unwholesome air mixes with that which surrounds it, and in a few moments the whole air of any room becomes contaminated, and this contamination becomes more aggravated, more virulent at every breath, and this is the reason of the greater rapidity with which persons and animals recover from terrible wounds when they have to lie out in the open air, with nothing but water to drink and roots and berries to eat for days together, when in fact they would certainly have died if they had had all the comforts of home, fireside, and friends.

It is estimated that in the course of fifty years, a man, in round numbers, breathes five hundred millions of times, taking into his lungs one hundred and seventy tons weight of air, and discharging therefrom twenty tons of deadly carbonic acid gas. The great aim of those who have an ambition to live long and healthfully should be to re-breathe as little of this pernicious gas as possible, and to have as many as practicable, of the five hundred millions of breaths to be drawn, to be taken from the exhaustless storehouse of "all out-doors." If the circumstances of one's life should make it necessary to spend a large portion of existence in-doors, then it should be a constant aim and study to have a good ventilation, to facilitate the egress of the bad air, and that its place should be supplied by that which is pure, invigorating, and life-giving.—Hall's Journal of Health.

A Remedy for Small Pox.—Dr. Frederic W. Morris, resident physician of the Halifax Visiting Dispensary, N. S., has written a letter to the American Medical Times, in which he states that the "Sarracenia Purpurea," or Indian cup, a native plant of Nova Scotia, is the remedy for small pox in all its forms, in twelve hours after the patient has taken the medicine. That "however alarming and numerous the eruptions, or confluent and frightful they may be, the peculiar action of the medicine is such that very seldom is a scar left to tell the story of the disease." If either vaccine or variolous matter is washed with the infusion of the Sarracenia, they are deprived of the contagious properties. So mild is the medicine to the taste, that it may be largely mixed with tea and coffee, and given to connoisseurs in these beverages to drink without their being aware of of the admixture. The medicine has been successfully tried in the hospitals of Nova Scotia, and its use will be continued.

Life and Death.

One half the human family dies under seventeen years of age. Nine tenths of all who are born ought to complete their "three-score years and ten," because nine tenths of all diseases are avoidable by the steady practice of temperance and such outdoor activities as are encouragingly remunerative. There is a still more specific method of lengthening life in healthfulness and vigor, and one which is practicable by the masses. Colds or constipation immediately precede or attend almost every case of ordinary disease. The latter can be antagonized by abstinence, cleanliness, and warmth for thirty-six hours; and a cold need not be taken once a year if three things are attended to. Avoid chilliness, damp clothing, and cooling off too soon after exercise.—Hall's Journal of Health.

| Ten copies to one address for six months | 8.00 |
| Twenty copies to one address for six months | 15.00 |
| Thirty copies to one address for six months | 22.00 |

These terms, allowing a subscription of 50 cents for three months, place the paper within reach of all who are able to pay any thing. The reduction in price, where five or more papers are sent to one address, enables subscribers, by combining, to receive a large number at reduced rates; thus supplying the poor in their neighborhood.

We propose that those who have ability, when sending their own subscriptions, also send what they are willing to give to aid in circulating the Crisis among the poor, who we have always with us.

Postage on the Crisis when prepaid, quarterly, or yearly, at the office where it is received, is 13 cts. a year in any part of Massachusetts, and 26 cts. to any other part of the United States.

Papers for subscribers in Canada and the British Provinces must be prepaid in Boston, 26 cents per year, in addition to the subscription price. Hence one dollar will pay for 22 papers, or $2.25 for one year.

God is Faithful.—1 Cor. 10: 13.

Courage! pilgrim, let the burden
That is pressing on thine heart
Yield to this divine assurance,
Bid the weight of care depart.
Look aloft, the same forever
Is thy Maker, faithful, true,
And to-day his love, unchanging,
As before, doth care for you.

Not "above that ye are able,"—
Trust that never failing word;
Clouds may gather thick around thee,
And e'en thunder tones be heard,
Grace is given to endure it,
All the subtle foe may bring;
Only trust and not be fearful,
There is strength in Israel's King.

Yet a little longer, pilgrim,
Struggle on, and there is rest,
Freed forever from temptation,
Thou shalt be supremely blest.
'Tis a warfare fierce, unending,
Till this mortal life is done,
Yet press on a little longer,
And the victory will be won.

An Exposition of Phil. 1: 21.

BY T. WHEELER.

"For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain."

Let it be understood that Paul was at this time a prisoner at Rome, and liable to suffer death by martyrdom. The text I have quoted is not an independent sentence, but only a conclusion of a previous statement. The statement is this,—"Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether it be by life, or by death" (verse 20). How can this be, Paul? How prove it? "For, (or because—Sawyer,) to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain." Therefore, to correctly interpret the conclusion in verse 21, we must keep our eye upon the statement in verse 20. Verse 21, fully expressed, would read thus,—For me to live is Christ, and for me to die is gain. It will be noticed that the words "Christ," and "gain," in the two clauses of the sentence, are designed to express or convey the same idea; that is, the result will be the same, although following from different conditions—life and death. For me to live is Christ, and for me to die is Christ; or, for me to live is gain, and for me to die is gain.

That this idea is correct will be seen from the statement in verse 20,—"Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether it be by life or by death." In either case, whether Paul lives or dies (by martyrdom), the result is the same—"Christ shall be magnified." How would Christ be magnified equally by Paul's life or death (by martyrdom)? Answer. If he lived he would preach Christ, and thus advance his cause; if he died (a martyr), the re-action would only advance the cause, rather than hinder it. Says Paul,—"The things which happened unto me have fallen out rather unto the furtherance of the gospel." Again he says,—"And many of the brethren in the Lord, waxing confident by my bonds, are much more bold to speak the word without fear." Phil. 1: 12, 14. Thus, if Paul's life was spared, Christ would be magnified, and if it should be taken, the esult would be the same; he would be magnified.

Now, then, for the text,—"For me to live is Christ, and to die is gain." This text suggests three questions, viz.; 1. "Die." What death is meant? Natural, as we usually call it (though incorrectly, the Scripture terms it "common death," see Num. 16: 29); or, an unnatural or a violent one—a martyr's death? 2. "Gain." What is the gain? 3. Who is the gainer; Paul, or Christ? It will be noticed that these three questions have already been answered in this article. The death in Paul's mind was that of a martyr, as the context plainly shows. The "gain" was—Christ magnified, and hence the gainer was Christ, and not Paul. The popular view of this text is, that Paul is the gainer, and hence it is inferred that it is gain for all christians to die, under all circumstances.

We will suppose that the text designs to teach that Paul was the gainer. When we consider the condition that Paul was in, constantly subject to persecutions, bonds and imprisonments, the thought arises, would it be to infer that all christians under all circumstances, suffering no persecution, would be gainers by dying? This inference, for so it is, is wholly assumed and unwarranted. If we are all gainers by dying, then the gain must be of a positive nature, rather than negative. But if our gain is positive, pray what is it? for we as Adventists readily concede that until the resurrection we get no glory, no crown, and no reward. Then what can it be? Let him answer who can.

Again. If we gain more in dying than by living, is not the sentiment of the poet true where he says—

"Death gives us more than was in Eden lost"?

Would not this convey the idea that life was a curse and death a blessing? Let us be careful and not reverse the Bible, and imagine that God and Satan have changed characters. God has given us life, and sin has given us death. Life is a blessing, and death is a curse. May the Lord help us to be wise, so that we may choose the blessing and not the curse. Whoever chooseth death, rather than life, I am fearful will get his wish.

But we have supposed Paul to have gained something by dying; what is it? It must have been of a negative nature. He would have no more suffered persecution; he would have rested from his labors. See Rev. 14: 13. In the grave "the wicked cease from troubling; and there the weary be at rest."—Job 3: 17. "The righteous is taken away from the evil to come."—Isa. 57: 1. Death gives us only dissolution, ruin and loss; but, when Christ our Life-giver comes, he will reverse things—turn the scale, and give us immortal life. Bless the Lord! Our great pay-day comes not at death, but at the resurrection.

If it is true that there is something to be gained by death, more than we enjoy in this life, so that it is desirable for us to die, what did Paul mean when he said, "If after the manner of men I have fought with beasts at Ephesus, what advantageth it me, if the dead rise not?"—1 Cor. 15: 32. Here Paul predicates everything upon the resurrection. Without that, there was no advantage. If Paul, or any one else, gains anything positively by dying, then so much is gained,—there is so much advantage. According to verses 23 and 24, as it stands in our version, Paul seems to indicate that he had a desire for death, dissolution, the unclothed state, or the intermediate state. But it will not do to thus interpret Paul here, when he in another place (2 Cor. 5) expressly contradicts it in saying,—"Not for that we would be unclothed." I have no desire for death, dissolution, or the intermediate state. Paul "earnestly" desired "to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven." It was the immortal body that Paul so earnestly desired; he wished to be clothed upon with this body, immortal body; but this immortal body we only get at the resurrection, not at death. Says Paul,—"Yet what I shall choose I wot not." This choice was between life and death. He then gives his reason,—"For I am in a strait betwixt two (life and death), having a desire to depart, and to be with Christ; which is far better."

Between life and death Paul had no choice. But there was a third thing which he did desire, and this desire was "to be clothed upon." To illustrate; between a lemon and an orange Paul had no choice; but here is an apple which he has a desire for. Paul says in 2 Cor. 5: 6,—"Whilst we are at home in the body, we are absent from the Lord." The natural inference from this text would be that, immediately upon death, or dissolution, we should be with the Lord; or, as the 8th verse has it, "Willing rather to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord." But this does not necessarily follow. See first verse,—"For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal, in the heavens." The very natural inference from this verse is, that immediately upon dissolution we receive our house from heaven; but we know from the context that this was not Paul's idea. The house from heaven is explained to be—"that mortality might be swallowed up of life," which will not be until the resurrection.

Whoever would correctly understand Philippians, 1st chapter, must have an eye upon 2 Corinthians, 5th chapter. The Bible should be so interpreted as to harmonize, for it is a beautiful and concordant book when understood.

There is one other point I wish to notice, in Phil. 1: 23. "For I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart, and to be with Christ." The word "depart," I am informed, has for its original, analuo, and means anything rather than dissolution. I understand that this word analuo occurs but once more in the Greek Testament, viz., Luke 12: 36,—"When he will return from the wedding." The word return is analuo, and means return; if it had been thus rendered in Phil. 1: 23, all would have been clear—"having a desire for the returning, and to be with Christ."

A Short Sermon.

"Be not conformed to this world; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God."—Rom. 12: 2.

Paul is here entreating his brethren not to be conformed to this world, as though he perceived a danger in this direction of their being led away by the evil influences that were around them; and knowing the Master had said, "Ye are the light of the world," "the salt of the earth"; but if they were conformed to the world, they could not be lights; hence the exhortation was given. God's people have ever been "a peculiar people, zealous of good works." They have ever been a separate people, walking in another direction from the people of this world. They are transformed by the renewing of their mind. The things they once hated, now they love; and the things they once loved, now they hate. Thus have God's people ever walked. Is the way wider now? No. It has always been a straight and narrow way, with here and there a traveler. Never were dangers so great as now. The spirit of the world at the present time is all calculated to lead men astray.

Hear the apostle John in his first letter: "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world."—1 John 2: 15, 16. Dear brethren and sisters, let us see that we do not conform to the world in any thing. If we are not on our watch, we shall be led astray ere we are aware of it. Let us see that we follow Christ, and not men. Let all that we do, whether we write, speak, eat, or drink, be done with an eye single to the glory of God. Let us not stop and ask the question, what will this one say, and that one, but what will God say? Let us be ready; the Master will soon come; and his bride will be without "spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing." Let us remember that it is the pure in heart that will see God. "As he which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation."—1 Pet. 1: 15.

May the Lord bless you all, and lead you by his Spirit in all things, is the earnest desire of your Bro. in Christ,

G. A. Streeter.

Extracts from Herman Schultz,

"Though by his creation man has become a being, which possesses many superior qualities over the rest of visible creatures; to him is given a spirit (mind), which, after the divine image, may decide by itself, is conscious of being a free being, is what is generally called personality, to him is given the dominion over all nature. (Gen. 1: 26, etc.) Yet all this does not separate him from the created beings; the life-giving power of God may at any time be withdrawn from him. If this were impossible with man, the divine spirit of life would be a part of him, and in consequence of this, man would in his physical nature bear within him a part of God. This, however, would drive us to a pantheistic idea of the divine being."

"Men were never created immortal, but they may become immortal,—only the power to attain to immortality God laid into man at his creation. To become spiritual, is the foundation upon which man may obtain immortality; with this agrees Schelling and R. Rothe. With the latter it is a fixed belief that this spirituality must be accompanied by a close communion with God, without which there is only such a kind of life which may at any time live itself out. Also Prof. Oettinger does not teach a natural, but only such an immortality of the soul which has for its author the Lord Jesus Christ."

"It is true, we could not have any real idea of immortality, if it did not exist, as we could not have any idea of one hundred dollars, if they had no existence; but this does not prove that a man must have both in possession. To say that in every soul there is an idea of immortality, is not true; this proves the fact that many deny it, both by word and deed."

"As we remarked before, it is at the least an unproved acceptation, that the spirit of man received the idea of immortality at his creation, a hyypothesis, which, if we consider men in their experience, must strictly be denied. The idea of immortality is not found in millions of men, and has for centuries not been in the mind of man in general. In ancient times only the most illuminated minds were capable to comprehend the idea of immortality, and from that time to this very day we hear through all classes of society the cry of materialism: 'let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we are dead.' So we see that the assertion'—'all men have an idea of, or a desire after immortality, therefore they must be immortal,' falls to the ground."

"It is true man, as he should be, bears within himself infinite germs; but he may choke and kill them, so that nothing remains of them. Therefore this proved, all (men have a desire after immortality, therefore they are immortal, etc.,) must look for better foundations; it must bring forth some close connection or union with the divine being, according to which man may feel within him such infinite germs, the same as Plato does when he says: 'anima haeret divinis.' But this puts man into a different position altogether. For if the soul is immortal because it is a part of God, then immortality is not a created attribute, which would inseparably cohere to man's nature; for if this was the case, we would physically bear within us a part of God. Immortality then can only be based upon something which is independent, ethical, for only in liberty (spiritual) we are united to God. All this shows us that man has not immortality within him because of being created a man. That which is common to all men, (leaving out of sight all moral and natural differences) which, in spite of Schelling and Weis, is common to the lowest negro as well as to the greatest German philosopher,—the common nature of man does not bear within itself immortality, i. e., the impossibility to perish, even this very day."

"Body and soul here are equally separate from God; no self-created spirit can separately be equal to God; there is one Spirit of God, which calls all individual creatures to life, which animates all; but this is not a part of man, but his cause, the same as it is the originator of all life. Though we are of divine origin, (Acts 17: 27,) as God calls Israel his son, and the king of his people his child,—(Ps. 2: 5) though we can feel him within us; yet, according to our nature, as men we are creatures, and can perish, are not immortal, but mortal men." ### The Prayer and Promise.

"Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom."—Luke 23: 42.

How beautifully suggestive the prayer of the dying thief! How delightful the thought, to be remembered at the coming and in the kingdom of our God! How appropriately can we each utter the same prayer! O! to be remembered then will more than repay us for having ceased to be remembered by our friends here; and the beautiful reply of our Savior, "Thou shalt be with me in paradise," is so fraught with import, so full of meaning, as to cause the poor way-worn pilgrim heart to involuntarily sigh for the joys of paradise restored. Here calamities befal us, misfortunes beset us, adversity comes in tornado gusts upon us, afflictions come, and where are our loved ones? Echo answers where? Poets may sing of the loveliness of death, romance may paint its beauties, but stern reality points to yonder cemetery; there, side by side, are two little graves which show that a mother's heart is riven with anguish. Again disease comes with its relentless hand, and almost imperceptibly undermines the constitution of a dear husband, who, pale and emaciated, shows unmistakably that he too is a marked victim for the insidious foe. O the many trials of life, the many fresh wounds which our poor lacerated hearts are constantly receiving, the mablighted hopes which darken life's horizon, the many days of sadness, the many nights of anguish,—although they sometimes serve to dishearten us, yet they beget within us the desire, and even indite the petition, "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom." Then how cheering the thought, how like the oasis in the desert to the weary traveler comes the heart-cheering promise, "Thou shalt be with me in paradise."

"O glorious day, O blessed hope,
My heart leaps forward at the thought."

A few more ills, a few more toils, a few more heart achings, and we are home; saved at last; reunited with loved ones in paradise restored. A. E. Bennett.

Who Cometh?

TO THE AUTHOR OF COMING STRUGGLE.

The human family has always been subject to the annoyance of Satan. He destroyed the happiness of our first parents in Eden. Since which time he hath vexed mankind "with all deceivableness of unrighteousness." He greatly afflicted Job; moved David to iniquity; tempted Christ; and finally, has always been busy to promote his own cause. To ascomplish which, he presented himself among the sons of God; often quoted Scripture, though he had no regard for it; is transformed into an angel of light; in short, becomes all things to all men, that by all means he may deceive some. Here he follows Paul, just about as he follows the Bible and good in general, only varying about one word in a dozen, so as to give an opposite meaning.

That Satan wrought wonders in ancient times, and in the days of our Savior, is certain. Men were possessed of devils, who went out of them, into swine, and performed actions. Who will say it was a delusion? that no devils were there? that our Savior did not cast out devils, actual devils? There were witches, wizards, soothsayers, magicians, &c. But these were not generally publically known. They wrought in secret; generally being intimidated by law and by public opinion. But the works of the Devil were made manifest through these mediums. Doubtless, Satan had living mediums through whom he acted in all cases of possessing of devils, or bewitching; but never did he in those days what the prophets foresaw that the wickedness of the world, in the last days, would enable him to accomplish. Nor do we suppose that Satan has wrought six thousand years at his trade and learned nothing. Nay, but he hath grown wise in his craft. If we carefully follow divine record, we find that he has been developing from the beginning. "Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils." Satan, seeing the development of the sciences, and the taste of mankind for them in these last days, stepped forward with mesmerism, saying, it is a new science; introduced it into many high places and high families; yes, and into many good families. This well established, to prepare the way, he brings forth Spiritualism. Now greater wonders are performed. It deceives many. It fills its ranks, to a great extent, from the so-called faithful; they departing from the faith. But when their craft is questioned, they say, "O, don't be frightened, it is only Mesmerism." So it may be, and Mesmerism nothing but Spiritualism, and Spiritualism nothing but ancient witchcraft.

Paul to the Ephesians, calls Satan the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience. His habitation is in the air; but his works are with the children of men. John, in the Isle of Patmos, tells of "things which must shortly come to pass." And among the many wonders, he breaks forth with a "Woe to the inhabiters of the earth, and of the sea, for the devil is come down unto you having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time." Satan has always aimed to imitate, and to counterfeit whatever God does. And now, that he hath come down unto us, is it not for some new development of his power? And what marvel, if, in imitation of the Christ, he should make a personal advent? Spiritualists tell us of a "Coming Man;" one, of course, more powerful in signs, wonders, and wickedness than themselves. "For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall shew great signs and wonders; insomuch that if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect." Wherefore, "my brethren, be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might. Put on the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities; against powers; against spiritual wickedness in high places." Miner Cawkins.

A Mother's Love.

Lines written by a mother in her son's Bible.

Remember, love, who gave thee this,
When other days shall come;
When she who had thy earliest kiss,
Sleeps in her narrow home;
Remember 'twas a mother gave
The gift to one she'd die to save.

That mother sought a pledge of love,
The holiest, for her son,
And in the gift of God above
She chose a goodly one;
She chose for her beloved boy
The source of life, and light, and joy;

And bade him keep the gift, that when
The parting hour should come,
They might have hope to meet again
In her eternal home;
She said his faith in that should be
Sweet incense to her memory.

And should the scoffer, in his pride,
Laugh that fond gift to scorn,
And bid him cast that gift aside,
That he from youth had borne;
She bids him pause, and ask his breast
If he or she had loved him best.

Big Words and small Ideas.

Big words are great favorites with people of small ideas and weak conceptions. They are often employed by men of mind, when they wish to use language that may best conceal their thoughts. With few exceptions, however, illiterate and half-educated persons use more "big words" than people of thorough education.

It is a very common but very egregious mistake to suppose that long words are more genteel than short ones—just as the same sort of people imagine high colors and flashy figures improve the styles of dress. They are the kind of folks who don't begin, but always "commence." They don't live, but "reside." They don't go to bed, but mysteriously "retire." They don't eat and drink, but "partakeof refreshments." They are never sick, but "extremely indisposed." And instead of dying at last, they "decease."

The strength of the English language is in the short words, chiefly monosyllables of Saxon derivation, and people who are in earnest seldom use any other. Love, hate, anger, grief, joy, express themselves in short words and direct sentences; while cunning, fasehood and affectation delight in what Horace calls verba sesquipedalia—words a "foot and a half long."

A Hint to Young Ladies.

Loveliness! It is not in your costly dress, ladies, your expensive shawl, or gold-laden fingers. Men of good sense look far beyond these. It is your character they study—your deportment. If you are trifling and loose in your conversation, no matter if you are as beautiful as an angel, you have no attraction for them. It is the loveliness of nature that attracts the first attention, it is the mental and moral excellence and cultivation that wins and continues to retain the affection of the heart. Young ladies sadly miss it who labor to improve their outward looks, while they bestow little or no thought on their minds and heart. Fools may be won by gewgaws and fashionable and showy dresses; but the wise, the prudent and substantial are never caught by such traps. Let modesty and virtue be your dress. Use pleasant and truthful language, study to do good and to communicate, and though you may not be courted by the fop, the truly great will love to linger in your steps. "Take away the dross from the silver, and there shall come forth a vessel for the finer."—Prov. 25: 4.

Why should anybody Swear?

I can conceive no reason why he should, but ten thousand reasons why he should not.

1. It is mean. A man of high moral standing would almost as soon steal a sheep as swear.

2. It is vulgar, altogether too mean for a decent man.

3. It is cowardly, implying a fear either of not being believed or obeyed.

4. It is ungentlemanly. A gentleman, according to Webster, is a genteel man—well bred—refined. Such a one will no more swear than he will go into the street to throw mud with a clod-hopper."

5. It is indecent, offensive to delicacy, and extremely unfit for human ears.

6. It is foolish. "Want of decency is want of sense."—Pope.

7. It is abusive; to the mind which conceives the oath, to the tongue which utters it, and to the person at whom it is aimed.

8. It is venemous, showing a man's heart to be a nest of vipers, and every time he swears, one of them sticks out his head.

9. It is contemptible, forfeiting the respect of all the wise and good.

10. It is wicked, violating the divine law, and provoking the displeasure of Him whose name is taken in vain.—Selected by G. W. G.—Harbinger.

☞ The necessities which confine men to particular employments are the chief support of good habits. Men resemble the masts of a ship, which must be tied down to keep them steady.

A GOOD WOMAN NEVER GROWS OLD.—Years may pass over her head, but if benevolence dwell in her heart, she is as cheerful as when the spring of life opened to her view. When we look at a good woman we never think of her age, she looks charming as when the rose of youth first bloomed on her cheek. That rose has not faded yet—it will never fade. In her neighborhood she is the friend and benefactor. Who does not respect and love the woman who has passed her days in acts of kindness and mercy? We repeat, such a woman can never grow old. She will always be fresh and buoyant in spirit, and active in humble deeds of benevolence.

THE WAY TO DO GOOD.—It often happens, in our efforts to do good, that a tender interest manifested in the temporal wants of those whom we would benefit, opens a way for their spiritual profiting. As is wisely said by Mr. Barnes, "If we wish to incline others to our opinions, or to bring them to be christians, nothing is better adapted to it than to show them kindness, and even to minister to their temporal wants. Benevolence toward them softens the heart, and inclines them to listen to us."—Tract Journal.

TO KEEP BUGS FROM MELON VINES, etc.—G. Roys, Hartford Co., Conn., says the cheapest and most effectual remedy for the striped bug, is to cover the plants with cotton, thus: take the common cotton batting, separate it into very thin layers, and spread over the plants as soon as they appear, putting a little dirt on each corner to prevent the wind from blowing it off. He has tried it for several years with entire success. The plants may attain considerable size before removing the cotton, which stretches as they grow. If thinly spread, the cotton does not interfere with light and moisture, while it entangles the insects.

☞ A week filled up with selfishness, and the Sabbath stuffed full of religious exercises, will make a good Pharisee, but a poor christian. There are many persons who think Sunday is a sponge, with which to wipe out the stains of the week. Now God's altar stands from Sunday to Sunday, and the seventh day is no more for religion than any other. It is for rest. The whole seven are for religion, and one of them for rest.

DO RIGHT.—Do right though you have enemies. You cannot escape them by doing wrong; and it is little gain to barter away your honor and integrity, and divest yourself of moral courage, to gain what?—Nothing. Better abide by the truth—frown down all opposition, and rejoice in the feeling which must inspire a free and independent man.—Indian Arcana.

☞ Beecher says, "The devil does not trap us twice alike. If yesterday he came through vanity, to-day he will come through pride. If to-day he comes on one side, to-morrow he will come on another. And we are always watching the hole that he came in last, while he is coming in at another. We are guarding an empty hole while he is digging a new one."

TALK WITH YOUR CHILD.—A want of familiarity between parents and children upon religious matters, and a constrained intercourse between them, is a key to the failure of many parents in their efforts to train up their children in the way they should go, as well as a fruitful source of infidelity in the child.

How to Cure Corns.

I do not understand why it is that woman arranges her dress with so little regard to its uses. One would suppose that in some of its parts utility and beauty might be found to be consistent. But there is not a single article of clothing which enters into her wardrobe, from her head to her feet, which is well adapted to serve the purpose for which it is apparently designed. If she wears a bonnet, it is so constructed that it is of no use as a cover to her head. If she wears gloves, they are so tight as to obstruct the circulation in her hands, and render their free use impossible. If she wears a dress, it is so fashioned as to hinder the natural movement of every muscle in the body. If she wears shoes, they are so poorly fitted as to cripple her in those organs and make it as rare to find a woman with a properly shaped foot in the christianized and highly enlightened United States as in China. What ever put it into the heads or hearts of women, or men, or of both, that we are naturally so outrageously formed or deformed that it is desirable that every part of us should by some means be gotten into different shape from that in which it was made, I can not conceive.

Why could not a lady's shoes be shaped like her feet? Instead of that, the shoes are shaped to the shoemaker's ideas, and the feet are fitted into them. There is not one shoemaker in a hundred that has sufficient good sense to know that the sole of a shoe should be as wide as the foot. They will make the sole of a lady's shoe about half as wide as her foot is when set flat on the floor, expecting her to tread on the upper leather at each side; unless it is so tight as to crowd the foot up, making it as much like a toad as like a beautiful and well-formed human foot.

And this is the way corns are made. The shoe presses upon the joints, forming callosities which are often very sensitive and painful, and generally render the foot unhandsome in form. The cure for this state of things, then, according to our philosophy, is, for the person suffering, to wear shoes so large as to remove all pressure, and allow free circulation of the blood.

This is the scientific mode of treatment, and any treatment which does not include this is quackish. It is rather trying, I know, for there is many a woman who would prefer extreme suffering with corns to a cure by this means. Such should be permitted to suffer: I would not relieve them if I could. But when persons "repent, and do works meet for repentance," that is, exchange tight shoes for loose ones, they not unfrequently continue to suffer from corns for a long time. In many such instances I have found the following treatment to afford permanent relief. Have two vessels, one containing hot and the other cold water, (neither temperature need be extreme, but about as hot and cold as can be comfortably borne,) and dip the affected foot or toes alternately in each, holding it in about five minutes, and continue this process half or three quarters of an hour. In some cases, one application of this sort will be sufficient. In others, it may be needful to repeat it every other day for a week or fortnight.

I expect somebody, now, will be calling me a hot-water doctor, since I have advised hot applications in repeated instances and for various difficulties, while it is so common to recommend cold water. But when I find a certain course is productive of great comfort and no harm, I wish others to become acquainted with it, whether it is fashionable or not.—Harriet N. Austin, M. D.

Unhealthy Houses.

A man requires ten cubic feet of air every minute, in order to supply an amount of oxygen sufficient for the wants of the system. The air enters the lungs full of oxygen, it leaves them without an atom, hence that which leaves the lungs is so wholly unfit for breathing purposes, that if re-breathed, unmixed with any other air whatever, it would cause instant suffocation. This unnutritious air is so very light that when out of doors it rises instantly toward the clouds, as may be seen any frosty morning; but when a person is in a close room, this unwholesome air mixes with that which surrounds it, and in a few moments the whole air of any room becomes contaminated, and this contamination becomes more aggravated, more virulent at every breath, and this is the reason of the greater rapidity with which persons and animals recover from terrible wounds when they have to lie out in the open air, with nothing but water to drink and roots and berries to eat for days together, when in fact they would certainly have died if they had had all the comforts of home, fireside, and friends.

It is estimated that in the course of fifty years, a man, in round numbers, breathes five hundred millions of times, taking into his lungs one hundred and seventy tons weight of air, and discharging therefrom twenty tons of deadly carbonic acid gas. The great aim of those who have an ambition to live long and healthfully should be to re-breathe as little of this pernicious gas as possible, and to have as many as practicable, of the five hundred millions of breaths to be drawn, to be taken from the exhaustless storehouse of "all out-doors." If the circumstances of one's life should make it necessary to spend a large portion of existence in-doors, then it should be a constant aim and study to have a good ventilation, to facilitate the egress of the bad air, and that its place should be supplied by that which is pure, invigorating, and life-giving.—Hall's Journal of Health.

A REMEDY FOR SMALL POX.—Dr. Frederic W. Morris, resident physician of the Halifax Visiting Dispensary, N. S., has written a letter to the American Medical Times, in which he states that the "Sarracenia Purpurea," or Indian cup, a native plant of Nova Scotia, is the remedy for small pox in all its forms, in twelve hours after the patient has taken the medicine. That "however alarming and numerous the eruptions, or confluent and frightful they may be, the peculiar action of the medicine is such that very seldom is a scar left to tell the story of the disease." If either vaccine or variolous matter is washed with the infusion of the Sarracenia, they are deprived of the contagious properties. So mild is the medicine to the taste, that it may be largely mixed with tea and coffee, and given to connoisseurs in these beverages to drink without their being aware of of the admixture. The medicine has been successfully tried in the hospitals of Nova Scotia, and its use will be continued.

Life and Death.

One half the human family dies under seventeen years of age. Nine tenths of all who are born ought to complete their "three-score years and ten," because nine tenths of all diseases are avoidable by the steady practice of temperance and such outdoor activities as are encouragingly remunerative. There is a still more specific method of lengthening life in healthfulness and vigor, and one which is practicable by the masses. Colds or constipation immediately precede or attend almost every case of ordinary disease. The latter can be antagonized by abstinence, cleanliness, and warmth for thirty-six hours; and a cold need not be taken once a year if three things are attended to. Avoid chilliness, damp clothing, and cooling off too soon after exercise.—Hall's Journal of Health.

"Lottie Sleeps!"

She sleeps! 'Twas but yesterday, wakeful and bright,
Her life-sky so clear, and all beaming with light,
Her warm, loving heart, like the sun giving cheer
To home, and the circle of friends kind and dear.

A loved youthful bride! a companion well meet
For one who had chosen, with armor complete,
To stand with Christ's warriors, and boldly proclaim
God's truth to a world in Immanuel's name.

She sleeps! Ah! how sad were such tidings to bear,
Like the knell, deep and mournful, they fell on the ear,
And the heart's gushing sympathy rose in warm prayer—
O help them, our Father! this sorrow to bear.

We thought of dear Fannie, the gifted and loved,
So early from life's best affections removed;
The moisten'd cheek scarce hath been dried, yet once more
The Spoiler hath brought heartfelt grief, as before.

She sleeps! 'Twill be transient—not long can the grave
With its cold grasping fetters these loved ones enslave;
A Conqueror mighty is coming, to break
The bars of the tomb, and its sleepers awake!

Then "equal to angels"—to "die never more"—
No sickness or sorrow on Canaan's bright shore;
This soul-cheering hope, thanks to God, will sustain
The heart in its keenest affliction and pain.

Should Women be Silent?

We will give a few thoughts on this subject for candid consideration. 2 Cor. 3: 3; "Forasmuch as ye (Corinthians, and every child of grace,) are manifestly declared to be the epistle of Christ ministered by us, written not with ink, but with the Spirit of the living God; not in tables of stone, but in fleshly tables of the heart. . . . Who also hath made us able ministers of the new testament; not of the letter (the law) but of the Spirit." The apostle shows that if "the ministration of death . . . was glorious, so that the children of Israel could not steadfastly behold the face of Moses for the glory of his countenance; . . . how shall not the ministration of the Spirit be rather glorious? . . . and where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty."

We understand from the above, which no doubt is in harmony with the whole revelation of God, that since the day of pentecost, the church has enjoyed the ministration of the Spirit; by which God's servants are said to prophesy, Acts 2: 17, 18; and we see in 1 Cor. 14, that to prophesy is to exhort. "He that prophesieth speaketh unto men to edification, and exhortation, and comfort. He that speaketh in an unknown tongue edifieth himself; but he that prophesieth edifieth the church" —ver. 3: 4. "Ye may all prophesy one by one,"—ver. 31. Some allow that, as this chapter is addressed to the brethren, they think the "one by one" does not take in the females, proving the same from ver. 34,—"Let your women keep silence in the churches." Some, who take this side of the subject, say they think well of women who preach to the world; but do not like to have them exhort in a church capacity. We think a correct view of the subject will not make Paul contradict himself, but show harmony on the subject, and not allow one or two misapplied passages to overthrow the tenor of the whole revelation of God on this point.

We will quote a few passages showing that much of the Scripture is addressed to man only; while at the same time we know it is given to our fallen race, "male and female." We will refer to a passage or two of God's denouncement against Adam, where God speaks as only condemning him; although the woman was the first transgressor. "Cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life." "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground."—Gen. 3: 19.

Matthew says, "What is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" and Luke says, "Gain the whole world, and lose himself." "Now I beseech you, brethren."—Rom. 15: 30. "But he that is joined to the Lord is one spirit."—1 Cor. 6: 17. "Moreover, brethren, I declare unto you the gospel which I preached unto you."—1 Cor. 15: 1. Here the apostle speaks as if the gospel had been preached only unto men. Much more might be quoted of a similar kind, but we will let the above suffice. However, we must believe, from the harmony of the Scriptures, that they were preached unto women as much as to men. Therefore, what is addressed to a church, as such, is addressed to the whole body, male and female. If, then, woman helps to make up the body of Christ, she must be of that "one Spirit," Eph. 4: 4; and must be in the number of the "every joint". . . according to the effectual working in the measure of every part," making "increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love," verse 16. It seems to be her right and privilege to prophesy and pray, and that in church capacity. But if otherwise, they have no right to join in praises to God, neither are they "of the body."

But the prediction of Joel begun to be fulfilled on the day of Pentecost; and has been fulfilling ever since, among women as well as men. That they prophesied is evident from what the apostle says, 1 Cor. 11: 5, where he lays down rules to regulate this part of their conduct, while ministering in the church. And here we will allow Paul to interpret himself: "Wherefore tongues are for a sign, not to them that believe, but to them that believe not; but prophesying serveth not for them that believe not, but for them which believe." 1 Cor. 14: 22. The apostle in chapter eleven does not contradict his statement in chapter 14, when he said they should keep silence in the church. Both places seem perfectly consistent.

It is evident from the context that the apostle refers here to the asking of questions, and what is called dictating in the church. It was permitted to any man to ask questions, to object, and attempt to refute in the synagogue; but this liberty was not allowed to any woman. Paul confirms this in reference also to the christian church, when he orders them to keep silence; and, if they wished to "learn any thing, let them ask (inquire of) their husbands at home;" because it was perfectly indecorous for women to be contending with men in public assemblies, on disputed doctrines. But this by no means intimated that, when a woman received any particular influence from God to enable her to teach, that she was not to obey it, for the apostle lays down directions in chapter 11 for regulating her personal appearance when thus employed, either in prayer or prophesying, verse 5. All the apostle opposes is their questioning, disputing, etc., in the church, or an attempt to set up their judgment in opposition to the men; for the apostle has in view especially acts of disobedience and arrogance; but to "be under obedience, as also saith the law." This is a reference to Gen. 3: 16. "Thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee." From this it is evident that it was the disorderly and disobedient that the apostle had in view, and not any of those to whom God had given his Spirit. "If any man think himself to be a prophet, or spiritual, let him acknowledge that the things that I write unto you are the commandments of the Lord. . . . Wherefore, brethren, covet to prophesy. . . . Let all things be done decently and in order."—1 Cor. 14: 37, 39–40.

"Shall I, for fear of feeble man,
The Spirit's course in me restrain?
Or, undismayed, in deed and word,
Be a true witness of my Lord?"

Hide not the Truth.

Declare the truth of God, and shame the devil. Woe unto every man that declares not the truth of God. I know in these last days of peril and gloom that men love "darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil." But oh! watchman! watchman! what is the time of night? Is the morning soon to dawn? Is that day of brightness, glory and triumph soon to come? Is our Redeemer soon to be seen in the clouds of heaven, with angels and crowns? O! yes, he is about to leave the mercy seat at his Father's right hand. Watchman! wake up, spare not, lift up your voice like a trumpet, sound an alarm in God's holy mountain, the day of execution is near. A day of darkness and thick gloom gathers over the world. Arouse, ye servants of the living God. Pull the film from your eyes, open your mouths and cry mightily. The Judge standeth at the door. His wrath is kindled. The day of destruction is near, when sin, riot, drunkenness, and such like will be done away; when the thundering roar of cannon will be heard no more; when the glare of flashing musketry shall disappear; when the groans of the poor dying warriors shall pass away forever, and the kingdom be restored to Israel.

Give heed to the truth of God before it is too late, ye men of this world. My tongue shall no longer be tied by the fear of man or the devil. God help me to watch and pray, and give me a voice like thunder, that may awaken a dreamy and besotted world, full of wickedness and smooth-tongued devils. The world is slumbering on perdition's fiery brink, ready to be devoured by the flame that God is about to send to destroy the world. Let us be harmless as a dove, gentle as a lamb, and bold as a lion. Each one should pull the weeds out of his own garden, and then all will be well.

Lust.

The world swarms with the infusoria of human dissipation. In every crack and crevice of secular life, there is the lie of a life-time, written in letters of living light, which never, no never can be wiped out by penitential grief. The eternal clamors of the cringing, craving heart, for the wasting dross of life, shuts on its silvery hinges the portals of the heart, fitted for the ingress of a better and more enduring substance. The acrimonious element finds nothing too high or low, too rich or poor, too great or small, for it to grapple with. Its whirling, eddying current, seeks within its vortex all human intelligence, from the cradle to the grave; and nothing but the immortal lesson which the dead dust of countless generations thrust home upon the soul,—that inevitable DEATH will come through fading flowers, and gather us to the habitation of his throne,—restrains us from excessive passion. Successive generations inherit this germ of death; not only to transmit it unimpaired to their succeeding posterity, but to propagate it with tenfold fruitfulness.

Thus the world moves on, rushing to the abyss of eternity, clutching the Babylonish garment infested with everlasting death. And such has been the momentum of its ravage, that the work of redemption—the sign of restitution, suspended from God's heaven for eighteen hundred years, until its permeating virtue hath radiated and illumined every nation under heaven—hath almost lost its converting power. Truly saith the prophet, they "have turned judgment into gall, and the fruit of righteousness into hemlock."

In life's general affairs, there is no rule as to different pursuits under different circumstances. But there is a general rule as to the results of various pursuits. We may ransack creation and investigate every condition in life, and the examination will demonstrate that miserable, petty AVARICE is the governing element in worldly vocations. Like surely begets like, and so the ultimate success of a man finds him proportionably advanced in the same school of tyranny. It is inevitable human nature. "Know ye not that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey?" And to such extremes does the accursed principle lead a man, that while Judas could sell his Master for "thirty pieces of silver," there are some shop-keepers who, by way of trade, do not ask over twelve and a half cents to sell themselves, which is infinitely more than they are actually worth. I once heard of a man arraigned as a common drunkard, and convicted on the ground that his nose turned State's evidence against his face; but the idea of a man transmuting himself into a brute in order to become respectable, is quite novel, but in perfect keeping with the aristocracy of this age.

This condition is the very concentrated essence of meanness. The apostle had an eye to this class when he spoke of those who "walk after the flesh, in the lust of uncleanness, . . . self-willed, etc. . . . These, as natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed, . . . they shall utterly perish in their own corruption." See 2 Pet. 2: 10, 12.

Cries David, "What is man, that thou art mindful of him?" A man need but just look at a grain of sand to answer that question—the vile dust beneath his feet, to behold the arch type of himself—an atom in immensity before Him who sitteth upon the surface of the earth, and counteth the inhabitants thereof as grasshoppers, and "the small dust in the balance." Can it be possible! Why, this is the craven heart that in its utter helplessness will obsequiously pander at the shrine of mammon, hugging with parracidal grasp the cruel, pernicious weapon, that put to death the Son of God! This is the being—this infinitesimal atom of the universe, that would weigh in the balance of eternity the flitting bauble of life with the purchase of Christ's blood. This is wholly incompatible with the longings of the human heart. Men crave immortal life through the fact of a temporal existence; and were it not for the incredulity occasioned by the philosophical and ecclesiastica dogmas concerning man's future destiny, mankind would run rampant to grasp the sole anchor of hope, that can only satiate and quiet the inexorable yearnings of the heart. A beatified inheritance, enrobed in vestments taintless as Edenic days, outreaching far those æons of abysses which are the boundaries of eternities, is not to be deemed so small a purchase as to forego its possession.

But the end is at hand. The tares will grow together with the wheat; the race must be run; but when the goal is reached, terrible will be the reaction to the unsuccessful traveler. The inveterate impetuosity with which life's journey is accomplished finds the careless pilgrim without a shelter to protect him from the wrath of the impending storm. Pray that He who enrobed himself in that garment of sacrificial blood, keep for His own sake the purchase of His sufferings from this Python of destruction—"the lusts of the flesh."

"Like the bat of Indian brakes,
Her pinions fan the wound she makes;
And soothing thus the dreamer's pain,
She draws the life-blood from the vein."

Blackstone, Mass. C. G. CARRE.

Wealth.

Wealth is considered by many to be one of the most desirable things attainable on earth; and more or less, we are all worshipers at its golden shrine. Nations, towns, societies, and individuals, strive to excel each other in the possession of the glittering dust. The youth too often begins life with the idea that without wealth, happiness and respectability can never be obtained. Look at the miser as he sits counting over his piles of gold; his filthy tattered garments indicating extreme poverty; his bent and shriveled form plainly showing that he soon will count it over for the last time; yet at night, with his dimly burning lamp, he goes to pay tribute to his golden god. The idea that Christ meant to convey, when he said that it was easier for a camel to enter through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of heaven was, that the influence of wealth was such, that it tended to draw one's mind away from religion and from heaven.

Wealth if rightly used proves a blessing. It is instrumental in doing good, and producing happiness; but the selfishness and misery it causes, so much overbalances the good it does, that it is one of the greatest curses, one of the greatest evils in the world, and one of the devil's surest traps. On the other hand, it may be said that poverty causes more misery than wealth; but give me a crust of bread and a clear conscience in preference to the sumptuous feast of the rich man, with the weight of sin and guilt upon my soul. Give me a treasure "where moth and rust" doth not corrupt.

"Life is but a wintry day,
A journey to the tomb."

The happiness and peace this world can give are but transitory. Its fairest flowers soon fade away; its costliest gems and richest treasures must all be left behind. "It is not all of life to live, nor all of death to die." We have souls to save or lose, and with lives consecrated to the will of God let us not listen to the siren voice of pleasure; then when on earth our work is done, may our storm-tossed bark be safely moored in the haven of eternal rest.

What will you say to them?

A letter from one of the "Editorial Committee," dated 1859, contains the following language, which might well be said to all the writers of the Crisis:—

"Give us some good prose for the Crisis. Roll out the thoughts that burn inside of you,—let them come, tears and all, on to the paper,—then prune, trim, soften and smoothe, but leave edge and fire to them. Launch them forth, and fill their sails with the breath of prayer. Remember, you can speak to nearly 10,000 persons, weekly, through the Crisis. What will you say to them? Say something that shall cause some poor heart to rise up and call you blessed in the great day of God.

O, M—, be diligent! Work while the day lasts. The night cometh; and while its shadows haste and the daylight flies away, we must be diligent, and by calm, sober, wise and well-directed effort manifest Christ to the world, and prepare men for the revelation of his excellent glory."

An examination passed on my soul, while reading over this language, to-day. And were it not that I have the assurance that a few of God's little ones have been benefitted by my feeble efforts, I should not dare to continue them. And, for the future, I am determined to write carefully, believing we are as liable to write words that wound the hearts of our friends, as to speak them. Then let all the writers, who speak to ten thousand souls weekly, be careful. We need wisdom and grace, I know; but we can have them. We need to pray as well as write. Who thinks of preaching a sermon without private and public prayer for success? Not many. Neither ought we to preach with the pen without praying that our words may be accompanied with God's Spirit.

Brethren, we need something more than talent to address so large a class of judgment-bound souls. We need the love of God in our own hearts; so shall we love mankind, and seek their good, rather than our honor. The number is composed of the tried, tempted, sorrowing, sick and poor. The widow and orphan,—the old and the young are before us. "What will you say" to this multitude? Tell them of Christ, and his dealings with his people. Tell them of righteousness and a judgment to come. Tell the sick of health—the weary of rest. This is no small privilege, to live in these last days, and find ten thousand readers willing to be told the messages of Jehovah committed to us. O, let us deal faithfully with them. We have a large field for thought,—a sweet promise to each mourner, and warnings to all the wicked. Then

"Keep back no words of wisdom
That human hearts should know."

May God bless us, make us wise, useful, kind, peaceful and good; and realize to us that our work is not in vain in the Lord; make us diligent as becometh those that wait for the Lord from heaven,—is my prayer.

Prophecy.

"We have also a more sure word of prophecy."—2 Pet. 1: 19.

The Scriptures span the vast outline
From Eden's flower-gemmed shore,
To where the bliss of a fadeless clime
Is measured by time no more:
Where the green palm tree lifts its head
O'er lands redeemed by blood,
And streams, like a silvery moonbeam, thread
The Paradise of God.

Earth's not mentioned and man forgot;
With pens of living light
The prophets have pictured the princely lot
Of the heir, with a home so bright.
Aye, pilgrim, lift thy care-dimmed eyes,
For a golden age shall dawn;
The stars grow dim in earth's changing skies,
Sure harbinger of morn.

Land of the Living.

Yes, so it is called. But I find that there are more dead and dying than living. Fifty thousand die every twenty-four hours. Then to add to sickness and mortality the terrible scourge of war, that has blasted the land ever since Cain slew his brother, and especially at this time, when every invention that men and devils can invent to kill is brought into action,—is it not getting to be more and more the land of the dead and dying? But we will thank God and take courage, that the fifth universal kingdom is about to be established under the whole heaven, when the glory of the Lord will cover the earth as the water now covers the sea; when there will be nothing to hurt nor destroy in all God's holy mountain. Then will the meek inherit the earth. Then will the righteous inherit the land, and dwell therein forever. Then will the kingdoms of this world become our Lord's, and he will reign forever and ever. Then will Jesus sit on his father David's throne, and reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end. Then will the saints put on immortality, and become sons and daughters to the Lord Almighty. So let us, dear Bros. and Srs., count all things loss and dross that we may win Christ and be found of him in peace, without spot and blameless; and hear him say, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

Dear waiting ones, we will exhort one another, and so much the more as we see the day approaching. The world has passed the Babylonish kingdom, also the Medo-Persian, Grecian and Roman kingdom in its various forms, till we are now occupying the last jots and tittles of the fourth or last earthly dynasty, when I have not a lingering doubt but the eternally glorious reign is about to be ushered in. Let us be ready and waiting, so that we can say in the language of the prophet, "Lo! this is our God, we have waited for him, and he will save us." Amen.

☞ A writer in the S. S. Times, speaking of persons who give as a reason for their not being christians, that there are so many inconsistent church-members, says that he was impressed with an incident related by a chaplain in one of our regiments in a sermon the other evening. He said a young man came into his camp, and in conversing on religious matters, he asked him why he was not a christian. "Why," said he, "because there are so many hypocrites in the church." "Well, are there not hypocrites out of the church?" "O! yes." "Well, what are you doing out of the church?"

When will He come?

The evening was before the day. Hence the evening and the morning were the first day. The Jews commenced their Sabbath at sunset, before dark. Now if six thousand years fill the week of the world's time, and the seventh thousand is the great Sabbath, then we should expect this Sabbath to commence before daylight is gone, on the sixth; that is, before we should otherwise call it the close of the sixth day. A few years in the close of the sixth thousand would be but as the twilight of Friday in the setting in of the Sabbath.

In the 24th of Matthew our Savior answers the complex question of the destruction of Jerusalem and of his second coming. Perhaps the question was providentially complex, the one being a type of or bearing a resemblance to the other. But certain it is that he commingles the answer. He says: "Except those days should be shortened, there should no flesh be saved. But for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened." This was true in the destruction of Jerusalem, when Titus besieged it. As the old world grew worse to the time of the flood, and as the new world has grown worse to the present, so will the future grow worse to the close of time. Iniquity will obtain to the extent that "some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils." Yea, even the faithful, "departing from the faith, will give heed." Now doubtless Spiritualism is the ancient witchcraft, as the spirits have said; for they may sometimes, by mistake, tell the truth. These witches never found the world wicked enough in former times to make their craft a general thing, openly; for while their works were often manifest, the workers were in secret, in by places, unpopular, being put down by law. But the devil is doubtless growing wiser. And the apostle was shown that ere the close of time, wickedness would abound—"spiritual wickedness in high places." Satan therefore cunningly sent Mesmerism ahead, affirming that it was a science; adopted it into good families, then brought forward Spiritualism, saying, O, don't be frightened, it is nothing but mesmerism!

But so we find it: spiritual wickedness in high places, stations, and families,—infidelity stalking abroad at noon-day, which once would have blushed to show its head. "This know, also, that in the last days perilous times shall come; for men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God." Have we knowledge of a time when this was all more true? "And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold." "For there shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world." "And except those days should be shortened, there should no flesh be saved; but for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened."

Admitting that prophecy verges to a close at '68, yet "He will finish the work, and cut it short in righteousness; because, a short work will the Lord make upon the earth." We have reason to believe that the Lord will cut short in righteousness the last end of the six thousand years; that the Sabbath will set in before dark; that the days of tribulation which shall be in the last days He will cut short, and establish righteousness for the elect's sake; that the time is at hand when we may always say, we expect it now. And the Lord Jesus Christ testifies, in his closing words to us, "Surely, I come quickly."

Western Missionary History.

Over five years ago, I came to this new, western field, to raise the banner of unpopular truth, where it had scarcely been unfurled before. This brief space of time forms a peculiar page in my ministerial history, which will long present itself to my mind, with its complexed features, in which trials and pleasures sorrows and joys, poverty and plenty, health and sickness, persecution and approbation, gospel labor and worldly labor, revivals and declensions, success and failures, friendship and enmity, discussions and evasions of discussions, school-house meetings and "church" meetings, prairie meetings and grove meetings, large meetings and small meetings, journeyings on foot and on horseback, journeyings by wagon and by sleigh, journeyings through mud and through snow-drifts, journeyings in cold and in heat, are strangely interwoven in my memory. Through a feeble instrumentality, something has been done to the glory of God, while very much remains undone. The latter part of my western history has been laborious, and somewhat successful. Much of the time I have preached from six to nine sermons per week. I have often thought that if the Lord approbated the quality of my preaching, he would not object to the quantity. I have had a fixed determination to make practical godliness prominent in my sermons. I often preach a dozen sermons in succession on purely practical themes, especially among believers. I have seen happy results of this course. Indeed, a church cannot prosper without such preaching.

The early part of my western mission was necessarily crippled. My goods, (about sixty dollars worth, at western prices,) were lost on the road, and never recovered or paid for; thus leaving us minus of bed, bedding, a part of our clothing, &c. Preaching in so new a field, I found by experience, took thrice as much out of pocket as it put in. Under these circumstances I tried to content myself by preaching on Sundays only, near home, to get rid of expense, devoting the rest of my time to manual labor, school teaching, &c. But the cry constantly saluted my ears, from every point of compass, "Come over and help us." The missionary fire was burning within me, and I would occasionally break away on a tour; sometimes getting traveling expenses paid, and sometimes not. Finally, Eld. B. insisted, with other friends, that the cause imperatively demanded that I should devote my whole time to preaching, at the expense of the brethren, who were few in number. I was convinced that duty required the undertaking. Accordingly, I moved to Wisconsin, and commenced my travels on foot. God blessed my labors. Soon the brethren insisted that I must have a horse. It was purchased, and for a while I traveled on horseback. Again, they insisted that I must have a wagon. It was purchased. As foremost in these matters, I shall ever gratefully remember Eld. B., Brn. K. and B. and T. of Sauk Co., Wisconsin. They live in my memory. God reward them.

I have passed through some things that our eastern ministers would whine about. Not getting rich, but seeking "enduring riches." Not wasting money in getting extravagant furniture or costly living. When friends call to see us, we welcome them to as good a bed as we have owned for over five years; namely, a straw bed, which is more healthful in summer than a rich man's bed, though not so comfortable in a cold winter. But I look from the past to the future. My motto is, "Work for God."

W. SHELDON.

Help one another.

"Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ."

How numerous are the ways we can do so. Are there any afflicted ones who feel the want of sympathy, some one to help bear their burdens, who, when weak in body, and consequently in mind, are ready to exclaim, O that I could have a word or look of sympathy from my bosom companion, instead of a reproachful one, as much as to say, "you are always feeling unwell, what do I care?" Is there one who knows by painful experience the want of sympathy in such an hour? If so, how do you keep your head above the waters? Perhaps you see some beyond the family circle get a word of sympathy to show off to the public, while you get a reproachful look under the same circumstances. If so, do you not feel detached from earth? Are you not ready to exclaim, any other trial I could better bear than this? Well, how shall we do? Try to bear up under it, cast our burdens on the Lord and be sustained. Perhaps there may be times when our system is so weak and prostrate, it seems impossible to do so. One wave of sorrow succeeds another, till we feel crushed. Under such circumstances, we need much of the grace of patience. Let us remember Christ said, bless them that curse you, not rendering evil for evil; and if we do so, and keep his commandments, we shall have right to the tree of life, and go in and out and find pasture. Let us sing,

"The road may be rough, it cannot be long,
We'll smoothe it with hope, and cheer it with song."

Perhaps we cry, O for grace! We need a double portion of the grace of God to be kept under such circumstances. If we cease to cry, "My soul be on thy guard," instead of overcoming evil with good, we shall be overcome of evil, fall into sin, make shipwreck of faith and a good conscience. But let us remember we have an high priest who can be touched with the feeling of our infirmities, who is ready to plead, "the spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak." Let us lift up our heads, knowing our "redemption draweth nigh."

From your unworthy Sister, CELIA.

For the Crisis.

"Why stand ye here all the day idle?"—Matt. 20: 6.

Can we bring an answer to this question that will stand the day of trial? Many have tried hard to frame excuses for their idleness in the vineyard of the Lord, which they would be glad to have accepted. There is no work that I can do, says one. Perhaps there is not much in the vineyard until your heart is in working order. Is it right with God? Have all your sins been forgiven, the last stain removed by the cleansing power of the precious blood of Jesus, and he having full possession? Is your soul and body laid a living, acceptable sacrifice upon the altar of God? Have you no will of your own? and is the overflowing desire and language of your heart from day to day, Jesus, what can I do for thee? Have you got so near him in prayer that the radiance of the Father's glory shines through his smiling face upon your consecrated heart, as he gently and lovingly lays his approving hand upon your devoted head and says, Child, thy request shall be granted? If so, a good work has already commenced in your heart.

No work that I can do! Look here, Sister. Did you know that Nancy L— and Mary C— were under conviction? "I mistrusted they were, for they wept a good part of the time in the prayer-meeting Sunday evening, and they called on me yesterday, both appearing quite serious." A good chance. You conversed about Jesus, his dying love, his care for them, his Spirit then striving, and how he stood with open arms smiling, waiting to receive and forgive them; then, from experience, told them of the peace there is in believing and joy in the Holy Ghost, and invited them to come and accept of the Savior now, did you? "N—o; I have n't any gift or talent for talking. If I could talk and pray as some can, I would n't value it." Did n't you speak to them? "O yes! I talked to them all the time they stayed." About what? "O! about the school, donation party, sewing circle, our new dresses and bonnets, one thing and another." Where did you get your gift? "O! these are common things." Ah! my sister, be not deceived. Who has said, "Where your treasure is, there will your heart be also," your mind, thoughts and conversation? My sister, a little more work—yes, considerable to be done at the heart. Had a stranger been listening to your conversation upon these topics, he would not have questioned your talent nor gift of communicating. The things and objects uppermost in your heart are those you best love and worship.

Bro., did you ask that young man of his hopes and expectations of the future life, as he conversed so freely yet rather sadly of the present, together with the distress, disappointment, commotion and dark shadows of earth? Did you not tell him of the promise of the bright future, the hope of the redeemed, and invite him to come to the Giver and share in the bliss of the new earth? Did you bow and give that poor old gentleman you met, leaning so feebly upon his staff to rest, a friendly shake of the hand, a smile of pleasure, as you said, "Well, grandfather, you've got almost through, and if you love Jesus, have him for your friend, he is soon to appear and will make an exchange, and for this frail body will give you one fashioned like his glorious body, forever to bloom in unfading beauty?" "N—o. I thought of it, but somehow I hardly dare to. I have n't got courage and confidence enough." A little more work at the heart, brother! Perfect love casteth out slavish fear. When we truly love the work, it is neither a task nor a very heavy cross. "My yoke is easy and my burden is light." Jesus, help in the work.

Nothing to do with! Wait. "Mrs. White, did you know that Mr. James had closed his shop, on account of the hard times?" "No." "Well, he has, and no more work now for poor Mrs. Young and widow Smith." "Dear me! what will those poor children do? I'll step in to the widow's to-night and see." "So do." Hark! "Mother, I am so cold," said little Charlie Smith, "and my feet ache so, I wish I had some old shoes to put on. Shant I put on a little wood, mother?" "No, child, there's only enough to kindle the fire in the morning." "What will you do, mother, then?" "I don't know, dear." "I am so hungry," whispered little Alice, "is n't there a little piece of cake left, mother, you'll please let me have to-night?" "Not any, dear, and only meal enough to make a small cake in the morning, should we live to need it," the big tears rolling down her pale, sunken cheek, still plying her needle, finishing the last work from the closing shop. "Don't cry, mother dear, may be I'll be a big boy soon, so I'll help you," said Charley—only five years old. No reply could the widow make, her heart was too full for utterance as the rushing tears unbidden still fell upon her work. "Is Jesus dead, mother?" anxiously inquired little Charley as he drew near, laying his little cold hand upon her arm, watching the fast falling tears, and remembering the story she had told him a few days before, how Jesus had once died, rose again, and now lives to take care of, watch over, feed and clothe us. "Why no, child," replies the mother, making some little effort to speak. "What makes you ask that question?" "mother' cause us t'other day you said he lives to take care of us, and to feed us, and may be if he don't come his'self he will send somebody; so don't cry, mother, long as Jesus lives." Wait, sister, don't go in just now. Is 'nt there work here to do, and have 'nt you anything to do with? Go back, ask husband to take a large armful of wood, that nice pair of boots getting small for Willie, divide that loaf of bread, take part of the butter, if you have to fast and pray for your own supper; go in, spend the evening, pray with and for her and the children, and you will lift a burden from that widow's heart that yours is a stranger to, and your dreams that night may be of Paradise on the new earth where the widow's heart will sing for joy. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." "All things whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them: for this is the law and the prophets."

No man hath hired us! Well, perhaps somebody else has. "Sister Mason, what excellent discourses, and what a good meeting we had last Sabbath," said Bro. L—, after listening to three gospel sermons from Bro. P—, who had traveled over thirty miles at his own expense. He had been invited, yet no man had hired him. Why? O! because he is not preaching for hire now. One had said, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. . . . Lo! I am with you always, even to the end of the world." So upon the strength of this promise and others of equal import, he had gone and was still going. "Well, Bro. P—, can't you come again and preach to us?" "I don't know, Bro. L—, if the Lord opens and provides a way, I may." "Good bye! Bro. P—, God bless you!" The servant of God takes his leave. God has blessed him—his health good—his heart light, and purse lighter still. His well-trained steed now all life for home hastens, oversteps and pulls a shoe from its place. Thirty miles nearly to travel. "Shoe must be replaced, and only one quarter in my purse, and that wife's hard earnings, which she unsolicited placed there for fear what might happen on the way!" Well, shoe replaced, bill paid, leaves the purse light and empty, but places a heavy weight upon the heart, which under ought-to-be circumstances would not be perceptible, but somehow just now there is a strange proximity between the two for recollecting that he had been absent from home several days, and wife said that morning, "Husband, we've only a few pounds of flour, but we'll try and make it do till you return." The Lord will provide, and now being rather faint and weary from the journey, the thought, though often suppressed, arose with double weight, causing the heart, though well supplied with faith and hope, to sink. A few hours drive brings him just at night-fall in front of his own "hired house," meeting his patient, faithful, loving wife with the ever-cheerful salutation, "How do you do, husband? How have you prospered?" "Pretty well; the Lord is good. How do you and the children do?" "Alive and well, thank the Lord." Sr. P—, after waiting awhile to see if husband does not bring from his sleigh some articles of food, as presents, from which she could prepare a little more for their repast, arranges the table, brings from the pantry a very small, thin pie, a few slices of bread, places them upon the table with a tumbler of water, saying, "Come, husband, the children and I fasted for dinner, and reserved this till your return to enjoy it with us. Did not the dear friends give you anything?" "Not this time," slowly replied the husband looking rather sad. "What shall we do, husband?" "Trust in the Lord and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land; and verily thou shalt be fed." "I think this means spiritually, husband; surely it cannot be temporally." They are seated around the table, and after the usual blessing the children are served with a piece of bread which they very much relish. Soon little Ada looking up notices papa with head bowed down, apparently not so very hungry, and exclaims, "Papa! can't you eat?" In vain does the strong man with a strong heart hitherto sustained by faith endeavor to longer conceal his emotions. The deep fountain is stirred—a flood of tears now rushes unbidden down his manly cheek, bedewing the morsel still lying untouched before him. Still struggling with the heavy burden on his sinking heart he rises, walks the room, a half-suppressed groan with the usual "O my Father!" escapes his lips, and he retires to the closet. Go, Bro., unobserved and kneel by his side, and witness the distress, the deep anguish and earnest pleadings of that servant of God, "O my Father! I ask not for ease, comfort, or wealth, but give us our daily bread!"

Say, Bro., doth God care for lilies, sparrows and oxen, and not for his children, his servants, who have made a covenant with him by sacrifice? Hath he provided for these and not ordained that they who preach the gospel should live of the gospel? Think of this, friends of Jesus, if indeed he has any in these days. Can you look here and say no man hath hired us? Decide cautiously, you that indulge in the use of "gold" and "costly apparel," have splendid houses, richly furnished parlors, and well-filled granaries. Hath no one hired you? Is there nothing that you can do? and have you nothing to do with? How shall they who preach live of the gospel if you, as God's stewards, withhold from them that which is the Lord's? Is not the earth his and the fulness thereof, and are you not his? Then look well to your accounts, for a settlement will soon be called for. A little while and the Judgment. "Behold the Judge standeth before the door!"

Brethren and sisters, this is no overdrawn picture, nor fancy sketch; it is real life. Work while the day lasts. Verily the night cometh. Live daily as though Jesus were here personally with you, and then you will be all ready with joy to meet him at his coming. Having done all, you will stand.

Inquiry.

Bro. A. Kidder wishes to know the meaning of the word rendered return in Josh. 22: 8, as connected with a remark made in our discussion with W. Clayton.

The passage in Joshua was associated with Phil. 1: 23, which reads as follows:—"For I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart and be with Christ, which is far better." It was stated that the word analuo, here rendered depart, occurs in only one other place, which is in Luke 12: 36, where it is rendered return,—"And ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their Lord, when he will return from the wedding." We then quoted from a distinguished scholar,* who says, "In twenty-two manuscripts of the Septuagint, including the Oxford, it is used in Josh. 22: 8, for the Hebrew word which always signifies 'to return.'" The passage in Joshua reads,—"And he spake unto them, saying, Return with much riches unto your tents."

The Hebrew word rendered return, in Joshua, is shoov, and is defined as follows:—"He returned, or was remanded, sent back, as to a former residence, or place, Gen. 31: 3, 42: 28, Ruth 1: 8, Ps. 9: 17."—Roy. The following are the foregoing passages: "And the Lord said unto Jacob, Return unto the land of thy fathers." "And he said unto his brethren, My money is restored; and, lo, it is even in my sack." "And Naomi said unto her two daughters-in-law, Go, return each to her mother's house." "The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God." It appears evident that shoov, in the last example, should be rendered returned, or turned back. The Septuagint reads,—"Let sinners be turned back to the mansions of the dead."

The foregoing shows that shoov is not properly rendered depart, but return; consequently, when the translators render the Hebrew word shoov, "which always signifies 'to return,'" by the Greek word analuo, it it strong evidence in favor of its being rendered return, or returning, in Phil. 1: 23,—"Having a desire for the returning and being with Christ;" that is, he had a desire for Christ to return, so that he could be with him.—o.

Think for Yourself.

There are but few people, of independent minds, who dare do their own thinking. Most men are only echoes of some one else; like weather vanes, they show which way the popular wind blows. They are slaves to fashion and public opinion. The best that can be said of them is, they are conservative, neutral. These careful conservatives assist in reforming society, and in spreading the truth of the Lord, as does the man who looks on while others draw the load up the hill, and then rides down. They are very much opposed to what they term "radicalism," which, in their estimation, includes every thing opposed to the popular voice. If Christ, the apostles, and reformers, had been governed by such cowardly principles, christianity would have died out long since, and the truth of the Lord been buried among fables, to rise no more for ever.

The following incident illustrates the position of the conservative class of people of whom we are speaking. A clever sort of woman in Sherbrook, C. E., went to hear a new preacher say some new things, and after meeting was asked what she thought of the sermon? She replied, "I can't tell till I see Dea. Arms."—o.

Condition of the Pope.

It is evident that Pius IX. is in a critical situation. This his best friends now see, while his own eyes seem to be blinded in a measure to his real helpless condition. The Empress of France has expressed strong sympathy for him, and has evidently exerted all her powers for the purpose of upholding his tottering throne; but it appears she has become discouraged. It is said there is much talk in Paris about an autograph letter from the Empress to the Pope, in which she is said to urge him to be resigned to a proximate solution of the Roman question." The Pope still professes to be confident of success. The Boston Pilot reports the following from him:—"My trust in the future is positive. Never, I may say it, has it been greater. I have no doubt, then, about the approaching triumph of the Church."

Mystic Babylon, on the seven hills, is now in about the same condition as was the ancient city of the same name, the night it was taken by Cyrus. The hand writing is upon the wall, while she is in the midst of her gorgeous festivals and feasts, attended by the dignitaries of the church. The latest news says, "Rome is full of priests and soldiers." Her awful hour of doom cannot be far off, when she will sink like a millstone cast into the sea. She must soon begin to drink from her retribution cup. "She can feast no more upon the blood of the martyrs of Jesus." They will soon rise to shout eternal victory over all their bloody foes, and be welcomed "to the marriage supper of the Lamb." Soon the glad hour will burst upon us. Reader, are you ready?—o.

Napoleon and the Pope.

It appears evident that Napoleon III. with the French empire represents the eighth and last head of the scarlet-colored beast, in Revelation chap. 17. It is equally plain that the "woman" is near the close of her journey, which is to end in "perdition." The French troops are the only reliable protection of "the mother of harlots," whose seat is on the "seven-hilled city" in Rome.

In a letter from Louis Napoleon to Victor Emanuel, dated last July, he says:—

"It is now eleven years that I have supported the power of the Holy Father at Rome, in spite of my desire not to occupy militarily any portion of the Italian soil. Circumstances have always been such that it has been impossible for me to evacuate Rome."

We think the time is at hand for startling events connected with the "eternal city," that has been made "drunken with the blood of the saints." The time is short for her to boast,—"I sit a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow." The wail of mourning is already on the breeze, and her admirers will soon say, "Alas! alas! . . . in one hour is thy judgment come, . . . in one hour is so great riches come to nought, . . . in one hour is she made desolate." Following the wailing of her infatuated devotees, comes the rejoicing of those she has slain. Let the glad day come speedily.—o.

War Ministers.

It is still a mystery to us how any one who loves Jesus, and is possessed of his Spirit, can go forth to the battle field and assist in killing his fellow-men; for our Savior has taught us to love our enemies, be kind to them, and pray for them. We learn from the Scriptures that "love worketh no ill to his neighbor." We do not know what greater ill we could do to a man than to take his life, and deprive his children of a father and his wife of the means of support, thus making his home desolate. If this is christianity, we confess our inability to understand the teachings of Christ and the apostles. We have yet to learn that the spirit of war and the spirit of Christ can be harmonized. To us, they seem as much opposed as sin and holiness. We clipped the following item from a late paper:—

"The minutes of the Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church and other official sources, show that there are 322 clergymen of that body in the loyal army. Of these there are four colonels, two lieutenant-colonels, one major, thirty-six captains, twenty inferior officers, ten privates and two hundred and forty chaplains."

Blessed are the Peacemakers.

At a recent meeting of the Quakers in Philadelphia, they took occasion to re-avow their peace principles, for which they have been justly noted. Would that all the professed followers of Jesus had ever adhered to the same spirit and practice, as taught by our Savior.

In the address issued by the society, they exhort their brethren not to engage "in any trade or business promotive of war; sharing or partaking of the spoils of war by purchasing or selling prize goods; importing or shipping goods in armed vessels; paying taxes for the express purpose of war; grinding of grain, feeding of cattle, or selling their property for the use of the army, . . . it being the judgment of this meeting that if any of our members do, either openly or by any connivance, pay any fine, penalty or tax, in lieu of personal service for carrying on war; or allow their children, apprentices, or servants to act therein; or are concerned in arming or equipping vessels with guns, or in dealing in public certificates, issued as a compensation for expenses incurred, or services performed, in war; that they be tenderly dealt with, and if they are not brought to an acknowledgment of their error, monthly meetings should proceed to testify against them."

They also recommend that the Friends should suffer the spoiling of their goods, imprisonment, and martyrdom, rather than violate their peace principles. This is noble, and corresponds with primitive christianity, and the teachings of Christ.—o.

Garibaldi and the Priesthood.

The following from a Turin paper shows the feeling and determination of Garibaldi and the Italians:

"Genoa, March 12. I shall not speak of faults. When I speak to crowds I quote from the words of the gospel, 'let him who is without sin cast the first stone.' Harmony, therefore, between us, if you wish it, but act well; hitherto you have acted ill. You have made Rome a den of wild beasts, thirsting for the destruction of Italy. I am unhappily convinced that you cannot save the cardinals from perdition, but do it if you can. Moreover, cry to the four winds of heaven that you will have no companionship with the wicked, that you are Italians, that you will at least imitate the priesthood of Hungary, of Poland, of Greece, of China, of the savages of America, where the priest does not deny his fellow citizens, but combats together with them for the independence of their country. Let the Italian priest launch from the pulpit the sacred words of the redemption of the country, and of the damnation in hell of the Vatican. He will then have, in the first place, the entire approbation of his own conscience, and secondly, the approbation and gratitude of millions of men. Revive the ancient christianity, which proclaims self-denial, mutual forgiveness, and the holy doctrine of the equality of men. It is on these conditions that we can receive you as brethren.

Garibaldi."

Effects of War.

The following extract from a letter to the Boston Journal, dated Cairo, May 25, 1862, shows the demoralizing effects of war. The writer says:—

"Service in the field is a severe test upon moral character. Facilis descensus Averni! Easy to slide. A gentleman informed me that he saw the other day two men, one of them a church member at home, and the other an estimable man, correct in all his morals, having a game of cards upon a coffin which contained the body of a comrade! They played as unconcernedly as if it were a table or a dry goods box, and both were profuse in the use of profane language. It is a sad but not a solitary instance of a great fall from virtue. Profanity in the army is the great demoralizing vice. Officers are very profane to their men, forgetting that the regulations make it an offence. I know of a Brigadier General, commanding a division, who interlards his orders with blasphemous words.—o."

Anti-Tobacco Journal.

We have just received the May and June numbers of Bro. Geo. Trask's excellent Anti-tobacco Journal, that should be read by all who use tobacco, or think of commencing. We propose that all who use the weed should go without it long enough to save money sufficient to take the Journal one year, which will require but one dollar. He will pay the postage. Come, make the experiment, and send the dollar at once to Geo. Trask, Fitchburg, Mass. He deserves patronage in his noble work.—o.

Bro. Hudson's new tract, entitled, "The silence of the Scriptures respecting the immortality of the soul, or of the race, or of the lost," is now ready. It is excellent, and should be in the hands of all lovers of truth. It is a good tract to lend your neighbor, who thinks a belief in the sleep of the dead is heresy. Price 5 cents, postage one cent.—o.

Letter from England.

In the fall of 1857 the writer of the following letter, several months after his arrival from England, found his way into the meetings of the Advent Church in Albany. At home he had been connected with the "Plymouth Brethren," and in our gatherings at "Rechabite Hall" he found much to remind him of the scenes he had been familiar with. A strong mutual attachment at once grew up between him and our society, and during his brief residence in Albany our fellowship was of an intimate and endearing character. The great financial panic was upon the country at this time, and our brother found little to encourage him in the way of business. Having remained among us a few months, he determined, though not without reluctance, to return to his native land. While among us he embraced the doctrine of the unconsciousness of the dead and the destruction of the wicked. With the doctrine of the Advent of Christ, as an event right at hand, he had previously been familiar. He left us with the earnest desire to carry back to his brethren the precious light he had received on the Immortality question. He found them, however, utterly unwilling to receive it. More than this, they excluded him from their fellowship, believing that he had fallen into a fearful snare of the devil. This proved, as might well be supposed, a severe trial to our brother; but he had counted the cost and could not be moved from his new position.

I trust the following letter, which needs no farther preliminary explanations, will be found interesting to many of the readers of the Crisis.

Rufus Wendell.

9, Victoria Terrace, Royal Road, Walworth, London, April, 1862.

Dear Brother Wendell:—

Last year I received a number of copies of the "Crisis" and though I was not sure who was the sender, I supposed them to come from Bro. Gladding. A short time ago, my wife was looking at No. 304 and discovered your kind communication which had previously escaped my notice, and which showed me to whom I was indebted. Under these ungrateful circumstances forgive my delay and accept my thanks.

I was pleased to find that you had taken the post of Editor, and that you were engaged in the ministry. Seeing that a warm discussion was being maintained on the subject of christians bearing arms, I had prepared my views to send to you, when a subsequent number announced that for a time the subject was waived; my paper was therefore useless.

Excepting short intervals my religious experience, since my return to England, may be comprehended in the word isolation. Until I came to London, circumstances debarred me from communion with those who love the appearing of our Lord. In our experience here, we learn many things by contrast, and I have found that, in a soul that clings to Christ, no amount of temporal comfort can compensate for the loss of communion with kindred spirits. I often recur to the happy and profitable meetings of the brethren at Albany—a flock poor, compared with many others, but rich in faith; they knew but one degree, their sympathies were evenhanded; inspired by a common faith, and rejoicing in a common hope, they could forbear with petty differences. These remembrances have often caused me a melancholy pleasure; memory does not restore the past, it only reveals it in the hazy, mournful distance.

Since I have lived in London (about a year) I attended for a short time the ministry of Mr. Newton, who like myself has been rejected by the Plymouth Brethren for heresy. Though he holds the immortality of the soul, he seldom refers to it. The character of his preaching and writings is Elijah-like, protesting against the evil course of the age and its corruption. About nine months ago, the lease of his chapel having expired, he removed to another, about four miles distant from where I am at present living; so that, except occasionally in summer, I have now little opportunity of hearing him. Among those who attended him, I have found a brother named Veitch, who holds views similar to ours, and he informs me that our brethren are rather numerous in Scotland, and that they support a periodical called the "Messenger." I forward a copy, and think that an article it contains on the "Land of Sodom" may be worthy of a place in the "Crisis." I also forward a work of Mr. Newton's on "Babylon," a pamphlet on "Jerusalem and its future history," and two others on the "Ephah of Zachariah;" one for yourself and one for Bro. Storrs, which I request you to forward to him as I not know his address. I hope to send you some others in course of time.

Although I have now to consult the wishes of another, I have not entirely abandoned the hope of seeing you again, if the Lord will; for I find that having passed my earliest days in Jamaica, my constitution will not conform to the climate of England, which is very changeable at all seasons, and very damp. My wife joins me in love to you and your family.

I remain yours in Christ,

D. Gordon.

Note.—A circular received by me from the London Post Office communicates the fact that the publications named by Bro. Gordon are held there and "cannot be forwarded" until postage is prepaid. Bro. G. can resume them by inquiring for "Book Packet No. C. P. 1101." The postage being (as I conclude) a large sum, I shall not expect to receive the "Packet." At the same time I thank my far off brother for the good will he has shown in the matter. The "Messenger" periodical has come to hand. I would inform Bro. G. that my address is "Salem, Mass."

Carpet-bag Report.

After returning from my little excursion into Wisconsin in February and March, I spent about a week in Chicago, and left then for this direction. Have visited Aurora, Lane, Dixon, Amboy, Mendota, Lasalle, Vermillionville, Tonica, Ottawa, Peru, Dover, Malden, Princeton, Kewaee, Wataga, Galesburg, Knoxville, Cameron, Monmouth, Burlington (Iowa), Keokuk, Warsaw, Quincy, and St. Louis, where I now am. I have lectured in three orthodox churches, in two instances to the Sabbath congregation, and with apparent good effect. In one case the pastor urged me to do so, giving notice in the morning that I should say some things in the afternoon which the congregation might not believe, and which he did not hold. But if one had devoted himself for years to the investigation of what he regards as truth, and had presented the result in a christian way, he was entitled to a hearing. And it was well for them to hear sometimes that from which they might dissent, lest their faith should gather cobwebs. And I got, on such a notice, as pleasant a hearing as could be wished.

In most of these places the carpet-bag has fared very well. But best of all here. I came not expecting so much to do business as to see one or two friends and look upon so famous a city. If I paid my expenses I should call that doing well enough. Have been here now near two weeks. Have sold of "Debt and Grace" twenty-five copies. Of complete sets of my books, thirteen copies. Seven of my patrons are Catholic priests. Ten are Germans, of different denominations. Six are known as holding Life in Christ only, and are mostly Adventists. Whole number of persons who have paid for something to read, forty-six. This is when not a few complain of hard times.

My chats with the priesthood have been more than usually pleasant. They are often models of gentility, and, though they often take a book for mere curiosity, they will doubtless in most cases find a fair reading. My list of ministers in orthodox connexion who hold our view of Immortality is now forty.

Leave for Bunker Hill, Ill., to-morrow, and hope to see Bunker Hill Monument in about eight months, after a two years' absence.

Campmeetings.

Bro. Grant:—I have seen that my suggestion about a campmeeting was misunderstood by many. I did not design, by any means, to have it interfere with the Wilbraham meeting; but I did think, and still do, that it would be beneficial to the cause of Christ and truth, to have other meetings scattered about, so that many that could not get to Wilbraham would have the blessed privilege of attending a Second Advent Campmeeting. There is a strong desire of many in N. H. to have a meeting in that State. And I hope the Brn. will stir themselves, and concentrate all their influence and interest and have a consistent, good, old-fashioned Advent Campmeeting, where all can unite in sounding the alarm and saving men. Let efforts and meetings be multiplied for Christ's sake.

Debt and Grace.—We clipped the following notice from the New York Independent:—

"Debt and Grace, as related to the Doctrine of a Future Life. By C. F. Hudson. New York: Carleton. 1861. 12mo. pp. 489. This is an elaborate and detailed examination of the three beliefs: 1. In the eternal misery of the wicked; 2. In the ultimate purification and happiness of all; 3. In the annihilation (the author prefers 'extinction' as less obnoxious) of the wicked; the argument being concentrated, of course, upon the assertion of the latter belief, which Mr. Hudson is well known to advocate. We do not recollect any fuller discussion of the subject. Many thoughtful minds incline toward admitting the possibility at least of the truth of Mr. Hudson's belief."

Tremont Campmeeting.

Those interested in this meeting will please notice the change of time, referred to in another column. We trust this will be a large and profitable gathering. We hope to be able to be present.—o.

Correspondence.

From Bro. J. Morrison.

Dear Brn. and Srs.:—The most of us have expected that, before this period, we should have been released from the watch-tower, and have entered our eternal rest; but our hope is not yet realized. We are still surrounded by a wicked, corrupt world; the influences on every hand are unholy, and consequently against us. Let us obey the admonition, "be ye also ready;" and not suffer these unhallowed influences to alienate our affections from the better things prepared for all that love the appearing of Jesus Christ. Praised be the name of God forever for the hope that we cherish. Peter calls it "a lively hope." The apostle Paul calls it a "blessed hope," in his letter to Titus; but in Hebrews, he speaks of a "better hope," of "better things," to be realized in a "better country," through a "better resurrection."

O, bright and glorious Hope! we look for and hasten unto thee, and the literal, personal appearing of our Savior, Jesus Christ, without sin unto salvation to all them that believe, and obey the gospel of the kingdom of Jesus Christ; and to the destruction of them that do not believe nor obey the gospel.

Though he may seem to tarry, let us patiently wait, for he will surely come, (at the appointed time,) he "will not tarry." I firmly believe this hope will soon be consummated. The prophecies and signs in the state of the world, (moral and political,) all say to the believer, be ready. The earth is waxed old as a garment, and in every point of view is as the prophets, Jesus Christ, and the apostles, said it should be at the time when the trump should sound. The transgressors have come to the full, wicked men and seducers have waxed "worse and worse," until they are ripe for destruction; and the great reaper will soon reap the earth. O may we all be ready to lay off this corruptible and put on incorruption, to drop this mortal and put on immortality, and enter through the gates into the city, and be forever with our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ. Amen. Your brother, waiting for the "blessed hope."

John Morrison.

New Glasgow, C. E., 1862.

From Sr. L. A. Hall.

Dear Bro. Grant:—As I sat watching beside my little sick, suffering boy, I thought I would write a few lines to you. I have been thinking of writing for some time, but have delayed until the present, as I was anxious to have something to send with it, although but a mite. I have felt an interest in the cause of the C. P. S. ever since I saw the notice in the Crisis, and resolved that the first dollar that I could spare, without injury to my family, should be freely given. It is now in my hands, and I gladly send it with no regret save that it is no more. I am strongly attached to the Crisis, and its contributors. My prayer has often been, "Lord bless the Editor of the Crisis, and others of like faith." I claim a very near relation to all such. May we soon meet in the kingdom.

There's Glory.

There's glory, I know, on yonder bright shore,
Where sorrows and trials and tears come no more;
There's life for the dying and hope for the dead,—
They by living waters shall gently be led.

There's joy for the mourner and wealth for the poor,—
The weary may rest and their conflicts be o'er;
The sad shall be merry, the sick be restored,
And dwell in the presence of Jesus, their Lord.

There's glory in Eden, bright glory, I know,
And to that blest home I am anxious to go;
Lord, keep me from sin and receive me at last
When all earthly toil and commotion is past.

Obituary Notices.

Died in Wakefield, N. H., May 15th, 1862, Mrs. Louisa W. Hooper, wife of Lieut. Chas Hooper, of the New Hampshire 7th Regiment Vols., Co. D., aged 29 years.

The subject of this notice gave her heart to God in 1854, and experienced a pardon of her sins and was baptized; but when the reaction came she ceased to love her Savior, and began again to move in the current of the world, as many others have done, and lost her hope in Christ, and thus continued until about six months previous to her death, when she again resolved to serve the Lord and have eternal life. She confessed her backslidings to God and the brethren, and gave good evidence of her acceptance with Christ.

Her disease was quick consumption. She bore her sickness with patience and christian resignation, and passed away with the hope of immortality which Jesus will give when the dead are raised to life again. She has left a husband, son, mother, brothers and sisters, to mourn her loss, with a large circle of other relatives and friends. May this be an unbroken family in the kingdom of God.

Oh when, when will it be,
That death 'll be destroyed,
And all the saints be free,
No more to be annoyed?
'Twill be when Jesus comes;
Death then will be no more;
The saints will then be freed
From him that "had" the power.

A. W. Sibley.

Died in Kennebunk, June 7th, 1862 Edward M., son of Bro. John and Sister Frances Brown, aged twenty years, five months.

Edward was an amiable young man, very much inclined to study, and was the idol of the family. He practised the most rigid discipline in his diet, though fond of luxuries and rich articles of food; but death had marked him for a victim, and diet could not save him.

A little less than a week previous to his death he came to see me, and spent most of the day; but disease of the throat seized him and carried him suddenly off. During the past winter he gave his heart to God, and found sweet peace in believing. He has for a number of years been a firm believer in the literal interpretation of the Holy Scriptures, and since giving his heart to God has looked with joy for the return of Him who is to "make all things new."

Edward sleeps, and his parents feel deeply their loss; but they have much to comfort them. They have hope in his death, and firmly believe that in a little while Jesus will come, and the dead will come forth, they that have done good to life, and they that have done evil to die again, and believe Edward will come forth to the resurrection of life. May God bless the bereaved ones.

His funeral was attended at our chapel, on Sunday, and, notwithstanding the rain, a large congregation of sympathizing friends assembled, and listened attentively to words of comfort from the writer, drawn from Rev. 21: 4.

W. H. Mitchell.

Died at the hospital in Evansville, Ind., April 25th, 1862, of wounds received in the battle of Pittsburgh, Wm. Oaks, aged 25 years.

At the Soldier's Home, Quincy, Ill., May 17th, of typhoid fever, Lafayette Oaks, aged 27 years.

They were brothers from the state of Maine; and when the call for three years volunteers was sent through our land, these noble brothers early responded to the call, but their warfare is over. Their last battle in the great rebellion is fought. They sleep in the embrace of the last enemy. No more will the shrill fife, the roll of the drum, the rattle of musketry, the cannon's awful roar, call them forth to battle. The storm of death, dealing missiles, will fall unheeded by them, but in the great realm of death they will sleep on till Gabriel's trump shall call them again from the land of the enemy, when wars and fightings shall cease. The following are Lafayette's dying words:—"I have given myself to God, I have done all I could."

E. C. Keith.

Died very suddenly, in Foster, R. I., May 13th, of heart disease, Bro. Darius Durfee, aged 80 years.

He loved the gates of Zion, and the inner courts of the house of God. He reverenced the name of Jehovah, and admired the name of Jesus. He sleeps like his fathers, having not received the promise. A large collection of neighbors were present to pay their last respects to the old pilgrim, and lay him away in the family burying place, there quietly to rest till Jesus bids him come forth to receive his crown.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Halifax, June 11. The steamer Africa, from Liverpool May 31st, via. Queenstown June 1, arrived off the harbor at four o'clock this morning.

The British Government, at the request of the Atlantic Telegraph Company, has ordered two steamers to be got ready for the purpose of making further surveys on both sides of the Atlantic.

The French army in Rome is about to be reduced to a single division.

The Paris correspondent of the Times says that a formal demand has been made at Rome for the expulsion, in as gentle a manner as possible, of the King of Naples. The French troops (so the ultimatum says) are sufficient to protect the Holy Father, but not sufficient to put down brigandage in the Neapolitan States. Rome is full of priests and soldiers.

On the 25th of August will be celebrated over the Czar's boundless dominions the one thousandth anniversary of the foundation of [illegible] the Russian Empire, [illegible] promulgated on [illegible] reforms are, it is said, the great one also. [illegible]

Fifteen destruction, four churches and the town manufactories, the dwellings of all the inhabitants, about ten thousand, are burned to the [illegible] tants. Several lives have been lost. The fire was caused by lightning.

Terrible Distress in Ireland.—The reports of destitution and suffering in Ireland are fully confirmed by a communication from John Francis Maguire, M. P., which appears in the London Times. Mr. Maguire adds to his own testimony that of official persons in various parts of Ireland, all going to show that many of the peasantry are reduced to the last stages of poverty. James Barry makes the following report to the Guardians of the Skibbereen Union:

"I visited Sherkin and Cape Clear on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. I found the utmost destitution and want of every kind, and no fuel except the dropping of the cows. I did not hear that any one died of starvation, but many, especially the children, were emaciated to the greatest degree, and unless immediate relief is given from this until the potatoes are fit for use, I fear some will perish."

Mr. Hurley reports: "I found, both in Sherkin and Cape Clear, that there are a great number suffering from insufficient food. Women and children looked as if they were approaching the gradual decay of strength and muscle. Their appearance was wretched, and their houses wretched."

Mr. Downing says: "I did not see food enough in any house to supply the family with the second day's provision. I went into one house where there had been no dressing or preparation, and I can swear on my solemn oath that I saw in that woman's house—about four feet by nine—some boiled sea-weed, and nothing else."

☞ The particulars of a frightful tornado which devasted a part of the border between England and Scotland are related in a letter to the London Times of the 12th ult. Trees were wrenched from the ground and carried five or six rods. Houses were unroofed or destroyed, and fences swept away. In one case land which had been recently ploughed was levelled as if by a roller; in others the surface was scored up as if by a torrent. Hailstones fell of from one to two inches in diameter.

SEVEN DAYS LATER.

St. Johns, N. B., June 14. The steamship Bavaria, from Southampton 4th, and the China from Liverpool 7th, Queenstown 8th, passed Cape Race at 11 o'clock this forenoon.

The Viceroy of Egypt had arrived in London.

The Paris Moniteur publishes an Imperial decision reducing the French army at Rome to a single division, consisting of three divisional brigades under General Montebello.

The Prussian Ambassador had presented his credentials to the French Emperor.

Garibaldi has had an explanation with the King's Aid-de-Camp at Turin, at which, it is asserted, all the differences between the Government and Garibaldi were arranged.

The Turks had beat the Montenegrins. They had burned four villages and killed 700 men. The latter had been repulsed several times and were flying to the mountains. On the 29th ult. the Turks marched against Schermitz, a large village occupied by 2000 Montenegrins. The latter were beaten and fled, having first fired their houses.

CHINA.

The rebels have been twice defeated with great loss. Foreigners at Ningpo remain unmolested. Colonel Ward, an American, had been created a Mandarin.

There is a rumor that Napoleon contemplates the permanent establishment of French influence in Mexico by means of a Protectorate.

The Empress Eugenia is expected to pay a private visit to England during the Emperor's visit to Vichy.

France and Prussia both reject the proposition of the Porte relative to the Church of the Holy Sepulchre at Jerusalem.

The Italian Government has resolved to form six new brigades of infantry.

Liverpool, Saturday night. The Paris Moniteur contains a notification of the blockade of the Mexican ports of Tampico and Alvarado.

At the request of the Atlantic Telegraph Company, the Admiralty has ordered the steamer Porcupine to prepare to take soundings. It will be ready in about ten days.

☞ By the latest advices from England we learn that one of the principal sluices near Lynn had burst—that the waters of the North Sea had broken in, and no less than thirteen thousand acres of land were completely deluged.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

From Gen. Fremont's Division.

Virginia, June 8th. Gen. Fremont has overtaken the enemy, of whom he has been in pursuit for a week, forced him to fight, and driven him from his chosen position with heavy loss. He left Harrisonburg this morning, at 6 o'clock, and advanced in pursuit of Jackson by the road leading to Fort Republic, on the left of the turnpike to Staunton, seven miles beyond Harrisonburg.

The rebels fought wholly under cover, while our troops were forced to advance through open fields.

The enemy's advantages of position and numbers were counterbalanced and defeated by Gen. Fremont's skilful handling of his troops, and the coolness and determination with which he pressed his success. The fight was furious for three hours, and continued until nearly dark. Our army slept on the field of battle.

The loss is heavy on both sides, the enemy suffering especially from our artillery. The Garibaldi Guards lose nearly 200, and the 25th Ohio, 60. The total loss is estimated at from 600 to 800 in killed, wounded and missing.

Baton Rouge, May 28th. The Federals attempted to land troops at the Garrison yesterday morning in small boats. Just as they were about to land, a Confederate company fired on them, when, without giving timely notice, the Federals commenced throwing shot and shell into the town. One of the missiles struck the Waine House. Many other houses were struck.

In half an hour after the firing commenced nearly all of the women and children left town, flying in every direction. The Federals are now landing troops. A fight is expected soon, a confederate force being near the city.

Capture of Chattanooga.—The defeat of the rebels at Chattanooga, Tennessee, and the capture of the place by a detachment from General Mitchell's command, is an important event at this time. It cuts off all Western communication by rail between Beauregard's and Johnston's armies. It has been conjectured by some that Beauregard, in his present unknown retreat, might attempt a flank movement on the right to Nashville, thus bringing him in the rear of the main part of our army in the West. But Gen. Mitchell has blocked this game by the occupation of the Chattanooga road. He now cuts off Beauregard from all approach to Nashville as effectually as McDowell has shut Johnston out from making a diversion on Washington. We are closing in on the rebels in every quarter.—Boston Journal.

Fremont's Headquarters,
Port Republic, Va., June 10.

The army advanced early this morning in line of battle, but finding no enemy, proceeded in a column through the woods and over the country to Port Republic. Everywhere were evidences of the completeness of yesterday's success. The battle was fought at Cross Keys, and takes that name. The rebel loss was greatly superior to ours. They left their dead and many of their wounded on the field. Not less than 500 dead were found and many wounded. Two of their guns were left behind, which we captured this morning.

Capt. Dunker of Gen. Fremont's staff was killed. Capt. Gitterman of Cluseret's staff was severely wounded. No other staff officers were killed or wounded.

The rebel wounded were found in every house along the road.

Ambulances, wagons, arms and clothing strewed the field.

Forty of our wounded were taken prisoners and left in a church, and were retaken.

The 6th Louisiana regiment lost all but thirty men.

The enemy retreated until midnight, and this morning their rear guard crossed the Shenandoah at this place and burnt the bridge.

New York, June 10. The Petersburg Express states that Gen. Lee is in command of the rebel army, in consequence of a slight wound received by Gen. Johnson.

Letters from Gen. McClellan's army state that it is proved beyond a doubt that the rebels made the attack on the memorable Saturday with 60,000 men, and that they were obliged to confess a complete defeat with the loss of 10,000 men.

It is also stated, with every probability of truth, that it is now well known that North Carolina Unionism had broken out on Tuesday in open revolt, and that six North Carolina regiments in that brigade were surrounded with Mississippi and Alabama troops in superior numbers, who disarmed and placed them in confinement.

Washington, June 12. The reports of Vicksburg papers state that Dacotah, Miss., has been destroyed by our fleet, and adds that but three little buildings mark the spot which once gloried in the title of a city.

The same report adds that the Federal gunboats shelled the town of Grand Gulf on Monday, and then transports landed troops who pillaged and sacked the town of everything they could lay their hands on.

New York, June 13. The Tribune's Washington dispatch says Representative Maynard of Tennessee has received a dispatch from Governor Andy Johnson to-night, to the effect that the rebels are reported to be retreating from Cumberland Gap towards Chattanooga. If so, East Tennessee is at last freed and Gen. Morgan can immediately take possession.

A Memphis paper has extracts from the Houston (Texas) Telegraph of May 23, which says that Commander Eagle of the United States frigate Santee had, on the 17th, demanded the surrender of Galveston, in order to save the loss of life that would follow a bombardment. The demand was not complied with; Gen. Herbert, the rebel chief, saying when the Union land and naval forces appeared, a reply would be made. On the 22d a war vessel arrived, and under apprehensions of an attack, the foreign Consuls had taken steps for the protection of their subjects.

Washington, June 14. Dispatches received at the War Department, state that a demonstration was made yesterday evening by a force of rebel cavalry and artillery on the right flank of Gen. McClellan's army at Tunstall's Station, apparently with the intention of interrupting his railroad communication.

The attempt was met by a force of Infantry and the enemy retreated. No damage was done to the railroad.

The movements of the enemy have been extensive, and as yet are involved in mystery. Large bodies of men have been seen moving down from the neighborhood of Mechanicsville Bridge and Richmond towards the late battlefield.

New York, June 15. It is stated that at the Port Republic fight the enemy's loss was very heavy. Four hundred of their dead, by actual count, were found unburied in one field. From the number of the dead found scattered in other parts of the battle ground, it is believed that there are 200 more of their dead on the field, making their loss in killed 600 besides officers whose bodies were carried away.

New York, June 16. A correspondent of the Philadelphia Press, on board the steamer Brooklyn, off Baton Rouge, May 30, writes Fort Morgan has surrendered, leaving Mobile unprotected. Also that Brig. Gen. Williams encountered a large body of rebels outside of the city, and a terrific engagement was transpiring. Result unknown. Gen. Butler is sending more men up in the Constitution and Mississippi. There were several crevasses in the banks of the Mississippi river, and in some places whole towns and plantations had been immersed.

June 19. A letter from Gen. McClellan to a friend in Philadelphia, states that the loss of the rebels at Fair Oaks was ten thousand, and that seven thousand are now in the houses and hospitals at Richmond.

News from Mexico of the 1st inst., confirms the defeat of the French troops by the Mexicans.

The Mexicans are actively fortifying the capital, and the French will march against it when reinforcements arrive.

A rumor is current in Havana that the French designs are not so much against Mexico as against the United States.

BLUNDERS OF THE SOUTH.

The Religious Herald, a Baptist paper, published at Richmond, Va., in a calm and deliberate survey of our Southern rebellion, says that the responsible parties in its management have made at least eight great blunders, and thus enumerates them:

1. In firing upon Fort Sumpter.
2. In believing there would be a divided North and an apatoetic Federal Government.
3. In believing that they would have the hearty sympathies of Europe.
4. In believing that the bonds of their confederacy would readily be taken in Europe.
5. In believing that the military power of the North would be directed in a crusade against slavery, rather than employed for the overthrow of treason and the establishment of the Union and the constitution.
6. In believing that Northern courage and physique were no match for Southern, or that in battle one Southerner equalled five Yankees.
7. In believing that the flag of the cotton oligarchy would wave above the Capitol at Washington, and the roll of slaves be called on Bunker Hill.
8. In believing that the fancied omnipotence of cotton would dominate the commerce of the world.

☞ The drouth in Canada East is so severe that the pastures are drying up and the farmers are talking of shooting their cattle rather than see them starve.

Notices, &c.

Information.

To the churches in the vicinity of Plainville, Ct., I would say, having moved to Plainville, I desire to devote my time to the cause of Christ in Plainville and the adjoining towns, as the Lord may seem to direct. I have a standing appointment in Plainville once in four weeks. My next appointment here is July 13th. I hope to hear from the churches in this vicinity soon.

The preaching brethren who wish to visit Plainville to preach, will please confer with Bro. George Morgan, who is corresponding Secretary of the Church. My P. O. address is Plainville, Ct.

Wm. A. Fenn.

Special Notice.

The Grove and Campmeeting advertised to commence at Tremont, Mass., June 24th, is changed to July 1st.

Campmeeting at Wilbraham.

It is thought best that our great annual gathering at Wilbraham commence this year Monday, Aug. 25th, and continue one week. Particulars hereafter.

F. H. Berick, Miles Grant, Geo. T. Adams, } Committee of Arrangements.

Notice.

There will be a public discussion at Week's Mills, Me., commencing Tuesday, June 24th inst., at 10 o'clock, and continuing four days. The question to be discussed is as follows:—Resolved, "That all men are immortal in the sense of an unending being." Eld. E. B. Fletcher, affirmative. Eld. Miles Grant, negative.

Barn Meeting.

There will be a barn meeting at Orange, N. H., commencing Friday, June 27th, in Bro. S. K. Ford's barn, at 2 o'clock, P. M., and holding over the Sabbath. It is desirable that Brn Hook, Ford, and Simpson, be at this meeting to assist in holding up the truth before the people of Orange, before it is too late. Brethren, I hope that you will make this meeting a subject of prayer.

Brethren and sisters in that region, we want your help. Come one, come all.

B. P. Manning, for the brethren.

Notice.

The Lord willing, a two days meeting will be held at Norwalk, O., commencing Saturday, July 5th, and continuing over Lord's day. We extend a cordial invitation to all the brethren in this section to come and worship the Lord with us. Elder John T. Ongley will be with us to minister in the word of life, and we shall be happy to see other preaching brethren here also.

Yours in hope, P. B. Hoyt.

Notice.—R. I. Q. C.

The Rhode Island Quarterly Conference will hold its next session at River Point, R. I., commencing Wednesday, June 25th, at 2 o'clock, P. M. We expect this to be one of the best meetings the conference has ever held, and hope it will be largely attended. Brethren in the ministry, and delegates from churches, let the church in River Point be cheered by your presence and strengthened by your councils.

H. F. Carpenter, Sec.

May 26th, 1862.

Notice.

A special conference of the Iowa, Minn., and Wis. Christian Conference will be held in connection with the grove meeting at Hesper, Almakee Co., Iowa, July 4th, 1862. Hope to see many preachers and delegates, as there is business of importance, in which all are interested.

Wm. Sheldon, Pres.
Peter S. W. Deyo, Clerk.

P. S. We expect to have the New England Mission Tent.

Notice.

The Lord willing, there will be a conference meeting in Buchanan, Mich., to commence on the evening of the 26th of June, and continue over the following Sabbath. We hope to see a general gathering of our scattered friends at this meeting. Let us make this meeting a subject of prayer, that much good be accomplished. Bro. Israel Dammon is expected to be present.

D. R. & M. S. Mansfield.

Grove and Camp Meeting.

Good news to the happy souls who gathered last year at Tremont, Mass., for divine worship in the grove. There will be another grove and campmeeting in the vicinity of the Tremont Depot, West Wareham, Mass., commencing Tuesday evening, July 1st, 1862, and continuing over the following Sunday. Eld. M. Grant, H. L. Hastings, if possible, and others will be present to preach the word. Many things promise to make this an interesting and profitable meeting. First, the blessing of God upon us last year. Those who were there will welcome us again, and bring others with them. Second, its location—easy of access to many churches. It is situated on the Fairhaven and Boston, R. R., at its junction with the Cape Cod R. R.; fare reduced on this road from Middleboro and New Bedford. We expect a good representation from New Bedford, Mattapoisett, Plymouth, Carver, Middleboro, Taunton, and perhaps from Boston. Third, its accommodations; a beautiful grove, in the midst of an orderly people; good board provided cheaper than by ourselves; lodging in private dwellings near by, or in tents, as chosen. Fourth, the cheering evidences that we are nearing our eternal home, cannot fail to awaken an unusual interest in every believing heart. Come then, one and all, prepare for a good meeting; pray much about it; come to labor for precious souls; come full of the blessing of Christ; come early; come to stay through the meeting; come, and may many kind friends in Tremont bless the day of our coming.

In behalf of many brethren,
H. F. Carpenter.

SUGGESTED AFTER WITNESSING A BAPTIST COMMUNION SERVICE WITH BRO. ———.

God reigns, and glad I am!
Let all exclaim Amen!
My heart with thine together joins
In praises to his name.

A marriage feast prepared,
A table of the Lord,
Where you and I will one day meet,
And none shall be debarred;

Save those who will not have
The Lord to reign o'er them—
'Tis they alone will be deprived
The supper of the Lamb.

O, how my heart expands
In thought of that great day,
When bolts and bars and creeds of men
Forever'll pass away.

God knows his little ones—
He knows whate'er they need;
Though man exclude from tables set,
God will his chosen feed.

A Glance at our World.—No. 5.

Who can without horror consider the whole earth as the empire of destruction? It abounds in wonders, also in victims. It is a vast field of carnage and contagion. Every species is without pity pursued and torn to pieces through the earth, air, and water. In man there is more wretchedness than in all other animals put together. He smarts continually under two scourges which other animals never feel—anxiety and listlessness, which make him weary of himself. He loves life, and yet he knows he must die. If he enjoys some transient good—for which he is thankful to Heaven—he suffers various evils, and is at last devoured by worms. This knowledge is his fatal prerogative. Other animals have it not. He feels it every moment rankling and corroding in his breast,—yet spends the transient days of his existence in diffusing the suffering he feels; in cutting the throats of his fellow creatures for pay; in cheating and being cheated; in robbing and being robbed; in serving, that he may command; and in repenting of all that he does. The bulk of mankind are nothing more than a crowd of wretches equally criminal and unfortunate, and the globe contains rather carcasses than men. I shudder upon a retrospective glance at this picture, to find that it implies a complaint against providence.

I am not surprised at the complaints of those who possess no godliness,—who live as though this was their abiding place; but the follower of Christ expects trials and troubles as he journeys along through this wilderness world. In the course of a single day in our large cities, as we pass along its streets, we meet large numbers of gaily attired men and women, all hurrying along as though they enjoyed an exuberance of health and life; but let us canvass these noble mansions, and what shall we find? Nearly every second house contains an invalid. And so we are subjected to pine away with old age, or be wasted with consumption, burned with fevers, scalded with humors, eaten with cancers, putrified with mortifications, suffocated by asthmas, strangled with diptheria, poisoned by the cup of excesses, stabbed with the knife of luxury, or racked to death by disorders as loathsome and accidents as various as our sins. Sloth, gluttony, drunkenness and uncleanness, cheating, defrauding, stealing and oppression, lying, perjury, treachery and cruelty, stalk openly or lurk secretly everywhere. Are not all these vices predominant among whites and blacks, among civilized nations, among Turks and Jews, heathens and Christians, whether they live on the banks of the Ganges or the Thames, the Mississippi or the Seine; whether they starve in the snows of Lapland, or burn in the sands of Guinea?

No sooner did disobedience open the floodgates than arduous labor came in full tide, and a thousand painful arts were invented to mitigate the manifold curse which sin had brought upon them; but the remedy is not yet; the curse is still burdensome and oppressive, and is wringing excessive sighs and sweat. Unite the former, and a tempest might ensue. Collect the latter, and it would swell into rivers. Turn your eyes which way you please, and you will see some flying from others' groaning, the rod of God and the greatest number busily making a scourge for the backs of their fellow beings.

Shall we pass over the miseries of the brute creation, who in common with the rest of the creation are in the same suffering and subjection—as disease and death, put to hard labor for man; they are shot, snared, flayed, skinned and eaten, the larger preying on the smaller; and a continued warfare going on in the animal creation, and will continue till the consummation.

Can civilization and refinement of nations, with the arts and sciences, remedy the evils of existing society? No. What says all history? Does it not say NO? In proportion as nations go up in the scale of power, civilization, and popularity, they degenerate in morals; they become vain, proud and luxurious, by which diseases are multiplied and aggravated. This is a matter of fact. All ages can witness in the case. Prosperity at the last has never failed to be a calamity. Can enterprise and genius furnish the remedy? What do they for the world? They plant railroads, drive steamboats, dig canals, build navies, man ships, drive commerce, endow and empower monopolies, build factories, and make machines of war. Is it in the nature of these to reform the wicked, chase disease from the earth, restore the crippled, open the prison to them that are bound, bind the devil, and raise the dead? Plainly not. Can a demand for duelling pistols, bowie knives, dirks, etc., promise a reform in society? Never!

Maine State Mission.

March 20th, I attended our Quarterly Conference at West Poland. The weather had been stormy and the roads were blocked much by snow, so that we had not a large gathering. Yet a few faithful ones from regions remote and near came together in the warm and devoted spirit of love and labor. Yarmouth sent up quite a delegation of brethren and sisters in Christ who were ready for the work. The ministering brethren present were Elders York, Wellcome, Howard, Libby, True Jordan, and myself. One soul, we trust, was converted to God during our conference, and others became serious; two or more have since been hopefully changed, while christians were interested and awakened during our meeting. The brethren and sisters in Poland were as hospitable and kind as ever to entertain the pilgrims.

The 27th I commenced a few meetings in Biddeford, which being held in a private house did not result in much external good to the community. Prof. Gleason was in the city lecturing upon Physiology, etc., attracting the multitudes, so that a public meeting like ours was thought to be inexpedient, and besides there was no appropriate hall to be obtained at the time. The brethren and sisters were comforted and strengthened by our meetings, and encouraged to hope that the time would come for a more public effort. On the evening of the 28th I preached at Old Orchard to an attentive audience gathered in a storm. The interest was such that I gave encouragement to visit the place again. At this place I called on Bro. Prescott, formerly of Portland, and made a happy acquaintance with him and his family, and especially with his blind son, whom I found to be a christian and a good singer. After he had sung to me some beautiful hymns—"In the bosom of Jesus," etc., by his request I sung and he learned Bro. Libby's hymn—with which he was greatly pleased, and which he sung with so much feeling and spirit as to draw tears from our eyes and those of his parents. Apr. 1st I preached in the neighborhood of Bro. Towne's, near to Biddeford. Though the roads were in a bad condition, we had a good number present to hear the word, who listened with great interest. I remained two evenings. It will be remembered that Bro. Towne and family were greatly afflicted by the sudden and sad death of their daughter in the Lawrence catastrophe a few years since. Though they still sorrow, yet it is with the consolations of hope in the resurrection of the dead.

"Down from the bending willows,"

From the 3d to 6th April I was in Kennebunkport. I found the church discouraged, and Bro. Mitchell overburdened with necessary cares arising from the increased affliction and sickness of his father, and recent additional attack of mortification of one of the limbs of his long afflicted mother. I sympathized with this afflicted family, and was pleased to see the quiet and patience manifested in the furnace. I tried to encourage the church and preach the word for the benefit of the congregations. I had a pleasant time among the devoted church, and hope my labor was not in vain. Some were inquiring whom I hope ere this have found peace in Christ. The evening of 10th April I preached at Goodwin's Mills. My subject was upon the condition of the nations. Some understood and some understood not the force of the words I spoke, and some thought me a secessionist, or wished to so consider me.

From 11th to 18th I labored in Hollis. A good interest was created, Satan was stirred, sinners convicted, and christians revived; and had not necessity urged my leaving, and the roads been so bad, we should have continued our effort. But we could not tarry. The 15th, passing through Bro. Towne's neighborhood, I was besought to stay by citizens of the school district beyond, and preach to them the word of the kingdom. I tarried the 16th and 17th, and was heard with considerable interest, some desiring my return to occupy the Methodist chapel some Sabbath in the future, which I hope to do soon. Learning my wife to be ill, I returned home and tarried over Sunday the 20th in Yarmouth. As the Orthodox clergyman of the First Congregational society had been preaching several discourses against our views, and anticipating that he would preach again on the subjects connected with our faith, I attended his morning service. I was not disappointed, and taking notes of his sermon, the next day, at mid-day, I posted on the church door the following notice:—

The discourse of yesterday morning, the 20th inst., preached in the First Congregational church by Rev. Mr. Putnam, will be reviewed and replied to in Institute Hall, on Tuesday evening, the 22d inst.

O. R. FASSETT.

A good audience convened amid a rain storm to hear the review of this discourse; and by request it was repeated on the Friday evening following in the same place. Yarmouth was stirred by this circumstance, and I hope some will yet see light. The afternoon of the above Sabbath I preached to the Advent church in Yarmouth, and also in the evening upon prophecy to a good audience.

Sunday, the 27th, I was called to preach the funeral sermon of Capt. Joseph Kinsman on Cape Elizabeth. A large assembly of people of all classes and denominations, with some clergymen, Friends, and seamen and their masters were present. Services were held in the Congregational Church at 2 1-2 P. M., and were solemn and impressive. In the evening of this day I addressed a good audience in the Cape school-house. So far as I can judge, there is a good field for labor on the Cape, and I would that I could devote more time there. On Monday, the 28th, I returned home, and learned that Rev. Mr. Putnam, with inflamed zeal, had preached against our views all day on Sabbath, misstating some of them and misinterpreting our character and motives. Why will not these men acquaint themselves with our views, so as to deal intelligent and fair arguments against us if they must dissent?

May 3d and 4th I again visited Old Orchard, where I had a good and blessed season with citizens and friends in preaching the word and visiting. Had an invitation to return at some future day among this people; also to go to regions beyond. May 11th preached in Portland. Found the church in a distracted condition. I hope the day will yet come for better times in that city for our cause. May 16th to 18th labored in Casco, but found the interest in divine things very low. Some heard with profit. From the 19th to 22d had to journey to Vienna and back to North Raymond to return a borrowed wagon left at Vienna last winter. I tarried at North Raymond from the 23d to the 25th, preaching the word and visiting among the people. On the Sabbath I baptized three happy souls in a delightful pond near to Gray, each coming out of the water rejoicing in the Lord and the hope of the resurrection of the dead. At 5 o'clock the same day I baptized two others at West Poland, eight miles beyond. A large assembly of people were gathered to witness this christian and solemn ordinance. This was a day of joyful labor, and the Lord greatly blessed me, and gave his Spirit to revive the hearts of these several candidates, who went on their way rejoicing.

May 29th to June 1st attended our quarterly conference at Cumberland. This meeting will be noticed by another. But I would state that it was one of good interest. The citizens generally in the region came out to listen to the preaching of the word, and showed us no little kindness in hospitably entertaining us. There were some deeply convicted of the things we preached, and I hope ere long that they may submit and be converted to God. There was some hostility shown toward us by a few professors of religion, who are destitute of the grace of God, and who know not what christian courtesy and love is. The Lord forgive them, and shed light and truth into their dark souls, before the day of darkness overtake them.

June 2d I was under the necessity of visiting Boston, Mass., to see my companion in life, whom I learned by a letter from Bro. Himes was dangerously ill. She has been quite feeble in health for some weeks, and had gone on to Boston by invitation of friends, in the hope that the travel and change would revive her wasted energies. But alas! how uncertain is life! how frail our natures! May the Lord, the Great Physician, raise her up to labor in his vineyard, and make her still useful in his cause.

At the close of this quarter I have, as usual, to record the goodness of the Lord in preserving me in health and life, and in giving me a measure of success in his work. And the resolution is still formed to sacrifice and labor in his cause to the end.

O. R. FASSETT.

Answer to the Numerical Prediction.

ELD. GRANT:—Seeing in your paper of June 4th a "numerical prediction," requiring a solution, I take this liberty of answering B. W. J.

Taking the French alphabet, and applying the numerals, as in modern enigmas, we have,—Louis Napoléon Buonaparte, Representant Du Peuple De Dix Departements, Sera President De Republique Francaise, Indivisible Democratique Par Le Suffrage Universel vers Le Dix Neuvieme Siecle, which, being translated, merely means this,—Louis Napoleon Bonaparte, representing the people of ten departments, you shall be president of the French Republic, Indivisibly Democratic, by universal suffrage towards the nineteenth century.

Yours truly, L. F. COLE.
Windham, Me., June 9th, '62.

SING AS YOU GO.—"How shall I be useful?" asked one. "Sing as you go," said his experienced friend. "Let men see you with a genuine smile upon your face, coming up from a happy heart, as you go out and in. That will draw men to your Master."

☞ A financier remains "respectable" with a fortune that don't belong to him; while a beggar becomes a criminal for purloining a loaf of bread to keep himself from starving.

Communion Hymn.

Master, we, the world forsaking,
Gather near thy bleeding side;
And this bread together breaking,
Seek the food that shall abide.

Let the world in festive pleasure
Float along a dangerous sea;
Jesus, thou art all our treasure,
Gladly we remember thee.

Let thy love in us abiding,
Charm us from each worldly tie;
Help us each, in faith confiding,
In the Lord to live or die.

Master, now the cup receiving,
We would covenant with thee,
In thy love through grace believing,
Thine forever we will be. H. L. H.

Selections.

The National Horizon.

Whether the nations will be at peace or war,—that is whether they will be in actual conflict, or whether there will be a suspension of hostilities, in the time immediately preceding Christ's appearing, we may not be able to say; but it is very evident that the national horizon will be full of gloom,—the world will be in commotion, and men generally in a state of fearful suspense and foreboding. We read in the prophecy of Haggai, "Thus saith the Lord of hosts; yet once, it is a little while, and I will shake the heavens, and the earth, and the sea, and the dry land, and I will shake all nations, and the desire of all nations shall come." This cannot refer to our Savior's first advent, for all nations, also the heavens, earth, sea, and dry land, were not then shaken. "The temple of Janus was then closed; there had been a respite from wars for years; and amidst the peace of a world not at peace with God, but enjoying a momentary calm, the Prince of Peace was born." But the above prediction expressly states that God will shake all nations, yea, the heavens and the earth. In turning to the New Testament we learn that its fulfilment is future. The apostle Paul saith, "Whose voice then shook the earth; but now he hath promised, saying, yet once more I shake not the earth only, but also heaven." Heb. 12: 26. Thus an inspired apostle regards the prophecy in question as unfulfilled about sixty years after the birth of our Lord.

The following passage from our Lord's great prophecy concerning his second advent gives us further light:—"There shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth; for the powers of heaven shall be shaken. And then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory." Luke 21: 26–27.

It seems to us that we are very fast coming into the national trouble and fearful looking, thus foretold,—in other words, that we are in the day of preparation for the last grand struggle, when God will drive asunder the nations, and manifest his own peaceful and endless reign. How diligently then should we attend to the stirring admonition found in the same prophecy by our Lord; "And take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting, and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares; for as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the earth. Watch, ye, therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man."—H.—Millennial News.

The Lower Class.

Who are they? The toiling millions, the laboring men and women, the farmer, the mechanic, the artist, the inventor, the producer? Far from it. These are Nature's nobility—God's favorites—the salt of the earth. No matter whether they are high or low in station, rich or poor in pelf, conspicuous or humble in position, they are the "upper circle" in the order of nature, whatever the factious distinction of fashionable society. It is not low, it is the highest duty, privilege, pleasure, for the great men and the whole-souled women to earn what they possess, to work their way through life, to be the architects of their own fortune. Some may remark the classes we have alluded to as only relatively low, and in fact the middle classes. We insist they are absolutely the very highest. Is there a class of beings on earth who may properly be denominated low? If so, it is composed of those who consume without producing, who dissipate the earnings of their fathers and relatives, without laboring for anything themselves.

How to be Miserable.

Think about yourself; about what you want, what you like, what respect people ought to pay you, what people think of you; and then to you nothing will be pure. You will spoil everything you touch; you will make sin and misery for yourself out of everything which God sends you; you will be as wretched as you choose on earth, or in heaven either.

In heaven either, I say. For that proud, greedy, selfish, self-seeking spirit would turn heaven into hell. It did turn heaven into hell, as the great devil himself. It was by pride, by seeking his own glory—so, at least, wise men say—that he fell from heaven to hell. He was not content to give up his own will and do God's will, like the other angels. He was not content to serve God, and rejoice in God's glory. He would be a master himself, and rejoice also in his own glory; and so when he wanted to make a private heaven of his own he found that he had made a hell. When he wanted to be a little god for himself, he lost the life of the true God, to lose which is eternal death. And why? Because his heart was not pure, clean, honest, simple, unselfish. Therefore, he saw God no more, and learned to hate him whose name is love.

YOUTH.—If the Spring put forth no blossoms, in summer there will be no beauty, and in autumn no fruit; so if youth be trifled away without improvement, riper years will be contemptible, and old age miserable.

HOW TO ADMONISH.—We must consult the gentlest manner and softest seasons of address; our advice must not fall like a violent storm, bearing down and making those to droop whom it is meant to cherish and refresh. It must descend as the dew upon the tender herb, or like melting flakes of snow; the softer it falls, the longer it dwells upon and the deeper it sinks into the mind. If there are few who have the humiliation to receive advice as they ought, it is often because there are few who have the discretion to convey it in a proper vehicle and can qualify the harshness and bitterness of reproof, against which corrupt nature is apt to revolt, by an artful mixture of sweetening and agreeable ingredients. To probe the wound to the bottom, with all the boldness and resolution of a good spiritual surgeon, and yet with all the delicacy and tenderness of a friend, requires a very dexterous and masterly hand. An affable deportment and complacency of behavior will disarm the most obstinate; whereas, if, instead of calmly pointing out their mistakes, we break out into unseemly sallies of passion, we cease to have any influence.

DEVIL WORSHIP.—"I now state, and I wish it to be heard in every corner of the christian world, that the devil is regularly, systematically, and ceremoniously worshipped by a large majority of the inhabitants of the island of Ceylon! The demon worship of the Greeks and Romans had good as well as bad demons; but I have never heard of a benevolent being in the worship as practiced in Ceylon. They are all evil, exercising a most wicked and malicious influence over the affairs of men; and on this account, the natives are afraid of them continually.

When the Portuguese had possession of the island, they prohibited devil worship, and made it a capital offence for any one to profess himself a devil-priest. The Dutch also enacted laws against it; but still it exists, and nothing but the gospel of Christ can succeed in eradicating its principles, and destroying its practice."—Rev. B. Clough.

"ENJOYING LIFE."—I must pity that young man who, with a little finery of dress and recklessness of manner, with his coarse passions all daguerreotyped upon his face, goes whooping through the streets, driving an animal much nobler in its conduct than himself, and who swaggers into some haunt of shame, and calls it "enjoying life!" He thinks he is astonishing the world; and he is astonishing the thinking part of it, who are astonished that he is not astonished at himself. For look at that compound of flash and impudence, and say if on this earth there is anything more pitiable! He know anything of the true joy of life? As well say that the beauty and immensity of the universe were all enclosed in the field where the prodigal lay among the husks and swine.

SUBTERRANEAN PRISON.—Some workmen employed in digging a well in Seville, Spain, a short time since, discovered some subterranean masonry, which on investigation, proved to contain numerous cells, in one of which four human bodies, perfectly mummified, were found chained to the walls. One of them was that of a monk; the garments of the others were of the style of the last century. A silken shirt worn by one body was the only garment in tolerable preservation. They are supposed to have been the victims of the inquisition, chained in the cells and starved to death.

TOBACCO.—Just now the civilized nations of the world derive their chief revenue from tobacco. Without it the Pope would be bankrupt in a month. Last year the English government derived $28,000,000 revenue, and the French $36,000,000 from the weed that vanishes in smoke. The greater part of the tobacco which yields to foreign powers their chief revenue is grown in America.

Pledge OF THE TRY COMPANY.

WE, THE UNDERSIGNED, HEREBY PLEDGE OURSELVES TO ABSTAIN FROM TEA, COFFEE, TOBACCO, AND ALL INTOXICATING DRINKS AS A BEVERAGE.

DEAR EDITOR:—

The following I translated from a piece in a German paper, which I read yesterday, and which I thought would be something good for the young as well as the old. It is headed—

To give is more blessed than to receive.

"A young Englishman of eighteen or twenty years, who studied in Lausanne, (a city in Switzerland,) one day took a walk with Professor Durand, who was called the student's friend, in the vicinity of the city. As they went side by side, Durand endeavoring to give the conversation a turn towards some important subjects, they observed a pair of muddy looking shoes standing by the side of the pathway on which they walked, belonging, as it appeared, to a poor man, who was laboring on a piece of ground near by, and almost done with his work for the day. The youth suddenly addressed the Professor in these words:

'We will play that man a trick, hide his shoes and ourselves behind some bushes near by, and watch his embarrassment when he finds out that his shoes are gone.'

'My beloved friend,' replied the Professor, 'we must never play any tricks on a poor man in order to gratify our delight. You are rich, and therefore able to please both yourself and the poor man in a far nobler way. Suppose you put a dollar in each of these shoes, and then let us hide ourselves behind the bushes.'

The student obeyed, and now they placed themselves behind a bush close by, through which however they were able to observe the poor laborer, and at the same time listen to all utterances of amazement and joy that he might make. Soon the man had finished his work, and then walked down towards the place where he had put his shoes. While he put on his jacket, which hung on the fence, he at the same time put one foot in one of his shoes; but in doing this he felt something hard, which, after examining the shoe, to his astonishment turned out to be a large silver dollar. He looked [illegible] over and over again, and again, turning it; looked in vain till at last, after he had [illegible] whether he could [illegible] all directions to see being near, put the [illegible] observe any human pocket. But in trying [illegible] of money into his shoe, he found another [illegible] put on the other. His astonishment was great; [illegible] dollar. His feeling overwhelmed him, and looking [up to] heaven, with eyes full of tears, he fell [on his] knees, uttering the following prayer:

'O Lord, my God! so it is true that thou dost not forsake them that put their trust in thee! Thou didst know that my children have no bread, that my wife is sick in bed, and that I was helpless. Therefore, my dear heavenly Father, hast thou through some benevolent heart sent me this money to help me in this my present situation. O that my soul might appreciate thy goodness and be faithful unto death! But the instrumentality of thy merciful deliverance, O God! be pleased to bless abundantly; yes, even with thy richest blessings!' The youth stood there with many tears in his eyes, and almost speechless with emotion.

'Now,' said Durand, 'are you not more pleased, than you would have been if you had played your trick on that poor man?'

'O! my dear beloved Professor,' replied the youth, 'you have taught me a lesson which I shall never forget. I feel now the truth of those beautiful, but never comprehended words: To give is more blessed than to receive!'"

Never approach the poor in any other way but with the intention to do him some good.

WARNING TO THE YOUNG DRINKER.—Charles Lamb tells his sad experience, as a warning to the young, in the following language:—

"The waters have gone over me. But out of the black depths, could I be heard, I would cry out to all those who have set a foot in the perilous flood. Could the youth, to whom the flavor of the first wine is delicious as the opening scenes of life, or the entering upon some newly discovered paradise, look into my desolation, and be made to understand what a dreary thing it is when he shall feel himself going down a precipice, with eyes open and a passive will, to his destruction, and have no power to stop it, and yet feel it all the way emanating from himself; to see all godliness emptied out of him, and yet not able to forget a time when it was otherwise; to bear about a piteous spectacle of his own ruin; could he see my fevered eye, feverish with the last night's drinking, and feverishly looking for to-night's repetition of the folly; could he but feel the body of the death out of which I cry hourly with feebler outcry to be delivered, it were enough to make him dash the sparkling beverage to the earth, in all the pride of its mantling temptation.

Enos and his Temptation.

Enos Roff was employed by a grocer in his neighborhood to help him in a store. Enos was glad of the chance to do something for himself; for he was fourteen years old, and his father could not afford any longer to keep him at school. So he engaged with Mr. Thorpe, the grocer, at two dollars a week for the first six months, when, if he suited, he was to get three.

Enos was a boy of good principles. His parents were pious, and had taken great pains to teach him to be upright, and his Sunday-school teacher also took a deep interest in him. When he commenced his work in the store he found a good opportunity of practicing what he had been taught at home and in school.

He was often left alone, yet he never thought of taking a single thing that did not belong to him.

But he had yet to learn the great truth that temptation to do wrong does not always come in the manner in which we look for it. Had the thought of actually taking money from his employer's drawer entered Enos' mind, he would have said at once, and indignantly, "No I won't." But temptation came in another way.

One night, after Enos had shut up the store, and while he was on his way home, he thought of the small sum he received for his week's work. Was there not some way by which he might honestly increase it? As he drew near his house a plan occurred to his mind which seemed honest, and which he determined to try. He did not feel entirely satisfied with it, yet he could not see anything wrong in it. The next morning, when he was left alone in the store, he put this plan in practice. The first customer that entered was a woman who wanted a pound of cheese. The price of the cheese was twelve cents; but Enos determined to charge fourteen, and while he put twelve cents in the drawer, to put two in his pocket. And he thought that, by overcharging each customer a cent or two, he could in a little while have some spending money. Poor boy! he did not see the snare that Satan had set for him. So when the woman said, "How much is it?" Enos replied, "Fourteen cents."

"Fourteen cents!" said the woman; "why, I only gave twelve here day before yesterday. It must have risen in price."

"Y-e-e-s, it has," stammered Enos, while he felt his face burning. But something seemed to say to him, "Well, that's no lie. The price has raised. You raised it yourself." But if it was the truth, what made Enos' cheeks color, and what made him think it might be a lie?

The woman paid the money and left the store. Enos held the dime and the four cents she had given him in his hand until she had gone, when he put the dime and two cents in the drawer, and the remaining two cents in his pocket.

But the moment he drew his hand from his pocket and left the money there, he felt wretched enough. He tried to sing, and to whistle, and to read, and to work; but it was of no use. Through all his singing, and whistling, and reading, and working, the voice of conscience was saying to him, "You are a thief. You stole two cents." He tried in various ways to persuade himself that he had not done wrong. But conscience still troubled him, and he found no relief until he returned the two cents to the woman, whom he happened to know.

Enos never tried another experiment like that. He had learned from it to look out for temptations on every side, and to resist them when they came; and he had also learned that one crime leads to another, just as his overcharging led him to tell a lie.

Your Evenings, Boys.

Great boys and little boys, here is a question which concerns you all. How do you spend your evenings? If your parents or guardians allow you to go from home in the evenings where do you go, and how is this time spent by you? Read this little account and think of the lessons it teaches:

Joseph Clark was a fine-looking and healthy lad as ever left the country to go into a city store. His cheek was red with health, his arm strong, and his step quick. His master liked his looks and said that boy will make something. He had been a clerk about six months, when Mr. Abbott observed a change in Joseph. His cheek grew pale, his eyes hollow, and he always seemed sleepy. Mr. Abbott said nothing for a while. At length finding Joseph alone in the counting-room, he asked him if he was well.

"Pretty well, sir," answered Joseph.

"You look sick, of late," said Mr. A.

"Have the headache sometimes," the young man said.

"What gives you the headache?" asked the merchant.

"I do not know as I know, sir."

Do you go to bed is season?"

Joseph blushed. "As early as most of the boarders," he said.

"How do you spend your evenings, Joseph?"

"Oh, sir, not as my pious mother would approve," answered the young man,—tears starting to his eyes.

"Joseph," said the merchant, "your character, and all your future usefulness and prosperity depend upon the way you spend your evenings. Take my word for it, it is a young man's evenings that make or break him."

Faded Joys.

BY S. S. BREWER.

The friends that I loved in my childhood
Have slumbered for years in their graves;
Ah! this world looks as drear as wildwood
When stript of its beautiful leaves.
O! the home of my youth I remember,
And scenes ever dear unto me;
Those kind ones that loved me so tender
I may never, no, never more see.

How dark looks this world and how dreary,
When bereft of the ones that we love;
But there's hope for the faint and the weary
Imparted to faith from above.
The humble oft sigh in deep anguish,
While wandering 'mid sorrow and gloom,
And oft in my trials I languish,
And long for the saints' happy home.

Bright prospects may bloom of the morrow,
As I weep for the friends I have known;
But my heart often throbs with deep sorrow,
When I think of the ones that are gone.
'Tis no wonder that I am sad-hearted,
Deep stricken with sorrow should be,
For we met, we have loved, we have parted—
My friends, my companions, and me.

The dark night of death is near ending,
Soon the morning of triumph will dawn,
When the Savior, in glory descending,
Death's sceptre and power to dethrone.
In the kingdom of God then forever
The King in his beauty I'll see,
And parting and sorrow come never
To the holy, the happy, the free.

Experience of a Baptist Minister.

The following experience of Bro. A. F. Pawley, of Oceanport, N. J., who has recently seen the light on the life and death question, will be read with interest. It was addressed to one of his brethren. We hope our brother will have courage to "stand up for Jesus" and his word.—G.

DEAR BRO. P——:—It has long been my desire to see you, or have communication with you. I have waited in expectation, hoping you would fulfill your engagement to visit me, which, from the long delay, I have no longer any expectation. Perhaps you have reasons which you consider justifiable. I take it for granted you have (by the unruly member of communication) been duly informed of my falling away from "the faith" of the Baptist Church—a report of which you can better judge after you have read me on this matter.

And first, I will say, I have no complaint to offer against my brethren, concerning their conduct toward me, in casting me out as unworthy of regard; for I know that, in all my trials, it is "for the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers, that I am called in question; and I thank God in all this, I have rejoiced in tribulation, knowing that for "Jesus' sake" I bear the reproach of the gospel. With all I have fallen from, I say "Let God be true," if I am found "a liar." I have not forgotten that Noah was as one that mocked to the old world; that Lot was the same; that Joseph was hated and sold; that Jesus "came unto his own, and his own received him not." In short, all who have cried "reform," have been branded with fanaticism, both by the world and bigoted churches. Nor can I (be it egotism or fanaticism) but hope that, as in these cases, victory hath crowned truth, so I, in the coming of Jesus, may be found a faithful servant giving meat in due season.

I need not call your attention to the zeal I manifested, when I made known to my brethren that I felt it duty to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ. It was manifest that I felt it my duty, and I sought the privilege at the consent of my brethren; but of God how I should preach, and what I should preach; nor did I at that time (or now) think they were judges in this matter. Inasmuch as I was (and now am) responsible to Him, I looked unto him for wisdom to direct. I did not expect to please men, if I gave them the truth they needed; nor did I expect to please the church, or that part of it that takes a communion service to distinguish it from the world. This defect, with a man pleaser, with a bodily presence weak, and a contemptibility of speech in my setting out, I did not expect much credit as a preacher of truth. Yet with these forebodings, I left my brother in Piscataway, with the words on my lips and the vow in my heart, to "stand up for Jesus," let it lead me where it may, if indeed it lead me further into disrepute than it did the one* whose dying words I used. In this respect, I have not "fallen," nor been much disappointed; still, there is the "necessity laid upon me," and He who hath given me grace hitherto, I can trust for future good; for it has been my experience to learn that the honor conferred by man is of little worth.

Among the reminiscences of the past, I fondly cherish your good will and kind advice. I remember, I sought of you the most useful books to study; you replied, "I would not need many, the Bible was my best study,"—a hint well-timed, which I have since tried to improve with a zeal that has led me (through the grace of God) to my present position, and to believe it is the only book that can make me wise unto salvation; and I will here add, had I, and you, and our professing brethren made this our sure guide from the first, when we set out to serve God, there would not be a sad necessity of stating there are full five hundred sects, who have a Christ in their creed, nor a majority of church members who, while they profess to be dead to the world, evince by the examples they set, are alive to nothing else,—a name to live and are dead.

And now what can better tell the sad story of this departure but the echo of that word, "Ye have departed from following me, saith the Lord." And cannot a professing church deteriorate? Where then did the church of Judah and Israel go? Where did the churches in Asia, who turned away from Paul, go? Look at the seven Apocalyptical churches. Are there not marks of five at least in a state bordering on apostasy? And if those churches were (as some affirm) typical of dispensations to come, expressing the mood of the church, I ask, is not Laodicea's antitype developing to the vomit? And amidst all the pomp and power of a church who give words to their preachers, saying, "Speak unto us smooth things, prophesy deceits"—please for your good name, offend at your peril,—is it not time, I ask, to fear Ichabod is the handwriting on the walls? But you may say, What right have you to judge thus? If I judged, I might be to blame; but it is not I,—the word, the rule by which the church should live, is the judge. The words of Paul judge. The examples of those who departed from following the commands of God are our judges. If we now do the like things, as on them, so on us, must come retribution. We ought to tremble when the word of God says, that without holiness no man shall see the Lord. And unless this is seen and felt (where now, alas! is seen pride, pomp, envy, strife, bigotry and power), there must be a departure from following the commands of God and obeying the gospel of Jesus Christ; and if so, where then is the hope of seeing the Lord? The gospel requires the inflexible law of obedience to Jesus Christ. What must I do to be saved? was the primitive cry (not, what can I escape doing?). The church ought at least to know. We must away with every weight, and each besetting sin. We have a race to run, a cross to bear, and the crown of life to win. As Baptists we have been baptized into Christ, and by so doing have outwardly put on Christ. Then why is not the Baptist church more like Christ? He for the joy set before him endured the cross, despising the shame. Did he do this that we might live in sin, and that the grace of God might abound? God forbid. We are taught to strive against sin, and overcome through much tribulation. Yet it is evident the ease and worldly conformity of the church is such, that to strip her of her "form of godliness" would show her nakedness and shame.

I have no other apology for writing thus than the development of evils in our age, the like of which led Jeremiah to weep over a departing church, and Jesus himself to weep over the beloved city, because she heeded not the things that made for her peace, and the caution of Paul to Timothy. See 2 Tim. 3. Can it be considered unkind or unjust to state facts, when a professing church acknowledges godliness, and yet every one who says reform is to them an intruder? Look at her cold-heartedness when she professes love to the brethren! yet they sue and distress one another. * * * Look at her conformity to the world when she professes to be "not of the world," * * * yet are their houses opened for fairs, for concerts, and in all (honest) ways make merchandise of God's word, house, and people. Look at her sectarianism, when she professes one church, and union in one Head! Can it be that the heaven of our churches is to be the scene of reconciliation, when on earth they strove for the masteries under the cloak of "opposition is the life of trade"? Here is to be the place of reconciliation; here are we to know we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren. And whilst this is not done by the church, is there not need of some one's asking, "Are ye not carnal and walk as men?" Has Paul said there is one body, one spirit, one hope, one Lord, one faith, one baptism and one God? Why then this division, if the church is not carnal and full of sin? Alas! Bro. P., patch up by revivals, by public manifestations of benevolent enterprise, by expensive buildings dedicated (as it is said) to the worship of God, or in what they please, the church still has a disease preying on her vitals—like the fatal consumption in a beautiful woman—often patched up and encouraged with false hope, but no cure effected, and why? There is balm, but it is too bitter. "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart."

You have, dear Bro., in the past said the church had many a Simon Magus, but you may now say, "I am uncharitable" and condemn the good with the bad. No; I hope there are many who fear God and sigh over this state of things, but they are not considered the pillars of the church, they do not rule, nor do they dare cry "reform," or they would undergo the process of excommunication. And if this is true, it indicates a state of things in this age not better than the Jewish church when Jesus cried, "O ye scribes, pharisees, hypocrites!" and when he said to his disciples; they shall put you out of the synagogue,—nor the Papacy in the days of Martin Luther. But is there no voice in the church for the old paths? Yes. But who will heed the cry, is a question. It will not be the rich, the proud, nor the traditionary wise, if the past is a fair rule by which we may judge of the present; and if a fair rule, we may solemnly ask, is there any hope? and if so, in what direction? Shall we begin at home and ask our Baptist church, "Watchman, what of the night?" Hark to the answer! behold "the morning cometh, and also the night." "Repent ye, therefore, and be converted; that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord; and he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you; whom the heaven must receive, until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets." Is she as a wise and faithful servant giving meat in due season? or does her conduct show she thinks herself rich and increased in goods and hath need of nothing? Who is now receiving the chaplet of glory as the church that hath passed resolutions of war and the Union? The Baptist church. She whose praise is in all the armies, North and South,—she whose Master said, "My kingdom is not of this world (age);.. then would my servants fight." She whose armor is the whole armor of God, whose weapons are not carnal, who is professedly dead to the world and alive to Christ alone; who hath the vows of baptism on her head, pretentions to the Bible for a creed, to the world for an enemy, and to eternal life for a reward. What right then hath she to strive in the armies of war? True, it may be that justice calls for retribution in our country, but the church ought to be praying, not fighting. Praying—God save us from "the wicked which is thy sword: from men which are thy hand, oh Lord; . . . which have their portion in this life"—not fighting. Has she forgotten that "he that killeth with the sword must be killed with the sword. (?) Here is the patience and the faith of the saints." Does treason cry for vengeance? Yea! but what hath the church to do with vengeance? Her Lord hath said, "Vengeance is mine." This is not the kingdom of the saints. This is still the strivings of the potsherds of earth. The church should still be on her pilgrimage march toward the kingdom of God. It is at hand.

Then it is not to the Baptists (as a church) I can longer hope in as the true fold for the "little flock." And if not there, I despair of finding it in any direction among all the fair daughters of the great whore of Babylon. Hence I pray, "Thy kingdom come." My hope now is that in a "little while" "He that shall come, will come, and will not tarry." I wish to stand on the watch tower of this faith, and, like Habakkuk, watch to see what "He will say unto me, and what I shall answer when I am reproved"; for the vision hath been made plain, and he may run that readeth it. It hath tarried long, but it is the time of the end, and it now speaketh "The just shall live by faith." When the Son of man comes, will "he find faith on the earth?" is his own question,—the faith which is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen as yet. I wish to have and live by such a faith,—faith in those promises made to Abraham concerning his everlasting possessions through the promised seed, possessions he died without having received, but believing in God, knowing that He was faithful who had promised. See Gal. 3; Heb. 11.

A Prayer.

O Father! speak.
When clouds begloom the skies,
When sweeping tempests rise,
When chilling breezes blow,
When sorrow's waves o'erflow—
O Father! speak.

O! pity me.
When pains pervade my frame,
When halt, or blind, or lame,
When breath is short and faint,
When, grieved, I make complaint,
O! pity me.

Remember me.
When chosen friends forsake,
When death the loved doth take,
When foes my path assail,
Let not Thy friendship fail,—
Remember me.

Baptism and Remission of Sin.

NUMBER ONE.

Before giving the Bible on this subject, I will briefly state some of the evils growing out of what I consider wrong views of the design and effect of baptism.

1. One serious consequence of making too much of this ordinance, is the anger of some, or many, taking up with a false hope, by relying on an external act or work of their own, and not seeking to know what real repentance and heart conversion are. All own that some are self-deceived, as their works show; and is not this one of the causes of deception? Paul saw there was danger in this matter, and said, "Examine yourselves whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves." 2 Cor. 13: 5. He did not mean they should learn whether they had been baptized or not, nor if baptized in a proper way.

2. A denomination holding a doctrine which excludes from eternal life more than half of Protestant professing christians for ages past, living as godly as any other sect or people, must be looked upon with suspicion, if not with abhorrence, and lose influence—ears be shut against them, whatever other important truths they may hold. A doctrine involving such consequences needs strong proof.

3. We have writers among us advocating the old exploded, abhorred, and God-dishonoring doctrine of "infant damnation," (destruction) and founding their views chiefly or wholly on the fact that they cannot be or are not immersed. We need not a prophet to assure us that a people, or sect, or preacher, openly avowing this view of God's government, will soon become a reproach in community, and their usefulness die out. Jer. 31: 16 says, "They shall come again from the land of the enemy." Rom. 5: 13 says, "Sin is not imputed where there is no law;" and 4: 15. "Where no law is there is no transgression." Infants have no law; and John 5: 28, 29 tells us all shall come from "the graves." If innocent, (sin not being imputed), will "the Judge of all the earth do right" in destroying countless millions, more than one third of our race, after having them and their parents suffer untold miseries by their being born? Surely a doctrine or theory involving such consequences, when legitimately carried out, needs strong Bible proof.. So much to show the importance of this subject. Much more could be said.

I am a Baptist, and urge all who give suitable evidence of conversion, or real penitence, and love to God and his people, to be immersed; so none can say I ignore or lightly esteem one of Christ's ordinances—an important one too, as designed to keep in remembrance Christ's burial and resurrection; and also to avow publicly our faith and attachment to God and his cause; or, in other words, to give evidence to men, not to God, that our hearts are right. Acts 8: 21. The Bible plainly demands such an avowal, and the converted who neglect it long, will be chastised in some way. My views of the consequences of neglect may be seen in 1 Cor. 11: 30–32, and 3: 12–15. In proof of my views I remark:

I. The New Testament teaches remission of sins and justification before and without baptism. "And he said unto her, "Thy sins are forgiven; . . thy faith hath saved thee; go in peace."—Luke 7: 48-50. "Son, be of good cheer; thy sins be forgiven thee." Matt. 9: 2. Mark 2: 5 is the same. None will say these persons had been baptized; and it would be bold work to say the thief on the cross was not saved without baptism. The statement about the Publican and Pharisee was made by Christ to exhibit or illustrate God's plan of forgiveness; and here confession and prayer procures justification, and of course forgiveness. See also the case of Zaccheus, Luke 19: 8, 9. To avoid these proofs, we are told by some that the gospel dispensation did not begin till Pentecost, and then God's plan of salvation was changed. I ask, in the first place, if God ever had more than one way of real forgiveness and justification of actual transgressors? See Isa. 55: 7.—"Let the wicked forsake his way," etc. Next I ask, where is the Bible proof as to the gospel not beginning till Pentecost? Mark 1: 1–4 says the beginning of the gospel was John preaching the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins. Luke 16: 16 says, "The law and the prophets were until John: since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it." Alas! for a theory that ignores plain Bible, and has to rely on uncertain inferences. Did not Christ teach the plan of salvation? Did not the two dispensations interlap? But the case of Cornelius, in Acts 10, is our guide, as we are Gentiles; and I ask if he did not receive both the spirit and remission of sins before baptism? Here too we have a clear example of what kind of Gentiles should be baptized—those who show in some way they have the Spirit. The example of inspired apostles is equivalent to a command, if nowhere contradicted in Scripture; and surely this example is not opposed. Simon Magus deceived Philip by a mere head confession and belief, as many now deceive churches and themselves. Here too we have the proof that immersion does not procure remission, nor "putting away the filth of the flesh," (1 Pet. 3: 21,) while faith and repentance do, as seen above and elsewhere. Simon Magus was yet "in the gall of bitterness and in the bond of iniquity." Acts 8: 23. Thus we have plain Scripture that there is remission of sins without and before baptism; and I find none plainly in opposition, as I shall endeavor to show hereafter. And besides, can the Bible contradict itself?

II. I have looked up eighty texts where forgiveness, justification and salvation, are directly attributed to the following terms: repentance, faith, belief, confession of the mouth, and prayer. I think only four or five texts are claimed as connecting baptism with these terms in order to salvation; and these I must leave for another article. About the procuring cause of remission and salvation there is a general agreement among christians. The blood of Christ was "shed for many for the remission of sins." Matt. 26: 28. "Christ died for our sins," etc. The question before us is, what are we required to do to have forgiveness come to us individually?

I cannot and need not quote all those texts I have named, and will only give a sample of them. Peter preached five sermons in which he tells of forgiveness and way of salvation. His second is in Acts 3: 19.—"Repent ye therefore, and be converted (properly turn), that your sins may be blotted out." Verse 26 tells what Peter meant by "turning." God "sent him (Jesus) to bless you, in turning away every one of you from his iniquities." The plain import of the direction is, "repent, and turn from your iniquities, that your sins may be blotted out." See the same direction in Acts 26: 20. His third sermon was to the Council, Acts 5: 31,—"Him hath God exalted with his right hand to be a Prince and a Savior, for to give repentance to Israel, and forgiveness of sins." His fourth sermon to Cornelius is noticed above. His fifth is in Acts 15: 9,—"And put no difference between us and them, (Gentiles) purifying their hearts by faith." In Acts 11: 18, the apostles together said, "Then hath God also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life." Thus we find that in four cases out of five Peter presents repentance, faith, and turning from sin, as the means of obtaining forgiveness and life eternal, and does not intimate that baptism is also necessary. Mark—each of his five sermons were to new hearers, who were ignorant as to the new dispensation. Did he forget, or shun to declare "all the counsel of God," on a vital point of doctrine? Taking these four sermons of Peter, and more than eighty passages like them, or still more plain, does it not appear plain that his first sermon, Acts 2: 38, has been wrongly interpreted by some brethren, who make it the main pillar of their theory? Ought they not to suspect their explanation and re-examine it? Eight months ago I published in two of our papers conclusive evidence that Mark 16: 16 was an interpolation, and I am grieved to see many brethren who read those papers, still quoting it in proof of their views on baptism. Some brethren yet hold the popular view of the Trinity; and would we not reprove them if they should quote 1 John 5: 7 to prove their doctrine?

I will endeavor in another article to show how Peter's first sermon can be harmonized with his others, and with the tenor of the Bible. J. BLAIN.

Balm.

Those precious words of Jesus—"Be of good cheer!" come like a ray of sunlight to our hearts through the darkness of earth. We are ready to heed the admonition so full of loving-kindness; and, though sorrows do abound, the christian knows where to go for comfort. Perhaps a weary hour has come. Many cares have served to distract his mind. The world seems hollow. He sees multitudes rushing madly on, seeking that which is perishable, glorying in what is not true glory. In his perplexed, despairing musings, he is almost tempted to think that effort is in vain, and to say, "Who will show us any good?" But he opens his Bible, and it may be that his eye meets some of Paul's words, so full of mighty faith, earnest anticipations, untiring zeal and true courage, that his own spirit grows strong to endure and to toil. Or, perhaps, he opens to Isaiah's glowing prophecy concerning the mission of Jesus. His attention is fixed, for he reads, "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me; because the Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; he hath sent me to bind up the broken-hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound." And, as though the great, joyful tidings were new to him, he turns to where the glorious fulfillment is recorded. O, how weariness vanishes as the story is unfolded,—the lowly birth, the angel's songs, the shepherd's joy and wonder. He forgets that good old Simeon and Anna have been in their graves a long, long time, waiting for redemption, and sees them in the temple, their countenances beaming with holy joy and love; and hears the strange words of praise and rejoicing which they utter. His imagination helps the brief record to picture his childhood—beautiful in love and obedience,—and then he follows the Man of Sorrows in his journeyings, sees him weep with the afflicted, and listen to stories of grief, giving the oil of joy for mourning, causing gladness to spring up where before was desolation, caring not for himself, but giving sympathy and encouragement to others; saying in gracious, pitying tones to the penitent, "Thy sins be forgiven thee,—go in peace,"—sincerely and soothingly making them feel that their guilt was to be remembered no more. 'Tis all the same—his whole life, full of blessing, and patience, and magnanimity, crowned with the mighty act of yielding to the power of the grave.

As that life of love passes before the christian, he is nerved with new strength and vigor. He remembers that Jesus has gone from earth, and the glorious work, which was his meat and drink, is to be done through the instrumentality of his followers; and he resolves to do his part toward showing men lost and ruined, the plan of redemption. No act of love seems small or unimportant. It is a joy to help others to become like him who was altogether lovely. He knows that Jesus' arms are still extended wide for all who will come to him, and hope whispers that many will yet eagerly accept the offered salvation.

There are a thousand ills in life, but in the word of God can be found abundant consolation for each one. And as we go onward receiving blessed, needed discipline, let us never murmur, but rather let us sing—

I journey through a desert drear and wild,
Yet is my heart with such sweet thoughts beguiled
Of Him on whom I lean, my strength, my stay,
I can forget the sorrows by the way.

Thoughts of his coming! for that joyful day
In patient hope I watch, and wait and pray;
The dawn draws nigh, the midnight shadows flee,
And what a sunrise will that advent be!

The Judgment.

The last day must come. Where there has been a beginning, there must be an end. The day of days, the last of days, the day of the Lord, is to come. No power can prevent it. God has declared it, and it shall come. No schemes, neglect, unbelief of the moving millions on earth can blot out the remembrance of that day from the divine mind. It is the finisher of this world's affairs, just as certainly as the first day was a starting point for it. It comes, and with it shall come the fates of men—the rewards of all. With it shall come the Son of man—the true Messiah. With it shall come the judgment. The last trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall hear. Sleeping myriads, who lay down in their dreamless beds in ages past, shall once more open their eyes, arise, and wonder that they live again. They shall again mingle with the living of earth, and with them go to judgment.

O solemn hour! O awful fate for those who shall be consigned to destruction! Let me escape the wrath of Jehovah! Let Jesus be my friend in that day. Let me stand with the redeemed [illegible] let me live when Jesus reigns. Let me share in the joys of God's great glory. Let me join in the songs of immortal hosts. Let me have an everlasting home there, in that beautiful world. Let me dwell where sighs are not heard, where tears never flow. Let me abide permanently in that peaceful land where evil is not known. O, when imperfection is perfected, let me live.

Reader! would you live then? Would you escape the sentence, "Depart"? Then come to Jesus now. He waits to claim you as his child. Wander no longer. Cease your rebellious career,—come and be reconciled to God, ere the day of probation passes, the door of mercy closes, and the Master be risen up to cast out his enemies from the earth—the saints' happy home.

Indecent Papers.

Yes, they are indecent, and not only indecent, but corrupting and demoralizing. Look upon the numerous book and paper stands in our city, into very many bookstores—what do you see? Snakes in the grass, heaps on heaps, serpents that bite with a deadly venom. So exceedingly vile are many of these publications, that even one of our dailies, that caters to a corrupt public taste, is induced to cry out, thus:—

"We wish to call the attention of the public, and more especially that of the general superintendent of the police, to the vulgar papers that are sold at many of the newspaper stands, and hawked about the streets, in defiance of law and decency. Any argument in regard to the propriety of putting a stop to such business would be useless, since there are few persons to be found so vile as to openly advocate the sale of these papers. It is a disgrace to the city that individuals who are so devoid of self-respect as to print the suggestions of a foul imagination, should be allowed to reside elsewhere than at Sing Sing."

Bro. P. A. Smith to Bro. M. B. Cyphers.

BRO. CYPHERS:—You say, "While reading a book written by Phineas A. Smith, entitled, 'Every Body's Book,' I find a statement that does not agree with the rest of his teachings, or with the Bible."

You refer to page 44, where I state that Adam was made incorruptible. You object on the ground that Webster's definition of the word is opposed to that view of man's nature. I will quote Mr. Webster. He says, "Incorruptible, that cannot corrupt or decay, not admitting of corruption. Thus gold, glass, mercury, etc., are incorruptible." Now if the application of acids to gold will corrode and cause it to decay, which I understand to be the fact; then, Adam before he ate the forbidden fruit was incorruptible; but when he came in contact with the poison, or whatever was the nature of the tree of which he was forbidden to eat, it affected him in like manner, and he became corruptible; and having been driven from "the tree of life," he must continue so until Christ comes and gives him incorruptibility. As long as he ate of "the tree of life," he was incorruptible; that neutralized everything that would have affected him otherwise.

I am not alone in this view of the subject. I quote from Bro. E. R. Pinney's book, entitled "The purpose of God in creating the world," p. 20. He says, "Man was made pure, having no seeds of corruption or decay in himself, and, unaffected by external, or foreign powers and substances, he might have lived perhaps forever; yet was susceptible of being destroyed by them; for incorruptibility is no security against external powers. To illustrate: a piece of pure gold, excluded from the air and all foreign substances, would remain bright and indestructible forever; because it is pure in itself; and, therefore, incorruptible; yet by the application of acids, it will speedily corrode and decay; so Adam, when created, was free from all seeds of corruption and decay; yet was susceptible of being corrupted by foreign substances."

Let us so live that if we are sown in corruption, we may be "raised in incorruption." O! how I pant for that hour to come; then, Bro., we shall see eye to eye. There will be no difference in opinion. Here we "see through a glass darkly," but there, face to face. Will you meet me there?

"Come, let us anew,
Our journey pursue,"

and, during the few moments we have left, work for God, and get as many to enlist for the kingdom as we can; for soon the trump will start the sleeping ones from their dusty beds, and then for the shout of triumph through the whole lines of the redeemed. Glory to God for the prospect.

Yours in love, P. A. SMITH.

The Ill. Conference Report.

Dear Brethren:—Again, amid the perils and exciting scenes of these last days, we have been permitted to meet in conference. In many respects it was an interesting time, and we trust a profitable one. Many, who are looking for the Messiah soon to come, the resurrection, and the establishment of the everlasting kingdom, came together from different parts of the land, to congratulate each other in regard to the blessed prospect before us, and counsel together as to the best method to promote the interest of the Redeemer's cause. The preaching brethren present were Brn. Wm. Sheldon, J. Blain, G. Moyer, A. S. Calkins, C. W. Smith, G. W. Hurd, H. A. King, D. S. Clark, Wm. M'Cullock, A. Royce, S. E. Mabey, N. Johnson, and H. G. M'Cullock. The fore part of the meeting was devoted mostly to social meetings, and practical preaching by Brn. Moyer, Sheldon, and Blain, on the qualifications necessary to fit us for the kingdom, and the necessity of being led by the Spirit of God, as well as having a correct theory. These brethren were followed by Brn. Hurd and Smith, after which Bro. Calkins gave us a sermon on the gospel, connected with the promises made unto the fathers.

Sunday morning, we met for a love-feast. Fifty-nine spoke in sixty-five minutes, after which we listened to a discourse by Bro. Sheldon on our position in the world's history. It was convincing to saint and sinner that earth's sad story is almost told. After service, we repaired to the water side, where two were buried in the likeness of Christ's death. One was a class teacher in the Methodist church. Preaching in the afternoon by Bro. Blain, on the final end of evil, by the destruction of the wicked, after which Brn. G. W. Hurd, A. Royce, and S. E. Maybe, were set apart for the work of the ministry, and two more were baptized.

In the evening, sermon by Bro. Sheldon, on the literal resurrection of the dead. After service, sixty sat down to the table of the Lord, after the manner of Christ and his disciples. It was truly a solemn season, and many staid to witness it. As Bro. Blain said, they had loud preaching that day,—three sermons, four baptized, three ordained, and the Lord's Supper. Friday morning, Saturday morning, and Saturday afternoon, at six o'clock, were devoted to conference sessions.

The following officers were chosen for the ensuing year: Eld. Wm. M'Cullock, Pres., D. S. Clark, Vice Pres., H. G. M'Cullock, Sec'y. The constitution was amended so as to embrace the whole State in the conference, which is to be called the "Illinois Conference of Adventists." An invitation was given to ministers and members from distant churches, to participate in our deliberations. The minutes were read and accepted, after which the following preachers were received into the conference,—G. W. Hurd, of Ionia, Warren Co., C. W. Smith, Oswego, Kendall Co., George Moyer, Laporte, Ind., who is now laboring in this State. The following churches were received into the conference: New Rutland, Millroy, Henderson, Indian Grove, Ionia, and Paw Paw. Reports were then heard from the churches.

Bro. Hurd said the churches at Indian Grove and Ionia, in Warren Co., were workers; have put their hands to the plough and will not look back. The former numbers twenty, the latter twenty-four members. At Henderson, Knox Co., the church is in a good condition, and striving for the kingdom. Bro. King said the church in Millroy is growing in the knowledge of the truth. They number nineteen. Several are waiting to be baptized. Bro. Calkins said the church in New Rutland was in a prosperous condition. Last winter there was but one brother there, but under the labors of himself and Bro. Royce it now numbers forty-three. Bro. Maine said the church at Livingston numbers forty. They are living christians. Bro. Calkins labors there part of the time. H. G. M'Cullock said the church at Shabbona is pressing forward, and does not intend to give up till the Master comes. The interest is spreading. They number some seventy-five. At Paw Paw the church is just organized. Ten have united. The interest is good. Bro. Maybe said, at Amboy we have struggled on through opposition. God has been with us, and there is light ahead. They number twenty-eight. Many are with us who have not united. Bro. Mason said, at Palo the interest is good. There are a few that stand firm in the faith. Bro. Kelsey said, at Earlville the cause has been wounded by its professed friends. A few are determined to press forward.

Ministers and delegates were instructed to carry into effect a resolution adopted by the conference in regard to raising funds for missionary purposes. Questions came up causing animated discussions, but no unkind expressions of feelings. All were interested in the great and blessed cause of saving men in the kingdom. Thus we adjourned to meet again at New Rutland, Lasalle Co., at the call of the President and officers of the conference.

Bro. Royce, who is now laboring with us in connection with the conference, was also recommended to the pilgrims and [illegible] scattered abroad, as worthy of Thus ended our meeting. Good attention and good audiences were characteristics of the meeting. It had the effect of removing prejudice and opening the eyes of some. Some Methodists, some Baptists are inquiring about the matter, and searching to see whether these things are so. But oh for help! Why don't they come,—men of the right stamp? We know there are men in the East, who are qualified for this very place,—self-sacrificing, christian men. We need you here on these wide-spread prairies to scatter the precious seed. By so doing, many will rise up in the day of his coming and call you blessed. Our dear Bro. Spencer was not able to meet with us. We sometimes fear his work is almost done. Let us so live that, when when earth blooms in all its pristine loveliness, we may be there to share in its never-ending glories.

H. G. M'Cullock, Sec. of Conference.

The Numerical Prediction.

Bro. Grant:—In the Crisis of to-day, (June 4th,) I notice "a numerical prediction" on the second page of the paper, with the request to have it solved; hence I send you my solution of it. I think, however, there is some mistake in some of the figures; instance the last three figures in the fourth line, 4, 9, 23, diur, which word I cannot find. If it read 4, 9, 5, 21, dieu, it would be God; or if it read 4, 9, 21, diu, it would be the name of an island. And then again, the beginning of the last line, commencing 14, 5, etc., should read to be nineteenth instead of nine.

The following is the best I can make of it:—"12, 15, 22, 9, 19, [Louis] 14, 1, 16, 15, 12, 5, 15, 14, [Napoleon] 2, 21, 15, 14, 1, 16, 1, 18, 20, 5, [Buonaparte] 18, 5, 16, 18, 5, 19, 5, 14, 20, 1, 14, 20, [Representant] 4, 21, [Du—meaning of the] 16, 5, 21, 16, 12, 5, [peuple—people] 4, 5, [de—of] 4, 9, 23, [dieu, see the above explanation] 4, 5, 16, 1, 18, 20, 5, 13, 5, 14, 20, 19, [Departements] 19, 5, 18, 1, [Sera—shall be] 16, 18, 5, 19, 9, 4, 5, 14, 20, [President] 4, 5, [de—of] 18, 5, 16, 21, 2, 12, 9, 17, 21, 5, [Republique—Republic] 6, 18, 1, 14, 3, 1, 9, 19, 5, [Francaise—France] 9, 14, 4, 9, 22, 9, 19, 9, 2, 12, 5, [Indivisible—that cannot be divided] 4, 5, 13, 15, 3, 18, 1, 20, 9, 7, 21, 5, [Democratique—Democratic] 16, 1, 18, [Par—by] 12, 5, [Le—the] 19, 21, 6, 6, 18, 1, 7, 5, [suffrage] 21, 14, 9, 22, 5, 18, 19, 5, 12, [Universel] 22, 5, 18, 19, vers [Towards—or about] 12, 5, [Le—the] 4, 9, 23, [see the above explanation] 14, 5, 21, 22, 9, 5, 13, 5 [Neuvieme—ninth, see explanation] 19, 9, 5, 3, 12, 5, [Siecle—century]

Its obvious meaning appears to be, that Louis Napoleon would be Napoleon Bonaparte represented, or that Louis Napoleon Bonaparte would be a Representative of the people in the Departments, (which he actually was just previous to being President), that he should be President of the Republic of France, that it should not be divided, but be democratic in its form by universal suffrage of its people, which would be about or towards the nineteenth century.

Yours, John Taylor.

The Cross and Crown.

While we delight to linger around the cross, and to point all to the atoning death of our adorable Savior, we cannot be unmindful of the fact that his coming again in glory is uniformly presented in the Holy Scriptures as the hope of the church of God. We have been long satisfied that the Second Advent is pre-millennial; in other words, that Christ will come again before the millennial,—that there will be no golden age of universal righteousness and peace prior to his coming,—that iniquity will abound, and the love of many wax cold, till the end,—that the wheat and tares will grow together till the harvest,—that evil men and seducers will become worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived; and that as it was in the days of Noah and Lot, so it will be at the coming of the Son of man.

We believe, too, that the present dispensation is nearing its close,—that a voice will soon emanate from the throne, saying, "It is done," and Jesus will come in like manner as he was seen to go into heaven! The fulfillment of prophecy, the advanced age of the world, and the signs of the times admonish us of this, and also of our duty to continue and increase our aid in swelling the note of warning which is being heard in all lands.

The reader may have stood by the Falls of Niagara. A short distance above the cataract the waters become very rapid,—hence that part of the mighty stream is called "The Rapids." So it seems to us that we are in the rapids of time: and the cataract of eternity is just before us! The eye of enlightened faith sees it; and the ear of faith hears its dreadful roar; and the voice of wisdom says to all men everywhere, "Prepare to meet thy God." "Be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh." "Behold, I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame."

Concord.

We spent Lord's day, June 15th, in Concord, and had an interesting season. The church is doing well—making progress in divine life. It is heart-cheering to hear the testimonies of the young converts. We found them gaining ground. About twenty-five of the young people have formed a "Try company," and have interesting meetings. They seem determined to form good habits in their youth, and thus escape the temptations and snares of Satan, where others have been ruined. There are several members of the "Try Company" that are from nine to fifteen years of age, who speak and pray in our social meetings in the great congregation. They have found by happy experiment, that "I will try" accomplishes wonders, with the help of the Lord. It is a delightful sight to see these youth walking in wisdom's ways, choosing the Lord as their portion. We learn their little prayer meetings are delightful scenes.

The prospect in Concord is good. Several of the old soldiers of the cross say they never felt such sweet peace, and such a clear witness of their acceptance as now. They are longing for the day to arrive when they shall see the Savior coming in his glory, and they are confident the time is at hand. They are rejoicing that they have held fast during the many trials through which they have passed, and are now preparing to meet the coming Bride groom.

Two more were baptized, making twenty-eight in all, and others are intending to follow their example soon. For want of room in the meeting-house, we are obliged to occupy the spacious City Hall, and then get extra seats to accommodate the crowds that wish to hear. The truth and light are spreading in all directions, causing those who receive these blessings to rejoice in the Lord. Many now see the wide difference between the real christian's hope, and the one based on the fables of these last days.—G.

That is Right.

Bro. C. W. Smith writes:—"I wish to do all in my power to oppose error." This should be the sentiment of every true christian. Error is worse than worthless. It is a positive injury to its holder; hence every true man should do all in his power to prevent men from embracing it, and to persuade them to give it up, if they have been so unfortunate as to have taken it by mistake. Kindness to our fellow-men demands this at our hands. It is a duty we owe to them, as truly as we should a caution to the blind man who was about to take a road that would lead him off a high precipice. We are well aware that the task is often an unpleasant one, which "affords more kicks than coppers." The whole host of those who support error, will cry against us, some as they did against the apostles, when they informed the people that their gods were of no benefit to them. We may expect a tumult, and a long shout, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians!" But such things are unworthy the notice of a christian soldier.

The founder of error is continually giving it new forms, that he may the more easily entrap the unsuspecting. His most successful attack probably in the whole history of the world, is through modern Spiritualism. It may look "like a lamb," but it speaks "as a dragon." This is evidently the closing and crowning work of the arch deceiver. He who expects to "oppose error" in all its forms should be well posted in this system, which is wholly based on Satan's lie; and is as ruinous to its votaries, as tobacco, rum, opium and arsenic, to a healthy constitution. Its sentiments are becoming daily more popular. We only find here and there one who is not already more or less poisoned with the infidel sentiments of Spiritualism. Many have embraced nearly its whole system of doctrine, who have been led into it in such a shy way, by the wiles of Satan, that they have no idea how far they have departed from "the old paths" of a pure christianity, and the truth of the Bible. Millions, no doubt, are already past recovery from this strong delusion; and they are "seducing" as many more to join their company.

We meet with many who once loved the "blessed hope," who now laugh at the "old-fashioned way of getting religion." They do not believe in any supernatural aid from the Holy Spirit,—any bitter cup of repentance for sins, and the bright witness of the Spirit that sin is forgiven; but they have a more "philosophical" way of explaining these things. Thus they have already cut loose from the sheet-anchor of christianity, and are drifting towards the maelstrom of Spiritualism.

Bro. Smith, now is the time to be firm for the right. Let there be no wavering, and the God of truth will sustain you. Be kind, but expose error in all its hydra-headed forms. Love the men, but pull down their false systems; for by so doing you may save them from everlasting destruction, and cause them to gain eternal glory in the coming kingdom. Dear Bro., do not get weary in such noble work.—G.

Progressing downwards.

That our nation has been growing "worse and worse" morally, is a fact too plain to be denied by any careful observer. Our fathers would be astonished at the wickedness of our country, could they rise from the dead, and witness the sad state of things existing in all departments of social, political, and moral relations. Would the Pilgrims who landed on Plymouth Rock have believed the prophets who should have informed them that in 1862 their descendants would be what we now see they are? Alas! no one fact is clearer than that prosperity usually causes men to forget God, become proud, wicked, and oppressive. It has been thus in all ages. That which mankind are most anxious to possess—wealth—is almost sure to prove their ruin. How true the Scripture,—"They that will be rich, fall into temptation, and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition." It is as true nationally as in the case of individuals. This is emphatically the case with our own prospered land.

The prosperity of the American people has made them proud and boastful, like Nebuchadnezzar in Babylon. In his case, his name very properly signified,—"tears and groans of judgment;" and the application would not be amiss if applied to the government of the United States for the last few years. It seems determined to exalt itself in all its wickedness, till like Nebuchadnezzar it is humbled in the dust, and held by "a band of iron." The prophet might well say to this nation, as to the mighty king of Babylon, "Let my counsel be acceptable unto thee, and break off thy sins by righteousness, and thine iniquities by showing mercy to the poor slave."

It might have been hoped that our nation would humble itself before the Lord, and reform when our present national troubles began, but we see no evidence of such a work. The following from an exchange shows how Sunday is spent at the Capitol:

"A Washington correspondent gives the following account of how last Sunday was observed at the Capitol, where it is customary to have religious services in the Representatives' Hall. No chaplain appeared at the customary hour of commencement, and the audience engaged in promiscuous conversation. After some fifteen or twenty minutes a gentleman stepped forward and announced that there would be services, and at the same time requested the "audience" to listen to the singing of a few pieces. Of course the religious mercury resumed its wonted sphere. Just at this point there burst upon listening ears the clear, harmonious vocal strains of the "Star Spangled Banner," sung by a young lady of this city. It was truly amusing to see the various expressions of astonishment by grave Senators, and the wise men from the East, and elsewhere, and the repeated 'Can it be possible?' A portion of the words used in this song were new and elegant. This was followed by another song, having for its sentiment 'Down with the rebel flag,' and 'Three cheers for the Red, White, and Blue.' At the conclusion of this performance there was long, loud and hearty applause, continued for several seconds in an unmistakable spirit of enthusiasm. After the singing of 'America' and 'Old Hundred,' the assemblage dispersed. There was a very large attendance of ladies and officers and privates of the army."

"The World's Crisis."

We have just received the first number of a small monthly paper, entitled "The World's Crisis," published in San Francisco, Cal., J. L. Hopkins Editor. The following "Salutatory" will give the reader an idea of its object.

SALUTATORY.

The object of starting this paper is soon told;—an earnest desire to set forth the truth of God in reference to the judgments that are coming on the earth, the closing up of the Christian dispensation, and issuing in of the New.

We would ask of our readers, saint or sinner, a fair and impartial examination. Read carefully, before you condemn! You may not be convinced by the arguments employed, but the subject is worthy of a thorough investigation. If that is given, there is but little more to ask.

The great difficulty in the case is, men do not thoroughly examine it. What Sir Isaac Newton said to Halley concerning revelation, is, generally, true of this subject in particular: "You do not read on this subject because you do not understand it, and you do not understand it because you do not read."

Men may say of this subject just what they will. It still remains true, that there are no weightier questions than those which are here discussed: on one side or the other the truth lies. Every man is concerned to know it; he may not confess that he is, but whether he confess it or not, his interest therein is real or abiding.

The world is on the eve of great changes. Events of great importance are rapidly drawing near. It is wise to note them closely, and ponder them well. We are beginning to hear the distant thunder of a coming storm.

May the Lord grant his blessing, and accompany the truth herein set forth.

J. L. Hopkins.

We are glad to see interest awakening in California on the great and all-important subject of the Lord's speedy coming. Sound the alarm. Sound it everywhere, all you faithful ones. Our work is short, but let it be earnest. We bid our Bro. Hopkins God speed in his worthy enterprise.—G.

Napoleon III.

Politicians are troubled at the movements of Bonaparte. They are beginning to see that he has some grand scenes on his programme, which are not yet played out, but he is so secret in his operations, he keeps them all wondering. The following item shows the state of feeling:—G.

"Thinking men in France are becoming alarmed at this disposition of his Majesty to make himself the arbiter of the destinies of the world, and are growing more and more discontented with a ruler whose course is so uncertain, and whose acts seem to be controlled by no fixed principles—a ruler who seems to delight in continually surprising and startling the world, and for the gratification of whose fancies they are required to pay."

Gen. 7: 22.

Bro. C. W. Smith, Tamarack, Ill., makes the following inquiry:—

"In examining your works,—'What is Man,' and 'The Spirit in Man,' on page four of the first I read that the word breath, in Gen. 7: 22, is from n'shah-mah; in 'The Spirit in Man,' page sixteen, I notice this passage given in the list of those in which breath is from ruach. Which is correct?"

Ans. Both. In the Hebrew both words occur as follows: 'n'shah-mah ruach ghahy,—the breath of the spirit of life. Only one is translated in our version.—G.

Quite Sensible.

The following sensible conundrum was composed by one of our Boston friends, who, like many others, has been often forced to feel the truthfulness of the application.—G.

Why is that part of a lady's dress which trails when she is walking, like salt when it has lost its savor?

Ans. Because "it is good for nothing but to be cast out, and to be trodden under foot of men."

For the Crisis.

Be Sober.

"But the end of all things is at hand: be ye therefore sober, and watch unto prayer. And above all things have fervent charity among yourselves; for charity shall cover the multitude of sins."—1 Pet. 4: 7, 8.

This exhortation, given by the apostle Peter to his brethren, seems to be applicable to us living in this time, who are looking for the speedy advent of the Lord. He exhorts them to cease from sin, taking Christ for their example. Methinks if the apostle was now living, he would utter the same words; for never was the world so full of evil as at the present. Would that we could stop here, and leave the evil with those of the world; but the exhortation is to the church who profess to be waiting for the Lord. Are we "sober" and watching "unto prayer? Have we fervent charity? These are solemn questions, and of vital importance to us. We are living in perilous times, when everything seems to be against the child of God; and we need the sympathy of our Brn. and Srs. We need encouragement from those who have been on the way longer than we. There are many weak ones with us, and if they step aside, and through ignorance, perchance, do something which older folks do not think proper, is it Christ-like for them to whisper it among the church and set them watching for their faults? Would that be watching unto prayer? O for more praying and less talking; more charity and God-likeness. We wish to inherit the kingdom; and shall the tongue, a small member, but a powerful instrument of much good, and great harm, keep us from the tree of life? God forbid! James says, "Brethren (for I think the brethren will have to own guilty as well as we sisters), these things ought not so to be." With him every child of God will agree. It is hard to have our friends of the world turn against us; yet we can bear it for Christ's sake; but it is a great deal worse, when those with whom we have taken sweet counsel have bitter envyings and evil surmisings against us. But so it is, and many hearts are crushed and bleeding to-day on account of it. It is not of God. No, it is "earthly, sensual, devilish."

Who does not sigh for a better state of things? Let us, my Brn. and Srs. in Christ, seek for that wisdom that comes "from above," which "is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocrisy." God grant that the little flock may "walk worthy of the vocation wherewith' they have been "called, with all lowliness and meekness, with long-suffering, forbearing one another in love." What a mighty influence the church would have, if standing out clear, having less of self, and looking for the interest of souls. It is high time we were awake. The day is far spent; our night of weeping and sorrow is most over. Soon the Life-giver will come and raise the sleeping millions that rest in the grave. May we all be ready to join the blood-washed throng. "Now our Lord Jesus Christ himself, and God, even our Father, which hath loved us, and hath given us everlasting consolation and good hope through grace, comfort your hearts, and stablish you in every good word and work."

Portsmouth, N. H. Georgiana White.

The Book of Revelation.

It is called by thousands a sealed book, a mysterious, incomprehensible book, hard to be understood, and that none but the most learned can know anything of its mysteries. And therefore the great majority of the christian world have settled down upon the one idea that the book of Revelation is not to be understood by mortal man, for the most learned of the churches say they know nothing of its general meaning. But from the announcement of the first chapter of the book itself, we conclude there is something for us to understand. Rev. 1: 1,—"The REVELATION of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him, to show unto his servants the things which must shortly come to pass." The meaning of revelation is, to reveal; therefore the book of Revelation is a portion of God's word revealed to man, to be understood by his church. The book is very rich in its symbolical and mystical descriptions, scenery, and figurative language. It is also rich in truth, and the communication of events then hid under the veil of futurity, and would only be unfolded to the natural visions of men many ages to come.

John has written this book after the laws of nature; that is, he has seemed to copy after some of the richest scenes in nature's laws. He has, in revealing truths to our minds, followed the same steady course that fountains of water do in their course to the sea. He begins as it were upon the mountains where the head may be but a fountain, and there gives us a description of the source. He then glides gently along through the vale below, winding between hills and mountains, visiting in its course the hamlets of the peasant, the villages of men, the populous towns and cities of commerce, until he ushers us upon the ocean of eternity. At first, he appears to be describing some bubbling fountain, or gentle spring, and swelling in importance as he proceeds, brings in and adds every important stream of event, deepens and widens in his course until he makes his prophetic history like a deep flowing river, bearing upon its bosom the gallant ships and galley with oars. At first, he describes a pebbly brook murmuring along the hills, now and then bursting into view with some gentle fall, then gliding softly away, until it meets some rugged headland, shifts its course, and almost seems to retrace its path; then suddenly bursting from rock to rock, leaping into the vale below, it glides onward till it reaches the ocean.

Four times the Revelator brings us down in this manner, as though he had begun on one mountain, and traced four different streams of history to the great ocean of eternity; like the river of Eden, which watered the garden, becoming four heads of four great rivers, which watered and encompassed the whole land,—taking different points of the compass, but falling at last into the ocean (Gen. 2: 10–14), and and all these having seven tributary streams in their course. Thus it is in the book of Revelation. The seven churches, the seven seals, the seven trumpets, the seven vials, the seven stars, and the seven candlesticks, and many other events, woven in like tributary streams, and filling up the grand river of prophecy, until the whole ends us in the ocean of eternity. This, to me, is the plan of John's prophecy in this book of Revelation. And the man or woman who wishes to understand this book must have a thorough knowledge of other parts of the word of God. The figures and metaphors used in this prophecy are not all explained in the same, but must be found in other prophets, and explained in other parts of the Scriptures. Therefore, "Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life."

Do you care for the Poor and the Sick?

In 1844 and '54, there was a people that professed to be living out the teachings of Christ and the apostles. In those days the sick and the afflicted were cared for, and their wants were sought out. How is it now? Did not Christ say, "The poor ye have always with you, and when ye will ye may do them good"? Did Christ mean what he said, or is the christian's duty less binding now? Can the watchman be justified in passing by the doors and under the chambers of the sick and dying, without stopping to administer the words of consolation to the afflicted ones? When the lame, the blind, the sick and the afflicted, were brought to Christ, did he turn from them? Nay, verily. In every instance he administered to their wants. Servants of the living God, go ye and do likewise.

For the Crisis.

Judgment and Reward.

Judgment must precede reward; for reward is the result of judgment. Judgment consists, firstly, in passing a decision, and secondly, in executing that decision. Reward, whether of a good or bad nature, is the realization of the decision in its execution. This fact being established, it follows that the reward of both saint and sinner is on the other side of the great judgment. Then at what point of time are men to be judged? Let Christ answer: "The word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him IN THE LAST DAY." John 12: 48. Thus the judgment is interwoven with "THE LAST DAY;" consequently there is no reward for saint or sinner prior to the "last day," for reward is the result of the decision made at the judgment. Consequently:—

First: That theory which represents the saint as entering upon his reward prior to the "last day,' is in opposition to God's plan.

Secondly: That theory which represents the sinner as entering upon his reward previous to the "last day," (whether by going to a burning hell, or simply to a state of irrevocable death,) is positively at variance with the divine plan.

Thirdly: Saint and sinner must be judged, not in the hour of death, but "IN THE LAST DAY;" and their reward will be the result of the decision there made.

Fourthly: Consequently both classes must be called from the prison of death to be tried, (or judged) and rewarded—the "second death" being the reward of the sinner, and "eternal life" the reward of the saint.

Correspondence.

From Bro. J. Porter.

Bro. Grant:—Since you were here last winter, three of our number have fallen asleep in Jesus,—all expecting immortality upon the return of the Life-giver.

The first was Sister Shaw, in her ninety-first year, almost blind, but strong in the faith that her corruptible would put on incorruption at the resurrection morn.

The second was Benjamin Stanley, in his eighty-sixth year, who devoted the latter part of his life to the Lord, and to a preparation to meet the approaching scenes of the mighty future. Both of these aged persons, with some others, were baptized by Eld. Fassett, when last in Canada, and noticed by him in connection with his meetings in Danville, which were said to be the best he had seen in these townships.

The third was Clarissa Perkins, in the fifty-sixth year of her age, baptized by you in June '61, and who requested that she might receive the Lord's Supper when you were here in Feb. last. On the day she died, she sent for me, and I arrived in time to witness the last struggle of this intelligent and well-instructed saint with the "last enemy." He conquered, and she fell; but with this assurance, that there is a day not far in the future when his conquest will be disputed to the last inch of territory. The scene was deeply affecting. There were present a husband, three sons, and seven daughters, suffused in tears; five of the latter are members of the church in this place.

On Tuesday last, I was called to Lawrenceville, a distance of thirty-two miles, to attend the funeral of David Lawrence, the father of Eld. P. H. Lawrence, of that place, aged seventy-seven years. He attended meeting with his son on the day before his death. He was for many years a pious man, and in his last hours the Lord signally owned him by a clear evidence that he should have a part in the first resurrection. He leaves an aged but pious companion, who is blind, and now confined to her bed. Her hope also is standing upon something more substantial than "fables."

At L. there is a small church struggling for life; for in the midst of adverse winds, Bro. L. endeavors to keep the colors floating at the mast head.

Danville, June 10th, 1862.

From Wm. Greenleaf.

Bro. Grant:—I am very thankful for the Crisis, through the columns of which I would like to say to the Brn. and sisters that I am still contending for the "faith once delivered to the saints," and looking for "that blessed hope"—the coming of the Redeemer and the consummation of that hope. How joyful the thought! Yes, hoping ones, our trials are almost ended. Lift up your heads. We have all had our trials, and some of us have waded through troubles long and dark, and nothing but that blessed hope could have sustained us. I have been a silent observer of the course of some of our brethren, and have simply to say, that some have more sectarian feeling than I think is healthy for devoted christians in these perilous times. But let us get all the truth we can, be sanctified thereby, ready and watching when the angels shall come and say to us, as Martha said unto Mary, "The Master is come, and calleth for thee,"—to be summoned by angels,—escorted by them to meet the Lord in the air! "Be ye also ready!" The great crisis is coming! Dear friends, will we not look upward, not like Bunyan's man with the muck-rake—no; let go the muck-rake—hold this world very loosely, knowing our redemption draweth nigh? Do not be drawn by the world, or the war spirit, or by the great maelstrom—Spiritualism, away from "that blessed hope." The Lord keep all his children safe in these times of peril, and bless you, Bro. Grant, and guide you into all truth.

Orland, Ind.

From Bro. F. H. Burbank.

Bro. Grant:—One year ago, I went into the world, in obedience to the commands of my Master, to preach "the gospel of the kingdom" to those poor children who live on the highways and in the hedges

The Lord furnished a bountiful supply of wedding garments, and I found many naked children in my journeyings, to whom I offered them. Some received them gladly, and are now "found clothed and in their right minds," waiting for the coming Bridegroom. My salary for preaching this "glorious gospel" is very heavy, and I expect by and by to walk on streets of gold. It gives me great pleasure to write, that twenty-two children have been down into Plymouth harbor with me, to be baptized, "for there is much water there," and soon another happy company will also be "buried with Christ by baptism." Our meetings are attended by large numbers of those who "have been feeding on husks," and we are holding up before them "corn of heaven," and some show unmistakable signs that they will soon ask for the food. As soon as they ask "they shall receive." We are laboring in this field to gather a few more sheaves, and hope they will be full before the Lord, our great husbandman, comes.

Brethren and sisters in Christ, labor on in the vineyard of the Lord. Dig, prune, carry burdens, tread grapes, in short, do anything that the Lord requires; that at last we may hear the glorious words of welcome, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

Plymouth, June 18th, '62.

Obituary Notices.

Died, at South Woodstock, Vt., Sister BETSEY SLATER, wife of Bro. Reuben Slater, aged seventy-six years.

She was converted over fifty years ago, and joined the Christian church. On hearing the doctrine of the coming kingdom, she embraced it, rejoiced in it, and died in the faith of soon being waked up to join in celebrating the song of joy and redemption from the grave.

For forty years, this mother in Israel has willingly waited upon the saints of God, and comforted them in their trials through this vale of tears. Many poor pilgrims will remember her acts of kindness as they passed through South Woodstock. It was one of my best homes. I always felt a kind of joy when I got in sight of Bro. Slater's house. It was a home for man and beast.

When I started on my Vermont trip, I expected to stop there as usual, but was informed Sister Slater was dead. One half of my anticipation was gone. On arriving, we found a welcome at Bro Slater's old home, but no Sister Slater there. We could look at her old empty rocking-chair, and other things she used,—all seemed to be mourning the loss of their queen. Then we would look on Bro. Slater, who was the greatest mourner, and see that three years added to his age, together with this heavy stroke of affliction, had made a great change in his appearance; but not in his faith, or hope, which was all he had left. We staid some two hours, and was made more than welcome by Bro. Slater and his aged sister, who is keeping house for him. Thus we see one after another going down to the grave, but they will all come forth again. HIRAM MUNGER.

Died, in Washburn, Aroostook, Me., Feb. 27th, of diphtheria, GEORGE W. CHURCHILL, aged 12 years, 11 months, 14 days.

March 16th, ASENATH A. SHARP, aged 18 years

May 19th, PRUDENCE H. CROUSE, aged 22 years, 3 months.

These were children of Nathaniel and Sarah M. Churchill. This is the fourth time in the short space of eight months that death has entered our family ranks, and torn a loved one from our embrace.

Oct. 9th, 1861, our dear father fell on sleep. With sad hearts we followed him to the lone, dark grave. But little did we think that our dear brother, then in all the bloom and strength of youth, the stay and staff of a widowed mother's declining years, would follow so soon; nor yet that our dear sisters, once the joy and light of a happy home, would sleep so soon in the dreadful silence of the cold, dark grave. They leave their partners to mourn their bitter loss, besides a large circle of relatives and friends. But thanks be to God, there is hope in their end. "They shall come again from the land of the enemy." They fell with their armor on, rejoicing in hope of the soon coming kingdom; when they shall see their blessed Lord, and be like him, for they "shall see him as he is." May God sanctify this affliction to our good, and gather us eventually, an unbroken family, with all the redeemed, is my prayer.

Our gracious Father and our God,
We bow beneath thy chastening rod;
While deep, o'erwhelming trouble rolls
In sad'ning fury o'er our souls.

O Lord, the cherished of our hearts
Have fallen 'neath death's poisoned darts,—
Two sisters, brother, father dear,
O how we wish the loved ones here!

Lord, roll that blissful morning round;
When the last joyful trump shall sound,
They'll spring to life with sweet surprise,
And in their Savior's image rise.

We'll meet our father, brother, there;
Prudence, Asenath, blooming fair;
Yes, when death's long, dark night is past,
We'll greet our loved ones, met at last.

CHRISTIAN F. CHURCHILL.
Presque Isle, Aroostook, Me., June 8, '62.

Fell asleep in Jesus, at Orrington, Me., April 25th, 1262, of consumption, Bro. WALLACE F. SMITH, son of Bro. James and Mehitabel A. Smith, aged thirty-five years.

He was converted in 1844, and loved the appearing of Jesus. He would often say when sick, he had a good hope. Like Timothy of old, he was dearly beloved by all. He was not ashamed of the words of our Lord, and was a partaker of the afflictions of the gospel, according to the power of God. He was very happy when dying. He wished all to rejoice with him instead of weeping. He would say, "we shall soon meet again on the beautiful new earth." He desired them to sing that sweet hymn,

"Thou wilt come again, blessed Savior."

As his friends stood by his bedside, he exhorted them to prove faithful. He said he expected to sleep a little while in the grave, until Jesus comes, and then they would all meet to part no more. He often spoke of the glory that Christ will bring with him when he comes.

He leaves a wife and two little children, who feel that they have been deprived of their best earthly friend; besides parents, brothers, sisters, and other friends, who deeply feel their loss. But thank the Lord, those Loved ones that now sleep in the dust of the earth will awake with immortal loveliness. We shall meet the fond gaze of those lovely eyes once more, glittering with the mild radiance of undying youth.

His funeral was attended in the Methodist church. Bro. I. Damman spoke from the words, "Jesus wept," to a full house, and we were all comforted with the hope of the resurrection. C. DAGGETT.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

Fair Oaks, June 12. Not a day passes but our victorious hosts get nearer Richmond, slowly, to be sure, but certain. The old battle field of ten days since, then the advance ground, now forms a rear line of battle, for beyond that lie intrenched hosts of men, whose generals are on the alert, bound not to be again surprised. The rebel pickets daily lose ground, and Joe Johnston, if he be not dead, has been obliged to withdraw the advanced camps of his army. The opinion gains strength that Richmond is being evacuated, for in a day or two more we will probably be in possession of an elevation of ground from which the Confederate Capital can be shelled in safety. But prisoners brought in by our pickets insist that the rebel leaders will fight where they are, because the Virginia regiments have resolved that with the abandonment of their State they will throw down their arms and go home, whatever may be the result."

New York, June 17. The Times' correspondent in the army of the Potomac, writing on the evening of the 13th inst., says the right wing of the army to-day was attacked by the rebels, who succeeded in capturing nearly all of the pickets of Company H. 5th Regular Cavalry. A scouting party of Company F. about the same time was attacked by a large rebel force, but they made good fight on the retreat. Our small force burned and destroyed their tents, &c., and the rebels succeeded in taking a few prisoners. Our forces retreated to the Chickahominy, but the rebels did not follow. The rebels now hold possession of Old Church, but will probably be driven off tomorrow.

June 20. The Buffalo Commercial says there can no longer be any doubt that at last General McClellan has been generously reinforced. The Pennsylvania reserve, 8000 strong, is now with him, so are ten regiments which have during most of the year been in the neighborhood of Newport News, Old Point, &c., and so also is McDowell corps at least 30,000 strong.

In addition to this, several New York regiments, including the 10th and 101st regiments, with others, have joined Gen. McClellan's forces within ten days.

June 19. An intelligent Union refugee has furnished the Herald with important and interesting information of affairs in Richmond, from which place he made his escape a few days since. He states that since the appointment of Lee as General-in-Chief, nearly the whole army has been concentrated near Richmond. The conscription act is rigidly enforced, the conscripts being placed in the ranks of old regiments in the field.

Jeff. Davis is hated by the army as a stubborn, self-willed tyrant, and Beauregard has lost prestige, though they still hold the delusion of a rebel victory at Shiloh.

Correspondents are excluded from all the camps, and the soldiers are not allowed to write to their friends.

The negroes are daily growing more openly in insubordination, and the burning of the city is by some considered certain.

The rebel army around Richmond cannot amount to less than 150,000. This army is well disciplined and effective, and has unbounded confidence in Gen. Joseph Johnston. The rebel soldiers still believe that the tide will be turned against Gen. McClellan, and then the war will be carried across the Potomac into Maryland and the North. The army of Johnston is constantly receiving reinforcements, and he expects to hold our army in check until the impatience of England and France in reference to Southern cotton and tobacco shall result in bringing those nations to the rescue.

Jackson has been reinforced by 12,000 men.

Gen. Fremont is in a very exposed position and no reinforcements are on the way to him. It is believed that much of the Corinth army is to be sent to secure the supplies of wheat in the Shenandoah valley.

Shelbyville, June 12. Our expedition into East Tennessee has proved successful. We are returning with eighty prisoners, including a number of prominent officers, also captured a drove of cattle and a large quantity of horses, intended for the rebel army. We silenced the enemy's batteries at Chattanooga on the evening of the 7th, after a fierce cannonading of three hours. We opened on the 8th at nine rifle pits, driving the enemy out and forcing him to abandon his works and evacuate the city. They burnt several railroad bridges to prevent pursuit. The Union people in East Tennessee are wild with joy. They meet us along the roads by hundreds.

New Orleans, June 2. On repairing to the place where the Chief Commissary of subsistence was selling provisions to the people at low rates, we found, as we expected, an immense jam of people, most of whom were standing in the broiling hot sun, waiting their turn for them to be introduced to the place where flour was selling at seven and a half cents a pound, and salt meats at ten cents. It is not probable that more than a third of the crowd were able to go in, as we saw a large number returning from the scene with empty baskets and disappointed looks.

Memphis, June 19. On the 17th the gunboats St. Louis, Mound City, Lexington and Conestoga, and New National, having on board the 46th Ind. Regiment, Col. Fitch, which left here a week ago to open communication with Gen. Curtis' army, and remove the obstructions from White River, ascended that stream. The gunboat Mound City, Capt. Kelty commanding, was about a mile and a half in advance in the bend in the river near St. Charles, when two concealed batteries opened upon her. Her decks were immediately cleared for action, and as soon as the range of the works was obtained, fire was opened. Capt. Kelty signalled Col. Fitch to land his force below the Fort, which was successfully accomplished. The gunboats Lexington and St. Louis shelled the works, under cover of which Col. Fitch gained the rear of the rebel position. At this juncture a ball from a siege gun struck the forward and port side of the Mound City, penetrating the casements, and passed through the steam drum. The vessel was filled with escaping vapor. Nearly every man on board was scalded. Only 23 of the officers and crew out of 175 escaped from injuries.

The scene which ensued was horrible. Many of the crew, frantic with pain, jumped overboard, and some were drowned. The rebels fired on the men in the water, murdering most of those who were attempting to escape. Being apprised of the state of affairs in the river, Col. Fitch's regiment pushed forward and carried the Fort by storm at the point of the bayonet.

The crew of the Mound City consisted of 175, of whom 120 were killed and wounded.

Corinth, June 22. It is positively ascertained that Beauregard has turned over his command to Bragg.

On the 15th he left for Montgomery, accompanied by his personal staff, en route for Richmond.

Major Gen. McClellan's Headquarters, June 22—8 P. M.

This has been a remarkably quiet day, considering the close proximity of the two contending forces.

Brisk skirmishing ensued all day yesterday, and at night everything indicated that a general engagement was at hand. The enemy advanced in strong force on our lines during last night, but being promptly met soon retired

The Richmond papers say that Beauregard is to be followed by a large portion of the army of the Mississippi.

Fortress Monroe, June 23. Richmond papers of the 21st contain brief accounts of a bloody battle on Monday last between five Federal regiments and a battery of Parrott guns, and parts of four Confederate regiments and a battery. The battle lasted all day with heavy loss on both sides. The fight was within four miles of Charleston.

New York, June 23. A Fortress Monroe letter says a member of the Governor's Guard of Richmond, who was captured at Ashland, states that Beauregard is second in command at Richmond, and that a number of his troops have arrived there.

Great fears are expressed by the rebels of the fall of Richmond if our reinforcements come up.

Washington, June 21. A gentleman direct from the headquarters of the army of the Potomac is confident that a week or ten days must elapse before Gen. McClellan will be "in position" to reduce Richmond.

Yesterday the rebels opened upon Gen. Hooker's advance with shell, but did no serious damage. Gen. Hooker answered from our powerful new batteries, which have just been completed, the shells of which were seen to burst among the rebel attacking party by persons in one of Prof. Lowe's balloons, causing the rebel artillerymen to retire.

Our troops are represented as enthusiastic in view of a prospect of a great and decisive battle.

New York, June 23. The World's Washington dispatch says a rumor is in circulation to the effect that Secretary Stanton is about to relinquish the charge of the War Department and that Major General Banks will take the place vacated.

Washington, June 20. The President has approved the bill securing freedom in all present as well as future territories of the United States.

Louisville, June 22. On Friday evening as several Unionists were returning from a meeting, five of them were killed by the rebels in ambush near Berry's Station. Reinforcements were immediately sent from Lexington, and other places, and their capture is considered certain.

New York, June 21. The gunboat Connecticut which arrived on Saturday, brought intelligence from Mobile. We annex a summary of it

The rebel forces at Mobile, which were weakened for the purpose of assisting in the defence of Corinth, have been largely reinforced, and efforts are making to render the position too strong to be captured. Immense earthworks are going up, the rebels working night and day to complete them.

The rebels have determined to hold Mobile, and if the result of the operations at all other places prove disastrous, to make the final struggle here.

The Emancipation Bill.

The emancipation bill which has passed the House discharges from service and declares to be freemen the slaves of five classes of rebel officers, of which the list has been published more than once. It then continues the declaration as follows:

"Sixthly. Of every person not embraced in the foregoing classes, who, after the passage of this act, being actually, willfully, and without coercion or compulsion, engaged in armed rebellion against the Government of the United States, shall not, within sixty days after public warning and proclamation duly given and made, at his discretion, by the President of the United States, lay down his arms and return to his allegiance to the United States."

To complete in this connection the main penalties declared against these six classes, we copy the seventh and last section of the bill, as follows:

"That every person embraced in any of the classes specified in section one of this act shall forever hereafter be incapable of holding or exercising any office of honor, trust, or profit under the Government of the United States"

The second section provides for the appointment of commissioners for each slave State, who shall make out a list of the above classes of persons and of the slaves claimed by them; and regulates the manner in which those who are alleged to be in the sixth class may prove the compulsory character of their rebel service, and also prescribes the general judicial process applicable to the cases. Section third provides for the perfection of the lists under all circumstances. Section fourth gives the discharged persons and their descendants the benefit of the habeas corpus act. Section fifth requires that when any person seeks to enforce his claim for service against any slave, he shall first file an affidavit that he does not belong to any of the six classes specified in the act. The sixth section authorizes the President to negotiate for the acquisition of lands in Mexico, Central America, South America, or in the islands of the Gulf, or for the right of settlement therein, where the persons liberated under this act may be removed "with their own consent," and from forty to eighty acres of land set apart for the use of each man or head of a family—for meeting which expenses, the President shall use such moneys as Congress may from time to time direct, arising out of the sales of the property formerly owned by rebels, and which shall have been confiscated to the use of the United States. Such is the substance of the whole bill.—Boston Journal.

TROUBLE BREWING IN THE EAST.—The last arrival from Europe brings an important rumor that the Russian government has addressed a circular to all its agents in the East, recommending them to make preparations for their departure, a rupture of diplomatic relations between St. Petersburg and Constantinople being imminent. It is further reported that Napoleon intends to support the Emperor of Russia in his designs upon Turkey.—New York Evening Post.

Married.

In Yarmouth, Me., May 20th, by R. R. York, Bro. ALFRED B. CROSBY to Sr. JULIA W. GILMAN, both of Lewiston, Me.

Notices, &c.

Fourth of July Meeting.

The meeting held for two years on the 4th, in the grove on Bro. Higgins' place in Palmer, and advertised to be there again this year, will be held on the camp ground in Wilbraham, and continue over the following Sunday. All that can come, are invited. Bring your provisions with you, unless you want to board at the hotel. Two tents will be raised to accommodate those who wish to stop on the ground one night. Bro. Ross and Wendell are invited and expected, with others. Baptism and the Lord's Supper will be attended to. For the Church, A. M. HASCOM[illegible]

Special Notice.

The Grove and Campmeeting advertised to commence at Tremont, Mass., June 24th, is changed to July 1st.

Campmeeting at Wilbraham.

It is thought best that our great annual gathering at Wilbraham commence this year Monday, Aug. 25th, and continue one week. Particulars hereafter.

F. H. BERICK, MILES GRANT, GEO. T. ADAMS, Committee of Arrangements.

Barn Meeting.

There will be a barn meeting at Orange, N. H., commencing Friday, June 27th, in Bro. S. K. Ford's barn, at 2 o'clock, P. M., and holding over the Sabbath. It is desirable that Brn Hook, Ford, and Simpson, be at this meeting to assist in holding up the truth before the people of Orange, before it is too late. Brethren, I hope that you will make this meeting a subject of prayer.

Brethren and sisters in that region, we want your help. Come one, come all.

B. P. MANNING, for the brethren.

Notice.

The Lord willing, a two days meeting will be held at Norwalk, O., commencing Saturday, July 5th, and continuing over Lord's day. We extend a cordial invitation to all the brethren in this section to come and worship the Lord with us. Elder John T. Ongley will be with us to minister in the word of life, and we shall be happy to see other preaching brethren here also.

Yours in hope, P. B. HOYT.

Notice.

A special conference of the Iowa, Minn., and Wis. Christian Conference will be held in connection with the grove meeting at Hesper, Almikee Co., Iowa, July 4th, 1862. Hope to see many preachers and delegates, as there is business of importance, in which all are interested. WM SHELDON, Pres.
PETER S. W. DEYO, Clerk.

P. S. We expect to have the New England Mission Tent.

Grove and Camp Meeting.

Good news to the happy souls who gathered last year at Tremont, Mass., for divine worship in the grove. There will be another grove and campmeeting in the vicinity of the Tremont Depot, West Wareham, Mass, commencing Tuesday evening, July 1st, 1862, and continuing over the following Sunday. Eld. M. Grant, H. L. Hastings, if possible, and others will be present to preach the word. Many things promise to make this an interesting and profitable meeting. First, the blessing of God upon us last year. Those who were there will welcome us again, and bring others with them. Second, its location—easy of access to many churches. It is situated on the Fairhaven and Boston, R. R., at its junction with the Cape Cod R. R.; fare reduced on this road from Middleboro and New Bedford. We expect a good representation from New Bedford, Mattapoisett, Plymouth, Carver, Middleboro, Taunton, and perhaps from Boston. Third, its accommodations; a beautiful grove, in the midst of an orderly people; good board provided cheaper than by ourselves; lodging in private dwellings near by, or in tents, as chosen. Fourth, the cheering evidences that we are nearing our eternal home, cannot fail to awaken an unusual interest in every believing heart. Come then, one and all, prepare for a good meeting, pray much about it; come to labor for precious souls; come full of the blessing of Christ; come early; come to stay through the meeting; come, and may many kind friends in Tremont bless the day of our coming. In behalf of many brethren,

H. F. CARPENTER.

Information.

To the churches in the vicinity of Plainville, Ct., I would say, having moved to Plainville, I desire to devote my time to the cause of Christ in Plainville and the adjoining towns, as the Lord may seem to direct. I have a standing appointment in Plainville once in four weeks. My next appointment here is July 13th. I hope to hear from the churches in this vicinity soon.

The preaching brethren who wish to visit Plainville to preach, will please confer with Bro. George Morgan, who is corresponding Secretary of the Church. My P. O. address is Plainville, Ct. WM. A. FENN.

Notice.

By divine permission, the annual meeting of Adventists will be held in Kingston, N. H., on Friday, the 4th of July next, (in a grove most probably) commencing at 10 1-2 o'clock, A. M. Eld. A. Hale, of Charlestown, Mass., will be with us. Brethren and sisters from the sister churches, we cordially invite, and whosoever will, let them come.

F. GALE.

Special Book Notice.

In fulfillment of a long cherished purpose, I am happy to present my friends with a list of my books, at reduced prices, as follows, till further notice:—

Reasons for my Hope, and the Tokens of its Speedy Realization. 24 mo. Paper, 25 cts. Cloth, 40 cts.

Containing an exposition of the hope of the Church—abounding in facts pertaining to Prophecy, the signs of the times, the increase of knowledge, spread of the Gospel, Missions, Tracts, Bible translations, Bible societies &c. The Statistics alone are worth many times the price of the book.

Retribution; or, The Doom of the Ungodly, after the Resurrection of the Dead, Just and Unjust. Paper, 25 cts. Cloth, 40 cts.

A solemn and earnest argument in proof of the resurrection of the dead, just and unjust; the punishment of the ungodly in the lake of fire, the second death; and a refutation of the notion that wicked men have no resurrection, judgment or conscious punishment after death. Judging from the reception it meets with, it hits the nail on the head!

Pauline Theology; or, The Scripture Doctrine of Future Punishment, as taught in the Epistles of Paul. 12th 1000. Paper, 15 cts.

This work contains the passages on future punishment found in Paul's FOURTEEN EPISTLES. His words are quoted and defined in Greek and English. Many, upon reading it, have given up their sectarian theology to embrace the theology of Paul. The wide circulation of the work, which has never been refuted, indicates its value and interest.

The Old Paths; or, The Primitive Doctrine of a Future Life. 2d 1000. Paper, 15 cts.

Beginning where Pauline theology closes, this treatise exhibits the teachings of all the Apostolical Fathers, as found in the writings bearing their names, such as Barnabas, Clement, Hermas, Ignatius, and Polycarp, giving large quotations illustrating their opinions upon the questions of Life, Immortality, Future Punishment, and the Kingdom of God.

Tracts on Immortality: containing Pauline Theology, The Old Paths, Milton on the State of the Dead, and other minor tracts. Bound in cloth, 50 cts.

Tracts on Prophecy: containing more than Twenty pointed, stirring, and earnest Tracts on Prophetical and Practical subjects. Bound in cloth, 50 cts.

The Perfect State; or, Forever with the Lord. A Book of Instruction and Consolation. PREPARING. $1.00.

This work contains a statement of the Scripture teachings concerning how men shall come to be forever "with the Lord;" including lengthy and critical discussions of Paradise, Hades, Sheol, the Intermediate State, and other kindred subjects; while it serves to cheer the heart-stricken and with the hope of glory when Christ, who is our life, shall appear.

The Voice of the Church on the Coming and Kingdom of the Redeemer; or, a History of the Doctrine of the Reign of Christ on Earth. By D. T. Taylor. Edited and revised by H. L. Hastings. 4th edition. 420 pp. 12mo. Price, $1.00.

This is the ablest work extant on this subject. It proves that the common notion of the world's conversion was unknown to the Church of Christ for 1500 years. It quotes the views of some four hundred of the greatest theologians [illegible] of each, and presenting their statements in [illegible] own words. Multitudes of commendatory notices [illegible] and papers, of all kinds, might be quoted. [illegible]

Spiritualism a Satanic Delusion and a Sign of the Times. By William Ramsey, D. D. Edited by H. L. H. [illegible] 25 cts. Paper, 25 cts.

A masterly exposé of the grand delusion of the age, which has shielded many and recovered some from this snare of Satan. The author, a profound scholar, long conversant with [illegible] tations among the heathen, [illegible] much light upon the question of this strong delusion.

For the Crisis.

The following poem has been offered to a religious (?) paper in this city for publication, but was declined on account of the sentiment in the first stanza, though the Editors admitted it was in harmony with the gospel. O, when will ministers (?) dare to proclaim the truth to the people? Will you do me the favor to insert it in your next issue, and oblige the author?

The Man for Me.

AIR—"The Rose that all are praising."

BY R. THAYER.

I.

O, he is not the man for me
Who will his brother slay,—
Who hates and kills his enemy,
While he for him doth pray!
But he who can a wrong forgive,
Who seeks with all at peace to be,
Whose motto is—"Live and let live,"—
O, he's the man for me;
O, he's the man for me;
O, he's the man for me.

II.

O, he is not the man for me,
A brother's purse who'll drain,
Reducing him to penury
For sake of "paltry gain;"
But he who will the "cup" withhold,
Which leads to vice and misery,
More do I prize than mines of gold,—
O, he's the man for me, etc.

III.

O, he is not the man for me
To "despots" who'll succumb,
While millions, robbed of liberty,
Lie bleeding, bound, and dumb:
But he whose living words of light
Ring through the land, from sea to sea,—
In favor of each human right,
O, he's the man for me, etc.

IV.

He, sure, is not the man for me
Whose voice o'er hill and plain
Is heard in praise of Liberty,
Yet puts on man the "chain!"
But he who dares for "Freedom" strike,
While others wink at Slavery,—
He is the man whom most I like,
O, he's the man for me, etc.

Boston, Mass.

Our Work.

The Lord has a particular work for his people to do now; a work that prophets and apostles and none of his children living in the past could do. "Watch, thererore; for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come." Matt. 24; 42. The prophets and apostles foretold of this time, and the word of God abounds in instruction, showing how the people, who may live in the watching time, can know the fact, and what their work is. Watch! The long dark night of sin is soon to be broken by the sounding of the trump of God; and the danger of being thrown off our watch and falling asleep increases as we near the morning. A person watching with the sick finds it most difficult to keep awake near morning, and the Lord would have us profit by this simple fact, and take warning from it.

When a building is constructed, the first work to be done is to prepare the frame. After it is raised, then follows the covering, fitting of doors, windows and floors, and so on till it is completed. There is a particular work to be done to fit each piece to its proper place, and a particular time to put it in that place. So in the construction of the "spiritual house," of which every christian forms a part. 1 Peter 2: 5.

The prophets and apostles laid the foundation, under Christ the Master builder, and after they had finished their work, and left instruction for their successors, they died. Generation after generation has passed, the work has been steadily progressing, and some of the workmen were required to pass through persecution, even laying down their lives, in order to do their work. When this work was required, God had a people to do it, and their testimony was sealed in blood. According to the instruction of the Master Builder, the time has come in which the last work is being done to finish the "spiritual house." The last ones are being gathered from highways and hedges, ere the Master Builder returns to view "his work before him," and reward the faithful. Isa. 40: 10.

The last notes of warning are being given to the world, and now is the time to do this work. "Multitudes" are "in the valley of decision," (Joel 3: 14) deciding whether to believe the day of the Lord is near, and prepare for it, or be left to wonder, despise and perish. They are waiting for evidence enough to convince them, and will be convinced when the heavens depart as a scroll, and they are left to perish. The children of God will know and do their work, because they are already convinced that now is the time. God's will is to have his people in a waiting condition, directed by the wisdom that comes from above; and how great the need of patience, for the doing of God's will always brings the enmity of the world, persecution, scoff and frowns. The great adversary would have us get out of patience, which is the first step away from duty; hence the apostle Paul says, "Ye have need of patience, that, after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise." Heb. 10: 36.

A person can speak on no theme so unpopular, and so despised by the world, as the coming of the Lord, and immortality only through Christ by a resurrection from the dead. Professing christians of all denominations, although they may disagree and be divided on other questions, will all unite together with the nonprofessor to oppose this truth. Paul, before he came into the work of the Lord, and after he began to serve him, is an example of this kind. While he breathed "out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord," the High Priest, (called God's High Priest) Acts 23: 4, Acts 9: 1–2, was on intimate terms with him, both doing all they could to persecute God's children. After Paul's conversion, this same High Priest (Acts 23: 2) commanded him to be smitten "on the mouth," thus showing his hatred of him. We want our friends and neighbors to prepare for the Judgment, and we should urge them to escape the wrath to come; but we cannot compromise the truth for popularity, in order to gain their company. If friends forsake and persecute us for our faith in God's word, bear it patiently. We must expect it in this world, but "in the world to come life everlasting." Luke 18: 29–30.

Let us not mind the scoffs of the world, but keep at our work and not leave for the future what can be done now. Watch our conversation, and not let it be turned to worldly things, but see to it that we speak for Christ and his kingdom. "Behold the Judge standeth before the door."—James 5: 9. Don't say, from day to day, by word or act, "My Lord delayeth his coming," but be found giving "meat in due season." This is the work, and the finishing work. All the work to be done prior to this has been done. God had a people to do it, and a crown of life awaits those who are found in the performance of their work. Separation from the world and its enmity are occasioned, not by believing what has been in the past, but the present. The Jews believed a Savior was prophesied of, but when he came they rejected him. Let us take warning from their example, believe and be saved.

O. D. WOODRUFF.

Extracts from Dr. Herman Schultz.

"Christianity teaches us to hope for immortality. Not however as an abstract truth; it offers the same to us as a fact. The christian feels within his bosom that eternal life; he knows himself immortal; still, only in connection with Christ, (1 Cor. 15: 12); but at the same time, he feels that this immortality is not altogether a new thing, but an estate, an inheritance, which was lost and brought back again. For that which is recovered by Christ is that which was lost by Adam. The life which Christ has brought back again, was originally designed to be man's property, ere death came into the world by sin. So christianity knows of an immortality which belongs to man's nature. But how does this consciousness agree with that which we have before proved? We have seen that only God is the fountain of life; have also seen that the connection with him, which the creature as such received through his creation, does not suffice to put him in possession of this life; by it he may be preserved forever, but cannot be immortal, as this life is never within, but only without him, as there always remains the possibility of withdrawing that life from him. Therefore, we must come to the conclusion, that for human nature, if it is to be immortal, without being God, there must be opened another connection with God; a union, by which they are put in possession of the life in such a way that they can feel it as their own. Such a connection or union however is the ethic, (i. e. a relation to the highest being, which in regard to the same, presupposes a free determination on our side.) . . . . .

"When Gen. 1: 26; 2: 7, etc., present to us the creation of man, they place him on a perfect level with the rest of beings. The same word "dust" denotes his origin as that of the other beings. The life which animated him is like that of the beast, a divine breath, (Gen. 6: 3; Ps. 104: 29, etc.,) a breath which becomes his own, as every animal has it, which makes him conscious of his personal existence. According to his position, he is Lord and governor of the earth, (Gen. 1: 27; Ps. 8,) while the rest of creation only is of a relative value, so that it may be sacrificed on his account; but nevertheless, he is only dust and ashes compared with his Creator, a corruptible vessel by itself, a nothing, so that, if God would withdraw his breath, all flesh would perish, (Job 34: 13; Ps. 104: 29,) so that God, if he delivers man up to death, only needs to point him to the manner of his origin, his being made of dust, to which to return it would not only be nothing unnatural to man, but a natural consequence of his origin. (Gen. 3: 19.) In other respects, however, to man is from the beginning given a different position and destination than to the rest of the world. All other creatures receive their breath of life from the life-spirit which God has filled nature with, (Gen. 1: 20, 24,) but to man, God gives this breath of life himself directly, (2: 7) which at death, he takes again to himself, (Eccl. 3: 21; 12: 7,) while that of the animal creation is received back again by nature; (Eccl. 3: 21.) All else is only created, to fill out its place in the order of nature,—the creation of man however is brought in direct relation to God, (made in the image of God—Gen. 1: 26.)

"This indicates at the first sight, what a different position man was to occupy above all the animals. For because he was created in this way, the consequence is, that he shall and can rule over all that is living upon the earth, (besides man.) But that which thus distinguishes man from the rest of living creatures, must be something which, at all times and under all circumstances, is closely united with man's nature. For according to Gen. 5: 3, it is to be transferred upon the whole human race. Gen. 9: 5; 1 Cor. 11: 8; James 3: 9. However, this expression, image of God, is used from human nature, after their moral conduct has entirely changed. Neither can it be holiness, which, (as Hoffman truly remarks,) the expression (image) contains; but something which man possesses according to his nature. But man, as man, is not to be distinguished from all the other creatures by his form, neither by his life, nor because he is conscious of himself, and able to form impressions that are made upon his senses, into distinct ideas. It is this that distinguishes him from all animals, because he is susceptible of divine things, and able to enter into relationship with God, so that in his will, (in opposition to the animal instinct) in his knowledge, and in his feeling for spiritual things, he possesses the power to bring the absolute spirit, with which he, according to his creation, has already formed a connection now into a second relationship with himself, to draw the spirit by his will, his knowledge, his feeling into himself, and voluntarily unite it with his own being."

Be Brave.

Be brave! and manfully breast
The dark waters; look not
On the fearful wave when drest
In white foam, look away
To yon starry light on the shore:
There's a beacon to save
Thee, thy voyage soon is o'er—
Home awaits thee—be brave!

Trust not past efforts, though brave,—
Will they now push the oar?
Work! was the pass-word gave
When thy boat left the shore;
And when hearts trembled with fear,
Clear rose thy song o'er the wave:
Now as the shore you near,
Trust the same arm to save;
Struggle! for life is dear,
Home awaits thee—be brave!

Correspondence.

From Bro. L. Boutell.

BRO. GRANT:—I have recently spent two Sundays, and the intervening time, at Vernon, Vt., preaching "this gospel," so elevating, so heart-cheering, so world-separating, so uniting, bringing harmony, peace, love, brotherly-kindness, self-denial, and reproach to all true believers; but it must be preached. It must be received, and believed, for it is the only remedy for sin. The embodiment of this gospel is Jesus Christ, the way, the truth, the life. Then it surely stands all in hand to "take heed" to themselves, "and unto the doctrine; continue in them"; that they may save themselves and them that hear.

I found quite a change in five years, since I last visited this people. Some of the good and faithful had fallen in death, leaving companions to weep and mourn; but they fell asleep in Jesus, and will awake in the morn of the resurrection. They have a very neat chapel, and the cause seemed to be in a prosperous state. Quite a number have fallen in love with what is reproachfully called "Millerism," and think it not so "incredible . . . that God should raise the dead." Thus the truth is gaining ground, and the people begin to think it the wisest after all to get good religion, and be ready for the coming of the Lord, while it hasteth greatly.

Bro. Champlin is among them, laboring successfully one half of the time. I had a pleasant time with him and family;—wish them prosperity in the vineyard of the Lord. It was really refreshing to see the old pilgrims still holding on, with heads uplifted, looking for redemption. I found Bro. Gould, of Erving, bereaved, lonely, and afflicted in the loss of his wife, who fell asleep in Jesus last Nov., after a long and severe sickness for years, which she endured patiently till the last. God bless him in this trying time, and keep him till the day of redemption.

At Athol, I found a few faithful ones still looking for the same blessed hope; and the Lord has added to their numbers such as I hope will be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus.

I had the favor of the Lord and a good hearing in Vernon; also good fellowship with the brethren; and if they will see that their spiritual prosperity and progression keep up fully with their worldly, they will come off conquerors; and even more, and get an abundant entrance into the kingdom of God.

O that our Brn., while not slothful in business, would be fervent in Spirit serving the Lord, keeping all on the altar, ready for translation and eternal life. "I have chosen you out of the world,"—"a peculiar people," "not your own," but Christ's, now and forever. Amen.

Groton, Mass.

From Chas. Stratton.

BRO. GRANT:—We commenced a series of meetings in Athens a few weeks since, which have resulted in the reclaiming of wanderers and the conversion of sinners, twenty-five or thirty in number. The few who were holding on for life through Christ have been encouraged. Thank the Lord for some victory in these last days, amid the scoffs of the world and ungodly professors. I rejoice that "the foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal, The Lord knoweth them that are his." The character of our meetings at times was such that we could hardly tell how the battle would turn. A number of the ministry came in occasionally with their superstitions and traditions; but there was only one on whom I could rely for help in time of need and that was Bro. Tripp, an old man full of years and good works. Finally the water of life rose higher and higher, until some of the drift-stuff passed off, and now we are expecting to see a small company that will stand on the word and promise of God, ready to every good word and work. We trust they will be found occupying when the Master comes. We believe that to be soon; and unto them that look for him he will appear the second time without sin unto salvation. Brethren, pray for us, that the word of God may have free course and be glorified.

Cornville, Me.

Extracts from Letters.

JEREMIAH CARR writes from So. Albion, Me.:—"Since the death of our dear boy in Oct., I have been doing what I could in preaching the gospel of the Kingdom at hand. Have preached from house to house and evenings and Sundays as the door was opened. Some received the word gladly, while others opposed. Have been at Unity, Troy, and East Newport. Found some that loved the Lord's coming. From Newport went to Palmyra. Spent one night with a preaching brother of the Christian church, who believes in the sleep of the dead, destruction of the wicked, and restitution of the earth, but does not preach it. He is educated and able to defend the truth, but concludes that it is not best to speak out on these doctrines. My prayer is, that God will raise up more that are willing to lay aside their honors and go into the work with a will, and show the people the truth—that the wages of sin is death and not eternal life in misery, and thereby try to save men from infidelity. How many there are who reject the Bible because they think it teaches the eternal conscious suffering of the wicked. May God help us to stand up for the truth. The conflict will soon be over, and then the crown of glory will be given to the faithful. Then the dear ones that we have lain away in the cold grave will live again and forever. May God help us to preach the whole gospel and rightly divide the word of truth. How precious are the moments that linger. The Lord is at hand!"

SR. A. P. MORRILL writes from Wolcott, Vt.:—"My heart is comforted while I read the soul-stirring communications from dear Brn. and Srs., and yet made sad by the cry for help from laborers, and the want of means in the vineyard of the Lord. Are not these the times of trial and temptation that shall come upon all the world to try them? I think these are the days when the Lord's children should keep awake, and watch unto prayer, that they may be found worthy to escape those things that are coming on the earth. Soon the Master will come.

"O! let us be ready to hail the glad day."

I am striving by the help of the Lord to bear the cross, fight the good fight of faith, and lay hold on eternal life.

'O for a faith that will not shrink,
Though pressed by many a foe;
That will not tremble on the brink
Of poverty or woe.'"

JAMES B. SKINNER writes from Kewanee, Ill.:—"I am so blind it is with difficulty I can write. I am in my 71st year—am a Vermonter, and out of the Congregational church. I am here alone, but with a multitude around me, as saith the prophet David. There are seven denominations in this village, all making a well-directed fire against Adventism. If any of our preaching brethren should come this way, I should be glad to wait on them. I live on Tremont street, eighty rods south of the depot, and am generally known. I am on the R. Road from Chicago to Burlington and Quincy, 135 miles west of Chicago."

Reverend.

"But be not ye called Rabbi: for one is your Master, even Christ; and all ye are brethren."—Matt. 23: 8.

How dare any, in the face of this plain teaching, assume any title, or suffer any title to be appended? Is it not following, evidently, the footsteps of these hypocrites whom our Savior is here condemning for a desire to be great? For he seems to sum up all titles by which men loved to be called; as Master, Father, etc. Rabbi is an acknowledged name, or title of dignity, answering to Doctor, Master, or Reverend. Reverend is defined by Butterworth to mean fearful. We understand that a Father, Master, Rabbi, or Reverend, all imply a superiority to which obedience must be paid; to whom honor, reverence, and fear are due. We may well define all, thus: Rabbi, fearful, to be feared; Reverend, fearful, or to be feared; Master, fearful, or to be feared; Father, [as applied to Catholic priests,] fearful, to be feared; Doctor, learned, on which account he is august, fearful, to be feared. "But be not ye called Rabbi," or, seek to be feared, but "I say unto you," "fear not" man; "but I will forewarn you whom ye shall fear;" fear God, reverence him. "One is your Master, even Christ. . . . Call no man your father upon the earth; for one is your Father, which is in heaven."

Dear brother, let piety, humility, and love, so abound, as to stimulate you to action; and men will love you for the work's sake. For "whosoever shall exalt himself, shall be abased; and he that shall humble himself, shall be exalted." Yea, be humble, brother, except ye think it wise to "love the praise of men more than the praise of God."

Business Rules.

1. Do not undertake a business with which you are not perfectly acquainted, any sooner than you would attempt, if blind, to survey a city. First thoroughly understand what you propose to do. Serve an apprenticeship, do anything, before taking a single step involving risk.

2. Never attempt a business for which you have no taste or tact. Seek to that for which you have a natural faculty and relish. Don't aspire to be a merchant, when you should be a farmer, a mechanic, or a day-laborer.

3. Never connect yourself in partnership with those in whom you have not perfect confidence—with those to whom you would not be willing, sick or well, at home or abroad, living or dead, to intrust all your business affairs.

4. Never attempt to do more business than you can safely do on your own capital.

5. Avoid taking the extraordinary risks of long credits, no matter what profits are in prospect.

6. Give no credit whatever to any one who does not possess a good moral character.

7. Supervise, carefully, your own business, (not your neighbor's,) and look after your clerks, and see that they are faithful in the performance of all their duties.

8. Let all those with whom you have dealings of intercourse, understand, distinctly, that you will not lend yourself, for the sake of trade, to do any mean thing—anything which your conscience will not approve of.

9. Never lend your name by indorsement or otherwise, except under most extraordinary circumstances, and then let the act be guarded with every possible security.

10. Never allow yourself, or your partners, to draw a dollar from the concern, to invest in any "outside operation" whatever.

11. In forming a co-partnership, insist that a limited, fixed sum only shall be drawn by each partner, for personal expenses.

12. Under no circumstances whatever deal in stocks. Don't believe any one of the thousand marvelous tales of a fortune in that direction. They are a trap and a lie.

13. Keep all your accumulated profits in your business, so long as you owe a dollar. When you have more capital than you can use, then it will be proper to invest it outside.

14. Borrow of banks or other sources never, if it can be avoided. If temporary assistance is needed, seek it from a tried friend or from a sound banking institution, and then return the loan, on the day fixed, with the most rigid punctuality.

15. Have an eye on the condition of the country, its crops, and the general prospects for business, and look out sharp for the movements of politicians, who, in nine cases out of ten, care more for a re-election than for our national prosperity.

There are other and most important matters which should not be forgotten. Keep good company. Value integrity more than money. Live within your means. Eschew wine, theaters, and fast horses. Use no profane language. Never quarrel with a partner. Be kind, considerate, and generous to clerks, and also to your unfortunate debtors. Cultivate the friendship of all. Do your proper share in promoting the public weal. Be a man, a gentleman, and a christian; and you will make sure of an inheritance in this life and of untold riches in the life which is to come.—New York Independent.

"I was a stranger, and ye took me not in."

An editor who is also a preacher had an appointment to preach, on a recent Lord's day, some twelve miles distant from the city. Having no assistants, and desiring very much to get out a good paper, he kept at work until seven o'clock Saturday evening. Hastening to the cars he found himself, at nearly eight, on the way to his appointment. At Carlisle he left the train, expecting to take an omnibus, fare 25c., to Germantown, a distance of four miles. But the omnibus was not at the station. A hack, however, was in waiting.

"Will you take me to Germantown this evening?" said the preacher to the hackman.

"Yes, sir."

"What will you charge me?"

"One dollar."

"I will walk," said the preacher, and the fact that he had but a half dollar in his pocket, was an argument in favor of the use of his own legs.

After walking two miles on a dark road, in sand and gravel, he resolved to stop and take lodgings for the night, and addressing a man who was standing by the gate before a nice, large white house, he said—

"How far is it to Germantown?"

"Two miles."

"Two miles! Well, sir, I had the misfortune to miss the omnibus at Carlisle, and as I am weary and somewhat unwell, I would be glad to get a place to sleep till morning. I reside in Dayton, am a preacher, and have an appointment to preach at Germantown to-morrow morning, at 10 A. M."

"O, you can stay, no doubt," said the hired man. "Mr. C., the Presbyterian minister, is here. Walk in."

The preacher walked in, and addressing the man of the house, he related his case, omitting the fact that he was a preacher, and asked shelter until morning.

It was refused. He was not even asked to sit down. It was after nine o'clock, and he was told that he would find a hotel at Germantown, only two miles distant.

The preacher walked out of the parlor into the dusty road, resumed his line of march, and after thanking God for this new experience and its lessons, he sang,

"We are out on the ocean sailing,
Homeward bound we sweetly glide."

True, there is some little difference between "sailing, gliding," etc., and walking a gravel road, but a slight effort of the imagination removed this difficulty entirely. Ten o'clock found our preacher at his journey's end, under one of the most hospitable roofs in the Miami Valley.—Religious Telescope.

What constitutes a "good" Editor?

Many people estimate the ability of a newspaper, and the industry and talents of its editor by the quantity of editorial matter which it contains. It is comparatively a easy task for a frothy writer to pour out daily columns of words—words, upon any and all subjects. His ideas may flow in "one weak, everlasting flood," and his command of language may enable him to string them together like bunches of onions, and yet his paper may be a meagre and poor concern. But what is the labor and toil of such a man, who displays his "leaded matter" never so largely, to that imposed on the judicious, well-informed editor, who exercises his vocation with an hourly consciousness of responsibilities, and devotes himself to the conduct of his paper with the same care and assiduity that a sensible lawyer bestows on a suit, or a humane physician upon a patient, without regard to show or display. Indeed, the mere writing part of editing a paper, is but a small portion of the work. The care is the time employed in selecting far more important matter, and the fact of a good editor is better shown by his selections than any thing else, and that we know is half the battle. But, as we have said, an editor ought to be estimated, and his labors understood and appreciated, by the general conduct of his paper—its tone—its temper—its uniform, consistent course—its principles—its aims—its manliness—its dignity—its propriety. To preserve these as they should be preserved, is enough to occupy fully the time and attention of any man. If to this be added the general supervision of the newspaper establishment, which most editors have to encounter, the wonder is how they can find room to write at all.—Exchange.

SEVEN FOOLS.—1. The envious man—who sends away his mutton, because the person next to him is eating venison.

2. The jealous man—who spreads his bed with stinging nettles, and then sleeps on it.

3. The proud man—who gets wet through sooner than ride in the carriage of an inferior.

4. The litigious man—who goes to law in the hope of ruining his opponent, and gets ruined himself.

5. The extravagant man—who buys a herring, and takes a cab to carry it home.

6. The angry man—who learns the trombone, because he is annoyed by the playing of his neighbor's piano.

7. The ostentatious man—who illumines the outside of his house most brilliantly, and sits inside in the dark.

"FOUND GOD IN SECRET."—He who has not found God in secret has never met with him. He is found in the sanctuary, but only by those who have also found him in the closet. Those whose religious enjoyments are connected with the public worship of God, and with external acts with reference to his cause, may well fear lest they are trusting to a false hope. The soul which has a good hope enters the closet, and there finds God, and at times enjoys a nearness of access and a felt communion rarely experienced in the place where public prayer is wont to be made.

☞ Henry Ward Beecher says of tobacco:—"If there ever was a weed whose roots went down till they drew sap from below, that is it. A snuffing, smoking, chewing, spitting minister, ought to have a church in a spit-box. He is not fit to stand in ordinary congregations, nor to live in ordinary families.

Hygiene.

"THIS IS FOR YOUR HEALTH."—Paul.

How to Eat Wisely.

The great sources of mischief from eating are three: Quantity, Frequency, Rapidity; and from these come the horrible dyspepsias which make of human life a burden, a torture, a living death.

RAPIDITY.—By eating fast, the stomach, like a bottle being filled through a funnel, is full and overflowing before we know it. But the most important reason is, the food is swallowed before time has been allowed to divide it in sufficiently small pieces with the teeth; for, like ice in a tumbler of water, the smaller the bits are, the sooner are they dissolved. It has been seen with the naked eye, that, if solid food is cut up in pieces small as half a pea, it digests almost as soon, without being chewed at all, as if it had been well masticated. The best plan, therefore, is for all persons to thus comminute their food; for even if it is well chewed, the comminution is no injury, while it is of very great importance in case of hurry, forgetfulness, or bad teeth. Cheerful conversation preven s rapid eating.

FREQUENCY.—It requires about five hours for a common meal to be dissolved and pass out of the stomach, during which time this organ is incessantly at work, when it must have repose, as any other muscle or set of muscles, after such a length of effort. Hence persons should not eat within less than a five hours' interval. The heart itself is at rest more than one third of its time. The brain perishes without repose. Never force food on the stomach.

All are tired when night comes; every muscle of the body is weary and looks to the bed; but just as we lie down to rest every other part of the body, if we, by a hearty meal, give the stomach five hours' work, which, in its weak state, requires a much longer time to perform than at an earlier hour of the day, it is like imposing upon a servant a full day's labor just at the close of a hard day's work; hence the unwisdom of eating heartily late in the day or evening; and no wonder it has cost many a man his life.

No laborers or active persons should eat an atom later than sun-down, and then it should not be over half the mid-day meal. Persons of sedentary habits or who are at all ailing, should take absolutely nothing for supper beyond a piece of cold stale bread and butter, or a ship-biscuit, with a single cup of warm drink. Such a supper will always give better sleep and prepare for a heartier breakfast, with the advantage of having the exercise of the whole day to grind it up and extract its nutriment. Never eat without an inclination.

QUANTITY. It is variety which tempts to excess; few will err as to quantity who will eat very slow. Take no more than a quarter of a pint of warm drink, with a piece of cold stale bread and butter, one kind of meat, and one vegetable, or one kind of fruit. This is the only safe rule of general application, and allows all to eat as they want.

Cold water at meals instantly arrests digestion, and so will much warm drink; hence a single tea cup of drink, hot or cold, is sufficient for any meal.

For half an hour after eating sit erect, or walk in the open air. Avoid severe study or deep emotion, soon after eating. Do not sit down to a meal under great grief or surprise, or mental excitement.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Health for Children.

Three times as many children die in cities as in the country, and half the children born do not reach ten years. Such a result could not have been intended by the wise and kind Maker of us all. A different result must be brought about, by the exercise of the reason which is implanted in all parents, and which, if properly cultivated and practised in the lights of our time, would soon work a wonderful change in infantile mortality. 1. Children should sleep in separate beds, on mattresses of straw or shocks of corn. 2. Require them to go to bed at a regular early hour, and let them have the fullest amount of sleep they can take, allowing them in no case to be waked up. 3. Except a rug beside the bed, there should be no carpet on the floor of their chamber, no bed or window curtains, no clothing of any description hanging about, no furniture beyond a dressing-table and a few chairs, no standing fluids, except a glass of water, and nothing at all in the way of food, or plants, or flowers. In short, a chamber should be the cleanest, driest, coolest, lightest, and most barren room in the house, in order to secure the utmost purity of air possible. 4. Make it your study to keep your children out of doors every hour possible, from breakfast time until sundown, for every five minutes so spent in joyous play, increases the probabilities of a healthful old age. 5. Let them eat at regular hours, and nothing between meals; eating thus, never stint them; let them partake of plain substantial food until they are fully satisfied. Multitudes of children are starved into dyspepsia. The last meal of the day should be at least two hours before retiring to rest. 6. Dress children warmly, woolen flannel next their persons during the whole year. By every consideration, protect the extemities well.—Hall's Journal of Health.

DIRECTIONS FOR CLEANING THE TEETH.—Brush the teeth well, both inside and out, every night and morning, with a moderately hard brush, constructed with three rows of bristles, standing so far apart that the elasticity of the hair may have its full play. Do not confine its operation to simply moving the brush across the faces of the teeth from side to side, but give it a rotary, and, as far as possible, a vertical direction, so that the bristles may spring in between the teeth, and free them from the particles of food, and the incipient deposits from the secretion of the tartar glands.—Dental Mirror.

☞ Mr. Seth Hunt, of Northampton, gives, in an exchange, the following statement of the success of treating with cold water a severe burn and scald in his family: "Cold water was applied by immersion, till the pain ceased; the water being changed as often as it became warm. The part was then kept swathed with wet bandages, a dry woolen one enveloping them, until the injury was healed. The healing was rapid, and effected without leaving a scar. The instant relief which the cold water gave from the excruciating pain, was highly gratifying."—Gen. Far.

☞ The Salem Observer learns from a reliable source that a case of death by cancer in the mouth and throat recently occurred in a neighboring State, which was no doubt caused by excessive smoking. The deceased was a gentleman highly respected and esteemed for his many virtues. His sufferings were most dreadful; at last the cancer, eating into the jugular vein, soon terminated his life. His age was fifty years.

Hymn.

To thee, O God, in joyful songs
We lift anew the strain of praise,
O! may thy love inspire our tongues,
While we our notes of gladness raise.

O Savior, thou the lost didst love,
And for them shed thy precious blood;
Now for us thou dost plead above,
Our priest at the right hand of God.

To thee, O God, at morning's dawn,
To thee at evening's silent hour,
Our hearts in joyful song are drawn,
To praise thy mercy, love and power.

Grant us, O Lord, thy peace and grace
In all the ways and woes of life,
And bring us then to see thy face
Beyond earth's conflicts, toils and strife.

Experience of a Baptist Minister.

The following experience of Bro. A. F. Pawley, of Oceanport, N. J., who has recently seen the light on the life and death question, will be read with interest. It was addressed to one of his brethren. We hope our brother will have courage to "stand up for Jesus" and his word.—G.

(Concluded.)

In this direction now lies my hope. I have given up my hopes of going to heaven (Jesus hath for us entered in), and I have ceased to add slime and well-burnt bricks to that Babel tower, and I fear God would confound me if I return to the work again; for I have learned that the earth is "given to the children of men," and "the meek shall inherit" it,—that "the righteous shall be recompensed in" it; also "the wicked and the sinner." This sphere will be good enough for me when the restitution is made; when shall be brought to pass the saying written, "Death is swallowed up in victory!"* Then this groaning creation will be delivered, and this tabernacle will "be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven," and "mortality" will "be swallowed up of life." In view of this, I join in the cry of John in response to the word, "Surely I come quickly,"—"Even so, come, Lord Jesus." In His return I see hope for the faithful and watchful. While he stays away I expect nothing but anarchy, war, and apostasy. In his return I see a religious, political, social, and humane necessity. So, dear Bro., whilst I dare to expose the sins of the church, I also differ from her in faith.

But this is not all. Bear with me, even though you consider it my folly. Man's nature and destiny are subjects of the utmost importance, and I rejoice that as a believer in the Lord Jesus Christ, although not as a true Baptist minister, I can take the word of God to prove all I believe on this subject. To begin, I affirm that the Bible does not teach the great contradiction of terms,—that mortal man has an immortal entity in him, or that death means life in misery. It is strange to me that man's teaching should charge God's word with such inconsistencies.

Dear Bro., you will concur with me, that there is no eternal life but through Jesus Christ. Circumstances have led me to investigate this subject; and my conclusions, in the fear of God, are, that man is a mortal soul, body, mind, breath or spirit, without any hope of living again but through Jesus Christ, whose office it is to give life as a favor to them that believe. The gospel is the good-will of God to man, that he should not perish, but have everlasting life, by believing on the Son of God. Now we find that this power is given to Jesus Christ, by God the Father; "that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life, and I (Jesus) will raise him up at the last day."—John 6: 40. Jesus is, according to this record, a Savior—life-giver. "The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ." For this I am branded as a heretic. But as God has given the judgment of this world into the hands of Jesus, his Son, I will leave them and their charge against me for the Lord to settle when he comes. This I know well, that no man can bring proof positive from the word of God, that man is an immortal; or that the wicked will ever be immortal. If so, why has not God told us in his word by other words than "death," "perish," "destroy," "consume away," "be as though they had not been," "shall not live," "like the beasts that perish," "burnt up," "like stubble," "chaff," "tow," "ashes," "everlasting destruction,"—(destruction without end), etc.? Our God is not the author of confusion, of ambiguity, or darkness, but of light, and in him is no darkness. But is not the word of God Babel itself, if these mean the opposite of what is written? And if not, alas! how has vain man exalted himself in this respect to be equal to his Maker, "who," Paul says, "only hath immortality."

Again, if man has natural immortality, then Jesus is not the "life,"—only happiness is the boon he confers on those "who, by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory, and honor, and immortality, eternal life." Now, dear Bro., I can praise the great God that his word teaches me why Jesus is "the Bread of Life." I am a mortal, "dead in trespasses and sins," without the life Jesus is able to bestow. Thank God for Jesus Christ! Life is the gift of the gospel, and a blessed crown of life awaits those who sleep in Jesus. Paul looked for it in view of his fighting "a good fight," finishing his course, and keeping the faith, as a bestowment in righteousness at the appearing of the Lord from heaven.

And now shall we let the man of tradition, or of perdition, take our crown? Let "no man take thy crown," is the counsel of Jesus. If we take this counsel, we must away with the badges of antichrist, our Rev's., our D. D's., and let Jewish fables go; let Plato and Socrates go; break every leading string of papacy, and come to the light, and no longer love "darkness rather than light." This much every one may know upon reflection, that no doctrine can be founded on an inference, metaphor, or symbol. A plain declaration does not exist in God's word that man has immortality innate, and you, my dear brother, know it. The opposite is plainly taught,—the substance of which is, that man is a unit, not a double entity, and he dies; and if he lives again, it must be through a Life-giver, who counts him "worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead"; for "God is not the God of the dead, but of the living." But you may say it is not contended that flesh hath immortality; the soul is the immortal part. But no, not if it can die; and the word says, "the soul that sinneth it shall die." Jesus says, "Fear not them which kill the body (as if he would say, I can give it life again), . . . but rather fear him (God) which is able to destroy both soul and body (both life and body) in hell."

There is not a thought in Scripture that recognizes man's soul as an entity separate from his body. The Greek word psukee, translated soul in our Bibles, is given in all lexicons I have ever seen as breath, life, the animal soul, principle of life. The same word is used where our translators have given us life, being, and person. And so it is also in the Old Testament. The Hebrews, according to the marginal reading, use the same word nephesh—soul—when speaking of the beast, as well as of man. See Gen. 1: 20, word translated "life,"—margin reads, soul. In verse 30, the word is translated life,—margin—Heb. a living soul; and this is all that can be claimed from chap. 2: 7; where our translators have given us,—"man became a living soul,"—the same as they might have translated the 30th verse of the first chapter, before man had any being. What "pre-eminence" then hath man "above the beast"? "Yea (the wise man says), they have all one breath." Man has no pre-eminence over beasts respecting innate immortality, but it has pleased God to place man under dispensations wherein he can be a candidate for immortality. This indeed seems to me to be the case before man fell—much more so now.

When we look at the testimony relating to the creation of man, and his curse or doom, because he sinned, we do not find one word that hath the shadow of immortality, applied to the man formed out of the ground, or in "the breath of life," by which he "became a living soul" (living creature). The plain history seems to inform us that God made a man capable of developing a character, and placed him on probation, to the intent that he might live by having access to the tree of life, which access he had as long as he was obedient to the mild law of Eden. Adam was subject to temptation. Desire is no sin if resisted. He did not resist, but gratified his own animal appetite, ate and died, being denied access to the tree of life. For this reason, Adam and all his race have returned to the dust again, nor would there have been any hope of a future life if God had not in mercy made a new and wise arrangement, in order that man might live; for God had a desire to the work of his hand. He never willed the death of any man, that he might forever perish, unless he did so of his own choice. It does not reflect upon the character of a great, good and holy God, to say we have no testimony that he knew Adam would disobey. We have no right to infer that God has at any time decided upon any of his creatures, whom he has placed under a law for the development of character, before that time of trial or probation is ended.

Eden was a failure for the time being, and the creation was subjected to vanity by "Him who hath subjected the same in hope." See Rom. 8: 19–24. When Jesus shall reign, then the lost kingdom of Eden will be restored. Death is the curse, and the resurrection is the only hope. Since Adam lost his privilege, the child of God groans for the redemption of his body; not for life at death—but death "swallowed up in victory." Now if this had not been the case, and Adam had possessed this (theological) double entity, he might have used language like the following to his Maker, when God said, "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return,"—"You have truly doomed my body to the ground, but on my soul you have not passed sentence, and this is my essential part. My thoughts cannot perish. Shake off this shell of clay, if you please; but my immortal entity must live on parallel with thyself. You have made a soul you cannot destroy!" Is not this theology? but does it not give God the lie also? Is it not much better for us to take God at his word and believe the record he has given us of his Son?

When God condemned Adam, he meant the whole man; and if there is any hope of life, it comes through the seed of the woman—the seed of promise to Abraham (Gen. 3: 15), Jesus Christ the Life-giver (Gen. 17: 6; Gal. 3: 16.) Let us then believe the testimony which God has testified of his Son, 1 John 5: 10–12,—"He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself; he that believeth not God, hath made him a liar; because he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son. And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son, hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God, hath not life." Here it is evident that some have life and some have not. Eternal life is a gift conferred (or to be conferred) on those who have the Son of God; and what is it to have him, but to believe what God hath testified concerning him, and keep his commands by taking Jesus as our great example and first fruits from the dead?

1 John 2: 22, asks, "Who is a liar, but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ? He is antichrist who denieth the Father and the Son." And yet in the face of such truth, the Father and Son are denied by making Jesus God himself; and by so doing making him his own Father. If Jesus is the Christ, he is the anointed one of God; and if anointed, he has right to a throne, a kingdom and subjects. He was "born king of the Jews," and was rejected; yet he was faithful, and died that we Gentiles might have what the Jews refused—life through the anointed one; and there yet remains to be fulfilled the angel's salutation (Luke 1: 32, 33),—"He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David; and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end." David's throne was never in heaven, but in the "city of the great king." Then Christ is an exile from his throne, and has gone to heaven to be an intercessor at his Father's throne until his enemies are made his footstool.

It seems by the signs given that it is "the time of the end," "the nations are angry," and it is a time of trouble. I feel like singing—

"Come and reign, come and reign,
Jesus, on thy throne;
And oh! it fills my heart with joy
To know we're almost home.
Here I drop the falling tear,
As pilgrim-like I roam,
An exile from my Father's house,
But soon he'll call me home."

I have one more thought, brother, and that is, beware of Spiritualism. Antichrist can deceive many under this garb, for it is in all the church.

I have been candid,—perhaps I have troubled you. You may be able now to answer all inquiries concerning my faith. My creed is the Bible. I know but one church—all who lift up "holy hands without wrath and doubting." I know but one hope—"life from the dead," "through Jesus Christ." I have but one purpose in this life—to glorify God. I still love you as a brother in the Lord, and hope you will examine yourself to see if you are in "the faith which was once delivered unto the saints." Believe me truly, A. F. P.

The Love of God.

Illimitable, and, to our finite minds, beyond comprehension, is the love of the Creator toward the beings which his power caused to exist. Looking upon ourselves as "worms of the dust," we wonder at its extent, that it could sacrifice so dear an object as a beloved son to make us his children, and more, co-heirs with that son to a glorious inheritance. We stretch our capacities to their utmost to take in the full conception of his greatness, but how inadequate our powers!

Science, discovering myriads of brilliant worlds, and measuring the vast distances of space, has in part revealed the magnitude of his universe, and the wonderful order and perfection that pervades it; and upon our own globe discloses innumerable instances of wisdom, and goodness, and power. As, in the rose-leaf, matchless in delicacy of hue and texture; in the ever-changing, ever-glorious sky; in those minute creatures to whom a drop of water is a great ocean; in the larger animals, with their capacities so nicely adapted to the situation, to which in the faultless order of nature they are assigned; and in the exquisite mechanism of man, which yet at this late age of science baffles in some respects his own understanding. How beautifully in accordance with nature it is that we should be transmuted from this imperfect state to that higher, perfect order of beings, fit associates for the holy angels that are in constant attendance upon the throned Majesty on high, and in which we shall be worthy to call him Father. How amazing! He who not only originated these marvellous creations, but rules the unnumbered hosts of heaven, circling the place of his dwelling with wreaths of glittering suns, investing his sacred presence with a mantle of light,—the ineffable, unapproachable radiance with which he is eternally enveloped, swaying the sceptre of almighty power over his boundless universe,—this awful Majesty so loved the world;—let us pause, let us grasp if possible the mighty thought,—so loved the world that he gave a beloved only Son. We can imagine, though we may not fathom the depth of an earthly father's love; but, considering the royalty, perfection and happy estate of that son, in contrast to the insignificance of man and his fallen estate, the mystery appears in all its incomprehensibility!

He gave him to die on the cross! Not that the cross was cruel, dreadful as it was; not that the sharp iron might pierce the tender, innocent hands and feet that went about only to do good; not alone that the crown of mockery should desecrate that devoted head; not alone that the merciless sword should enter that body of sacrifice,—but, God be thanked! he was brought to that lowest level of the humanity for which he suffered, that its redemption might be entire; none too low for his love to reach; none too sinful for his blood to cleanse; none too poor or lowly to receive his ever-living, ever-outgushing sympathy for those whom he bought with the costly offering of his life. It was the love of a Deity, as great in mercy and beneficence as in majesty and power.

So loved us! Do we realize it? Truly no human tongue can tell, no human mind can compass, the love of the great Abba, Father! Hear what he promises: "And I heard a great voice out of heaven, saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people; and God himself shall be with them, and be their God." "He that overcometh shall inherit all things, and I will be his God, and he shall be my son." Father and son! Creator and creature dwelling together in that blessed relation, when all things are made new; when the curse is removed, that thorns and thistles may spring up no more; when the wilderness blossoms as the rose, and the whole renewed earth is prepared for that great Sabbath of eternal rest, and is lightened by the presence of God and the Lamb. So loved us! It is pleasant to dwell upon the words, taking their comforting sweetness to our hearts, looking heavenward, full of joy and peace in the hope of ere long meeting that Lamb of God that was slain from the foundation of the world. We love to pour out the soul in prayer and praise, by which we are raised to the very atmosphere that surrounds the throne, and made to participate in that "peace of God"—the peace which he possesses, "that passeth all understanding," and which, bestowed upon the dying saint, lulls him sweetly to that ——"blessed sleep,

From which none ever wake to weep."

We are more than repaid, even in this life, for our services to God, as every true christian will testify, having peace, safety, and consolation in the midst of peril, suffering, and temptation. But to those who will accept, is added the great gift of eternal life through Christ Jesus our Lord. And how cordially are all invited! "The Spirit and the bride say come! And let him that heareth say, come! And whosoever will, let him take of the water of life freely." Where is the heart that can resist this appeal? Who can turn coldly from such a friend as He who stands waiting—with what long-suffering, forgiving love, to receive with joy, a joy that angels delight to share, the sinner that was lost but is found?

O! you who would possess yourselves of this priceless treasure of love, rouse up—act! Now is the time. The present is yours. The past is hopelessly gone. The future is in the hands of God; but the present is yours. Search the Scriptures. They will tell you what to do. And when you ask yourselves why you do thus, let the answer be in the words of the beloved disciple: "We love God because he first loved us."

O Savior, take us Home!

The night is long and dreary,
We wander sad and lone,
Our souls have grown aweary,
O Savior, take us home!

O take us home to glory—
Bid us no longer roam,
But dwell for aye before Thee,
O Savior, take us home!

Storm after storm here falling,
Enshrouds our path with gloom;
Our hearts are ever calling,
O Savior, take us home!

We're tired of earth's contention,
We sigh for Thee to come
And banish all dissension,—
O Savior, take us home!

The Church of God.

BRO. GRANT:—I suppose all will admit that there is a church of God, and I am led to think that but very little more is thought of the subject. We consider ourselves as constituting the church. And first let us inquire, what is the design of having a church on the earth? We learn, from Matt. 5: 13, that "Ye are the salt of the earth." We understand that the nature of salt is saving. Do we exert that saving influence that God designed the church should? "Ye are the light of the world." We look at the sun as he sheds his genial rays over the earth, and we inquire, Does the church to-day have that effect upon the world that would warrant us in comparing it to the light of the world? In 1 Tim. 3: 15, we read that the church of the living God is the pillar and ground of the truth; thus we learn that the design of the church is to save and enlighten the world, and be the supporter and stay of the truth.

The church has a good foundation—a tried stone, elect, precious. Paul says, "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." He is the Head of the body, and this body is one; "for as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body; so also is Christ. For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body." We notice also that this one body hath many members. Shall we see one member antagonistic with another member? Let us see how the Scriptures speak relative to the union of the members of this one body, and the sympathy existing one with another. "That ye be like-minded, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind."—Phil. 2: 2. Nevertheless, whereto we have already attained, let us walk by the same rule, let us mind the same thing."—Phil. 3: 16. "Now the God of patience and consolation grant you to be like-minded, one toward another, according to Christ Jesus: that ye may with one mind and one mouth glorify God."—Rom. 15: 5, 6. "Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind, and in the same judgment."—1 Cor. 1: 10. Also read 1 Cor. 12: 12–27. We are also taught that the members love one another. "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another."—John 13: 25. We are to love one another as Christ loved us. How much did Christ love us? Do we love each other in like manner? "Be kindly affectioned one to another, with brotherly love; in honor preferring one another."—Rom. 12: 10. "With all lowliness and meekness, with long-suffering, forbearing one another in love; endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace."—Eph. 4: 2, 3. A host of other texts might be quoted on this point. But, my brethren, let us look at these and see if we as the church of Christ are walking by the rule laid down by the word of God.

This church of God is to be edified and built up. The question is, how? Let the word answer. Read Rom. 12: 3–10, and follow that. Again, Rom. 14: 19,—"Let us therefore follow after the things which make for peace, and things wherewith one may edify another." "We then that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves. Let every one of us please his neighbor for his good to edification."—Rom. 15: 1, 2. "That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness whereby they lie in wait to deceive; but speaking the truth in love may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ; from whom the whole body, fitly joined together, and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love."—Eph. 4: 14–16. "Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good, to the use of edifying; that it may minister grace unto the hearers."—29th verse. Read Col. 3: 12–18.

We see by the Bible, then, that (1.) There is a church. (2.) Its design. (3.) What it is built upon. (4.) Its oneness. (5.) How its members regard one another. (6.) How the church may be edified. But is this all for us to consider relative to the church? I think not. There may be a member of the body that becomes diseased; and how shall we deal with it? Shall we cut it off without trying to save it, or shall we let it stay and abide with the body, until every thing has been done for it that can be done? Let us see. We are to labor with the brother personally. "Go and tell him his fault . . . . If he will not hear thee, then take with thee one or more. If he shall neglect to hear them, tell it unto the church; but if he neglect to hear the church, let him be unto thee as an heathen man." Here is church discipline. Read 1 Cor. 5: 4–12. Also Gal. 6: 1; and 2 Thess. 3: 6, 14, 15. If I have a finger which becomes corrupt, and is in danger of corrupting the other members, and cannot be saved, what is best? hold on to it, or cut it off? Every one would say, cut it off.

Brn., let us have church discipline, with other things. If we are the church of Christ, let us see to it that we carry out the principles of the church. After we have labored with men according to the gospel rule, and they yet remain in a state of wickedness, let the world know that we fellowship them no longer. I have felt that the cause suffered and our influence lessened by this lack of discipline. I go to a flock and endeavor to hold up the religion of Jesus, and it is thrown in my face at once, you pretend to be Bible christians, and yet there is such a one whom you call brother, and I am as good as he is. If we fellowship those who are living in sin, do we not sin? God help us to be Bible men and women, and be found when Jesus comes pure, without spot or wrinkle, for it is such a church Jesus is to present to himself. Amen. G. L. TEEPLE.

Baptism and Remission of Sin.

NUMBER TWO.

"Repent, and be baptized, every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost."—ACTS 2: 38.

In verse 40, Luke says, "And with many other words did he (Peter) testify and exhort, saying, "Save yourselves from this untoward generation." Here is full proof that Luke abridged this sermon of Peter's, as he did others in Acts, as I shall show; and we should inquire where and how he abridged it. Peter had used at least fourteen verses to prove Jesus was the Christ, and can we suppose he used only one verse in answering the vital question which was put to him? The question was asked by Cretes, Arabians, etc., who, though Jews, had not heard the teaching of John and Christ about baptism, faith, the Holy Spirit, and other matters. In repeating Philip's sermon to the Eunuch, Luke only says he "preached unto him Jesus," and yet we know he must have told of baptism, or the Eunuch would not have asked it. Acts 8: 35. In Acts 9: 6, some is left out, which is added in 26: 14. In chap. 17: 22, we have a skeleton of a sermon; for who can believe Paul preached but two minutes on Mars Hill; yet it is recorded just as this verse is—"Paul said, ye men of Athens," etc. In 18: 5, we have a one verse sermon, and in the 28th verse the same. See 20: 21, for a like case with this—"testifying both to the Jews and also to the Greeks, repentance towards God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ." Had he not also told of baptism and other things? In 24: 25 is a plain case of Luke's manner of giving only the heads or subjects of sermons—"Reasoned of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come." In 28: 23, is a day's sermon in one verse; and in 17: 3, we have three Sabbath's sermons in one verse.

From these examples, is it not evident that Luke in this verse only named the subjects on which Peter dwelt in his directions, which were, repentance, and likely faith, the promise of the Spirit, and baptism; and for brevity omitted to state specifically the means by which remission is obtained, while he does so in other places. One other proof that he thus abridged, is the fact that he records four other sermons by Peter, where he specifies how remission comes, and does not name baptism, but says positively it is by faith, repentance, and turning from sin. See these noticed in my last article on this subject. In recording Paul's sermon in Acts 13: 38, 39, Luke is also specific, and says, "Through this man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins; and by him, all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses." Here the law and gospel are compared, and the gospel plan should be made plain; and I ask in the name of reason why Paul did not say, "all that believe" and are baptized shall be "justified," if this was the gospel way of forgiveness? This sermon was to Jews, as well as Peter's. I name this because some say, but without proof, the apostles preached differently to Jews and Gentiles—but one plan is told to both—God "shall justify the circumcision by faith, and uncircumcision through faith." Why not say, by faith and baptism? The Bible abounds in abbreviations like this in Acts 2: 38, but I cannot notice them now.

Acts is a record of the beginning of preaching by the apostles, who expounded Christ's teaching; and we might expect the plan of salvation to be made plain, yet in the whole book we find no plain intimation that baptism is essential, unless it be found in this abridged sermon of Peter's; while it is often named as a duty of believers who have the Spirit, as in the case of Cornelius. Paul's case I will notice hereafter. But Romans is the most specific of any book in telling what the sinner is to do to be pardoned and justified; and I ask why Paul never names baptism but once, and then only figuratively? Rom. 6: 3–5. It should be noticed that he labors to show the ground of pardon, the death of Christ, and also how we are to obtain it, which last he tells in over twenty passages. Luke only reported briefly what others preached, but Paul wrote his own or inspired views, and so should be more specific; and he was not a careless teacher. The same remarks might be made as to the Epistles to the Galatians and Hebrews. Can we suppose Peter commanded these Cretes and Arabians to be baptized, and also Cornelius, before explaining it, and showing that Christ had enjoined it? And is not here evidence of abbreviation? Heb. 6: 1, 2, shows the points on which Peter doubtless dwelt in his directions in this case. But the fact that in more than eighty passages in the New Testament we are told how pardon and salvation is to be obtained, and baptism is not mentioned as one of the conditions, renders it impossible for me to believe that, for the sake of brevity, it was thus left out of them all, and never added except in this evidently abridged sermon of Peter's.

As this is a vital question, I will here refer to these eighty texts, so that brethren can see whether or no I handle "the word of God deceitfully":

Luke 7: 50; 24: 47; 13: 3–5; 15: 7–10; John 1: 12; 3: 15, 36, 18; 5: 24; 6: 29, 35, 40, and 47; 7: 38, 39; 8: 24; 11: 25; 12: 46; 14: 12; 17: 20; Acts 3: 19; 5: 31; 10: 43; 11: 18; 13: 43, 39; 16: 31; 15: 9; 20: 21; 26: 18–20; 28: 27; Rom. 3: 26, 28, 30, 31, 22; 4: 5, 11, 13, 16; 10: 4, 9, 10, 13; 17: 26; 9: 30; 1: 16, 17; 5: 1, 2; 1 Cor. 1: 21; 15: 2, 14, 17; Gal. 2: 16; 3: 2, 8, 14, 24, 26; 5: 5, 6; Eph. 1: 13, 15, 19; 2: 8, 9; 3: 12; Col. 1: 4; 1 Tim. 1: 16; 4: 10; 2 Tim. 3: 15; 1 John 3: 23; 1: 9; Heb. 4: 3; 6: 12; 10: 39; 1 Pet. 1: 9; 2 Cor. 7: 10.

About all, if not the whole, of these eighty texts tell the way the sinner is to obtain pardon and life, while a far greater number tell of faith, repentance and prayer, as the duty and exercise of the christian. I affectionately ask my brethren in Christ to read these passages carefully, and ask themselves if they can fully believe that baptism was left out of the whole of them for the sake of brevity, if Christ and the apostles knew it was one of the essential conditions by which the ignorant sinner was to obtain eternal life? I ask them also to keep in mind, the fact, that only about half a dozen texts are generally claimed, or can be claimed, as proving it essential (it is essential to duty of the converted), and that in half of these the term baptism is not used, but only claimed to be inferred.

Hymn.

To thee, O God, in joyful songs
We lift anew the strain of praise,
O! may thy love inspire our tongues,
While we our notes of gladness raise.

O Savior, thou the lost didst love,
And for them shed thy precious blood;
Now for us thou dost plead above,
Our priest at the right hand of God.

To thee, O God, at morning's dawn,
To thee at evening's silent hour,
Our hearts in joyful song are drawn,
To praise thy mercy, love and power.

Grant us, O Lord, thy peace and grace
In all the ways and woes of life,
And bring us then to see thy face
Beyond earth's conflicts, toils and strife.

Experience of a Baptist Minister.

The following experience of Bro. A. F. Pawley, of Oceanport, N. J., who has recently seen the light on the life and death question, will be read with interest. It was addressed to one of his brethren. We hope our brother will have courage to "stand up for Jesus" and his word.—G.

(Concluded.)

In this direction now lies my hope. I have given up my hopes of going to heaven (Jesus hath for us entered in), and I have ceased to add slime and well-burnt bricks to that Babel tower, and I fear God would confound me if I return to the work again; for I have learned that the earth is "given to the children of men," and "the meek shall inherit" it,—that "the righteous shall be recompensed in" it; also "the wicked and the sinner." This sphere will be good enough for me when the restitution is made; when shall be brought to pass the saying written, "Death is swallowed up in victory!"* Then this groaning creation will be delivered, and this tabernacle will "be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven," and "mortality" will "be swallowed up of life." In view of this, I join in the cry of John in response to the word, "Surely I come quickly,"—"Even so, come, Lord Jesus." In His return I see hope for the faithful and watchful. While he stays away I expect nothing but anarchy, war, and apostasy. In his return I see a religious, political, social, and humane necessity. So, dear Bro., whilst I dare to expose the sins of the church, I also differ from her in faith.

But this is not all. Bear with me, even though you consider it my folly. Man's nature and destiny are subjects of the utmost importance, and I rejoice that as a believer in the Lord Jesus Christ, although not as a true Baptist minister, I can take the word of God to prove all I believe on this subject. To begin, I affirm that the Bible does not teach the great contradiction of terms,—that mortal man has an immortal entity in him, or that death means life in misery. It is strange to me that man's teaching should charge God's word with such inconsistencies.

Dear Bro., you will concur with me, that there is no eternal life but through Jesus Christ. Circumstances have led me to investigate this subject; and my conclusions, in the fear of God, are, that man is a mortal soul, body, mind, breath or spirit, without any hope of living again but through Jesus Christ, whose office it is to give life as a favor to them that believe. The gospel is the good-will of God to man, that he should not perish, but have everlasting life, by believing on the Son of God. Now we find that this power is given to Jesus Christ, by God the Father; "that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life, and I (Jesus) will raise him up at the last day."—John 6:40. Jesus is, according to this record, a Savior—life-giver. "The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ." For this I am branded as a heretic. But as God has given the judgment of this world into the hands of Jesus, his Son, I will leave them and their charge against me for the Lord to settle when he comes. This I know well, that no man can bring proof positive from the word of God, that man is an immortal; or that the wicked will ever be immortal. If so, why has not God told us in his word by other words than "death," "perish," "destroy," "consume away," "be as though they had not been," "shall not live," "like the beasts that perish," "burnt up," "like stubble," "chaff," "tow," "ashes," "everlasting destruction,"—(destruction without end), etc.? Our God is not the author of confusion, of ambiguity, or darkness, but of light, and in him is no darkness. But is not the word of God Babel itself, if these mean the opposite of what is written? And if not, alas! how has vain man exalted himself in this respect to be equal to his Maker, "who," Paul says, "only hath immortality."

Again, if man has natural immortality, then Jesus is not the "life,"—only happiness is the boon he confers on those "who, by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory, and honor, and immortality, eternal life." Now, dear Bro., I can praise the great God that his word teaches me why Jesus is "the Bread of Life." I am a mortal, "dead in trespasses and sins," without the life Jesus is able to bestow. Thank God for Jesus Christ! Life is the gift of the gospel, and a blessed crown of life awaits those who sleep in Jesus. Paul looked for it in view of his fighting "a good fight," finishing his course, and keeping the faith, as a bestowment in righteousness at the appearing of the Lord from heaven.

And now shall we let the man of tradition, or of perdition, take our crown? Let "no man take thy crown," is the counsel of Jesus. If we take this counsel, we must away with the badges of antichrist, our Rev's., our D. D's, and let Jewish fables go; let Plato and Socrates go; break every leading string of papacy, and come to the light, and no longer love "darkness rather than light." This much every one may know upon reflection, that no doctrine can be founded on an inference, metaphor, or symbol. A plain declaration does not exist in God's word that man has immortality innate, and you, my dear brother, know it. The opposite is plainly taught,—the substance of which is, that man is a unit, not a double entity, and he dies; and if he lives again, it must be through a Life-giver, who counts him "worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead"; for "God is not the God of the dead, but of the living." But you may say it is not contended that flesh hath immortality; the soul is the immortal part. But no, not if it can die; and the word says, "the soul that sinneth it shall die." Jesus says, "Fear not them which kill the body (as if he would say, I can give it life again), . . . but rather fear him (God) which is able to destroy both soul and body (both life and body) in hell."

There is not a thought in Scripture that recognizes man's soul as an entity separate from his body. The Greek word psukee, translated soul in our Bibles, is given in all lexicons I have ever seen as breath, life, the animal soul, principle of life. The same word is used where our translators have given us life, being, and person. And so it is also in the Old Testament. The Hebrews, according to the marginal reading, use the same word nephesh—soul—when speaking of the beast, as well as of man. See Gen. 1:20, word translated "life,"—margin reads, soul. In verse 30, the word is translated life,—margin—Heb. a living soul; and this is all that can be claimed from chap. 2:7; where our translators have given us,—"man became a living soul,"—the same as they might have translated the 30th verse of the first chapter, before man had any being. What "pre-eminence" then hath man "above the beast"? "Yea (the wise man says), they have all one breath." Man has no pre-eminence over beasts respecting innate immortality, but it has pleased God to place man under dispensations wherein he can be a candidate for immortality. This indeed seems to me to be the case before man fell—much more so now.

When we look at the testimony relating to the creation of man, and his curse or doom, because he sinned, we do not find one word that hath the shadow of immortality, applied to the man formed out of the ground, or in "the breath of life," by which he "became a living soul" (living creature). The plain history seems to inform us that God made a man capable of developing a character, and placed him on probation, to the intent that he might live by having access to the tree of life, which access he had as long as he was obedient to the mild law of Eden. Adam was subject to temptation. Desire is no sin if resisted. He did not resist, but gratified his own animal appetite, ate and died, being denied access to the tree of life. For this reason, Adam and all his race have returned to the dust again, nor would there have been any hope of a future life if God had not in mercy made a new and wise arrangement, in order that man might live; for God had a desire to the work of his hand. He never willed the death of any man, that he might forever perish, unless he did so of his own choice. It does not reflect upon the character of a great, good and holy God, to say we have no testimony that he knew Adam would disobey. We have no right to infer that God has at any time decided upon any of his creatures, whom he has placed under a law for the development of character, before that time of trial or probation is ended.

Eden was a failure for the time being, and the creation was subjected to vanity by "Him who hath subjected the same in hope." See Rom. 8:19–24. When Jesus shall reign, then the lost kingdom of Eden will be restored. Death is the curse, and the resurrection is the only hope. Since Adam lost his privilege, the child of God groans for the redemption of his body; not for life at death—but death "swallowed up in victory." Now if this had not been the case, and Adam had possessed this (theological) double entity, he might have used language like the following to his Maker, when God said, "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return,"—"You have truly doomed my body to the ground, but on my soul you have not passed sentence, and this is my essential part. My thoughts cannot perish. Shake off this shell of clay, if you please; but my immortal entity must live on parallel with thyself. You have made a soul you cannot destroy!" Is not this theology? but does it not give God the lie also? Is it not much better for us to take God at his word and believe the record he has given us of his Son?

When God condemned Adam, he meant the whole man; and if there is any hope of life, it comes through the seed of the woman—the seed of promise to Abraham (Gen. 3:15), Jesus Christ the Life-giver (Gen. 17:6; Gal. 3:16.) Let us then believe the testimony which God has testified of his Son, 1 John 5:10–12,—"He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself; he that believeth not God, hath made him a liar; because he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son. And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son, hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God, hath not life." Here it is evident that some have life and some have not. Eternal life is a gift conferred (or to be conferred) on those who have the Son of God; and what is it to have him, but to believe what God hath testified concerning him, and keep his commands by taking Jesus as our great example and first fruits from the dead?

1 John 2:22, asks, "Who is a liar, but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ? He is antichrist who denieth the Father and the Son." And yet in the face of such truth, the Father and Son are denied by making Jesus God himself, and by so doing making him his own Father. If Jesus is the Christ, he is the anointed one of God; and if anointed, he has right to a throne, a kingdom and subjects. He was "born king of the Jews," and was rejected; yet he was faithful, and died that we Gentiles might have what the Jews refused—life through the anointed one; and there yet remains to be fulfilled the angel's salutation (Luke 1:32, 33),—"He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David; and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end." David's throne was never in heaven, but in the "city of the great king." Then Christ is an exile from his throne, and has gone to heaven to be an intercessor at his Father's throne until his enemies are made his footstool.

It seems by the signs given that it is "the time of the end," "the nations are angry," and it is a time of trouble. I feel like singing—

"Come and reign, come and reign,
Jesus, on thy throne;
And oh! it fills my heart with joy
To know we're almost home.
Here I drop the falling tear,
As pilgrim-like I roam,
An exile from my Father's house,
But soon he'll call me home."

I have one more thought, brother, and that is, beware of Spiritualism. Antichrist can deceive many under this garb, for it is in all the church.

I have been candid,—perhaps I have troubled you. You may be able now to answer all inquiries concerning my faith. My creed is the Bible. I know but one church—all who lift up "holy hands without wrath and doubting." I know but one hope—"life from the dead," "through Jesus Christ." I have but one purpose in this life—to glorify God. I still love you as a brother in the Lord, and hope you will examine yourself to see if you are in "the faith which was once delivered unto the saints." Believe me truly, A. F. P.

The Love of God.

Illimitable, and, to our finite minds, beyond comprehension, is the love of the Creator toward the beings which his power caused to exist. Looking upon ourselves as "worms of the dust," we wonder at its extent, that it could sacrifice so dear an object as a beloved son to make us his children, and more, co-heirs with that son to a glorious inheritance. We stretch our capacities to their utmost to take in the full conception of his greatness, but how inadequate our powers!

Science, discovering myriads of brilliant worlds, and measuring the vast distances of space, has in part revealed the magnitude of his universe, and the wonderful order and perfection that pervades it; and upon our own globe discloses innumerable instances of wisdom, and goodness, and power. As, in the rose-leaf, matchless in delicacy of hue and texture; in the ever-changing, ever-glorious sky; in those minute creatures to whom a drop of water is a great ocean; in the larger animals, with their capacities so nicely adapted to the situation, to which in the faultless order of nature they are assigned; and in the exquisite mechanism of man, which yet at this late age of science baffles in some respects his own understanding. How beautifully in accordance with nature it is that we should be transmuted from this imperfect state to that higher, perfect order of beings, fit associates for the holy angels that are in constant attendance upon the throned Majesty on high, and in which we shall be worthy to call him Father. How amazing! He who not only originated these marvellous creations, but rules the unnumbered hosts of heaven, circling the place of his dwelling with wreaths of glittering suns, investing his sacred presence with a mantle of light,—the ineffable, unapproachable radiance with which he is eternally enveloped, swaying the sceptre of almighty power over his boundless universe,—this awful Majesty so loved the world,—let us pause, let us grasp if possible the mighty thought,—so loved the world that he gave a beloved only Son. We can imagine, though we may not fathom the depth of an earthly father's love; but, considering the royalty, perfection and happy estate of that son, in contrast to the insignificance of man and his fallen estate, the mystery appears in all its incomprehensibility!

He gave him to die on the cross! Not that the cross was cruel, dreadful as it was, not that the sharp iron might pierce the tender, innocent hands and feet that went about only to do good; not alone that the crown of mockery should desecrate that devoted head; not alone that the merciless sword should enter that body of sacrifice,—but, God be thanked! he was brought to that lowest level of the humanity for which he suffered, that its redemption might be entire; none too low for his love to reach; none too sinful for his blood to cleanse, none too poor or lowly to receive his ever-living, ever-outgushing sympathy for those whom he bought with the costly offering of his life. It was the love of a Deity, as great in mercy and beneficence as in majesty and power.

So loved us! Do we realize it? Truly no human tongue can tell, no human mind can compass, the love of the great Abba, Father! Hear what he promises: "And I heard a great voice out of heaven, saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people; and God himself shall be with them, and be their God." "He that overcometh shall inherit all things, and I will be his God, and he shall be my son." Father and son! Creator and creature dwelling together in that blessed relation, when all things are made new; when the curse is removed, that thorns and thistles may spring up no more; when the wilderness blossoms as the rose, and the whole renewed earth is prepared for that great Sabbath of eternal rest, and is lightened by the presence of God and the Lamb. So loved us! It is pleasant to dwell upon the words, taking their comforting sweetness to our hearts, looking heavenward, full of joy and peace in the hope of ere long meeting that Lamb of God that was slain from the foundation of the world. We love to pour out the soul in prayer and praise, by which we are raised to the very atmosphere that surrounds the throne, and made to participate in that "peace of God"—the peace which he possesses, "that passeth all understanding," and which, bestowed upon the dying saint, lulls him sweetly to that ——"blessed sleep,

From which none ever wake to weep."

We are more than repaid, even in this life, for our services to God, as every true christian will testify, having peace, safety, and consolation in the midst of peril, suffering, and temptation. But to those who will accept, is added the great gift of eternal life through Christ Jesus our Lord. And how cordially are all invited! "The Spirit and the bride say come! And let him that heareth say, come! And whosoever will, let him take of the water of life freely." Where is the heart that can resist this appeal? Who can turn coldly from such a friend as He who stands waiting—with what long-suffering, forgiving love, to receive with joy, a joy that angels delight to share, the sinner that was lost but is found?

O! you who would possess yourselves of this priceless treasure of love, rouse up—act! Now is the time. The present is yours. The past is hopelessly gone. The future is in the hands of God; but the present is yours. Search the Scriptures. They will tell you what to do. And when you ask yourselves why you do thus, let the answer be in the words of the beloved disciple: "We love God because he first loved us."

O Savior, take us Home!

The night is long and dreary,
We wander sad and lone,
Our souls have grown aweary,
O Savior, take us home!

O take us home to glory—
Bid us no longer roam,
But dwell for aye before Thee,
O Savior, take us home!

Storm after storm here falling,
Enshrouds our path with gloom;
Our hearts are ever calling,
O Savior, take us home!

We're tired of earth's contention,
We sigh for Thee to come
And banish all dissension,—
O Savior, take us home!

The Church of God.

BRO. GRANT:—I suppose all will admit that there is a church of God, and I am led to think that but very little more is thought of the subject. We consider ourselves as constituting the church. And first let us inquire, what is the design of having a church on the earth? We learn, from Matt. 5:13, that "Ye are the salt of the earth." We understand that the nature of salt is saving. Do we exert that saving influence that God designed the church should? "Ye are the light of the world." We look at the sun as he sheds his genial rays over the earth, and we inquire, Does the church to-day have that effect upon the world that would warrant us in comparing it to the light of the world? In 1 Tim. 3:15, we read that the church of the living God is the pillar and ground of the truth; thus we learn that the design of the church is to save and enlighten the world, and be the supporter and stay of the truth.

The church has a good foundation—a tried stone, elect, precious. Paul says, "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." He is the Head of the body, and this body is one; "for as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body; so also is Christ. For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body." We notice also that this one body hath many members. Shall we see one member antagonistic with another member? Let us see how the Scriptures speak relative to the union of the members of this one body, and the sympathy existing one with another. "That ye be like-minded, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind."—Phil. 2:2. Nevertheless, whereto we have already attained, let us walk by the same rule, let us mind the same thing."—Phil. 3:16. "Now the God of patience and consolation grant you to be like-minded, one toward another, according to Christ Jesus: that ye may with one mind and one mouth glorify God."—Rom. 15:5, 6. "Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind, and in the same judgment."—1 Cor. 1:10. Also read 1 Cor. 12:12–27. We are also taught that the members love one another. "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another."—John 13:25. We are to love one another as Christ loved us. How much did Christ love us? Do we love each other in like manner? "Be kindly affectioned one to another, with brotherly love; in honor preferring one another."—Rom. 12:10. "With all lowliness and meekness, with long-suffering, forbearing one another in love; endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace."—Eph. 4:2, 3. A host of other texts might be quoted on this point. But, my brethren, let us look at these and see if we as the church of Christ are walking by the rule laid down by the word of God.

This church of God is to be edified and built up. The question is, how? Let the word answer. Read Rom. 12:3–10, and follow that. Again, Rom. 14:19,—"Let us therefore follow after the things which make for peace, and things wherewith one may edify another." "We then that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves. Let every one of us please his neighbor for his good to edification."—Rom. 15:1, 2. "That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness whereby they lie in wait to deceive; but speaking the truth in love may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ; from whom the whole body, fitly joined together, and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love."—Eph. 4:14–16. "Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good, to the use of edifying; that it may minister grace unto the hearers."—29th verse. Read Col. 3:12–18.

We see by the Bible, then, that (1.) There is a church. (2.) Its design. (3.) What it is built upon. (4.) Its oneness. (5.) How its members regard one another. (6.) How the church may be edified. But is this all for us to consider relative to the church? I think not. There may be a member of the body that becomes diseased; and how shall we deal with it? Shall we cut it off without trying to save it, or shall we let it stay and abide with the body, until every thing has been done for it that can be done? Let us see. We are to labor with the brother personally. "Go and tell him his fault . . . . If he will not hear thee, then take with thee one or more. If he shall neglect to hear them, tell it unto the church; but if he neglect to hear the church, let him be unto thee as an heathen man." Here is church discipline. Read 1 Cor. 5:4–12. Also Gal. 6:1; and 2 Thess. 3:6, 14, 15. If I have a finger which becomes corrupt, and is in danger of corrupting the other members, and cannot be saved, what is best? hold on to it, or cut it off? Every one would say, cut it off.

Brn., let us have church discipline, with other things. If we are the church of Christ, let us see to it that we carry out the principles of the church. After we have labored with men according to the gospel rule, and they yet remain in a state of wickedness, let the world know that we fellowship them no longer. I have felt that the cause suffered and our influence lessened by this lack of discipline. I go to a flock and endeavor to hold up the religion of Jesus, and it is thrown in my face at once, you pretend to be Bible christians, and yet there is such a one whom you call brother, and I am as good as he is. If we fellowship those who are living in sin, do we not sin? God help us to be Bible men and women, and be found when Jesus comes pure, without spot or wrinkle, for it is such a church Jesus is to present to himself. Amen. G. L. TEEPLE.

Baptism and Remission of Sin.

NUMBER TWO.

"Repent, and be baptized, every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost."—ACTS 2:38.

In verse 40, Luke says, "And with many other words did he (Peter) testify and exhort, saying, "Save yourselves from this untoward generation." Here is full proof that Luke abridged this sermon of Peter's, as he did others in Acts, as I shall show; and we should inquire where and how he abridged it. Peter had used at least fourteen verses to prove Jesus was the Christ, and can we suppose he used only one verse in answering the vital question which was put to him? The question was asked by Cretes, Arabians, etc., who, though Jews, had not heard the teaching of John and Christ about baptism, faith, the Holy Spirit, and other matters. In repeating Philip's sermon to the Eunuch, Luke only says he "preached unto him Jesus," and yet we know he must have told of baptism, or the Eunuch would not have asked it. Acts 8:35. In Acts 9:6, some is left out, which is added in 26:14. In chap. 17:22, we have a skeleton of a sermon; for who can believe Paul preached but two minutes on Mars Hill; yet it is recorded just as this verse is—"Paul said, ye men of Athens," etc. In 18:5, we have a one verse sermon, and in the 28th verse the same. See 20:21, for a like case with this—"testifying both to the Jews and also to the Greeks, repentance towards God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ." Had he not also told of baptism and other things? In 24:25 is a plain case of Luke's manner of giving only the heads or subjects of sermons—"Reasoned of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come." In 28:23, is a day's sermon in one verse; and in 17:3, we have three Sabbath's sermons in one verse.

From these examples, is it not evident that Luke in this verse only named the subjects on which Peter dwelt in his directions, which were, repentance, and likely faith, the promise of the Spirit, and baptism; and for brevity omitted to state specifically the means by which remission is obtained, while he does so in other places. One other proof that he thus abridged, is the fact that he records four other sermons by Peter, where he specifies how remission comes, and does not name baptism, but says positively it is by faith, repentance, and turning from sin. See these noticed in my last article on this subject. In recording Paul's sermon in Acts 13:38, 39, Luke is also specific, and says, "Through this man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins; and by him, all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses." Here the law and gospel are compared, and the gospel plan should be made plain; and I ask in the name of reason why Paul did not say, "all that believe" and are baptized shall be "justified," if this was the gospel way of forgiveness? This sermon was to Jews, as well as Peter's. I name this because some say, but without proof, the apostles preached differently to Jews and Gentiles—but one plan is told to both—God "shall justify the circumcision by faith, and uncircumcision through faith." Why not say, by faith and baptism? The Bible abounds in abbreviations like this in Acts 2:38, but I cannot notice them now.

Acts is a record of the beginning of preaching by the apostles, who expounded Christ's teaching; and we might expect the plan of salvation to be made plain, yet in the whole book we find no plain intimation that baptism is essential, unless it be found in this abridged sermon of Peter's; while it is often named as a duty of believers who have the Spirit, as in the case of Cornelius. Paul's case I will notice hereafter. But Romans is the most specific of any book in telling what the sinner is to do to be pardoned and justified; and I ask why Paul never names baptism but once, and then only figuratively? Rom. 6:3–5. It should be noticed that he labors to show the ground of pardon, the death of Christ, and also how we are to obtain it, which last he tells in over twenty passages. Luke only reported briefly what others preached, but Paul wrote his own or inspired views, and so should be more specific; and he was not a careless teacher. The same remarks might be made as to the Epistles to the Galatians and Hebrews. Can we suppose Peter commanded these Cretes and Arabians to be baptized, and also Cornelius, before explaining it, and showing that Christ had enjoined it? And is not here evidence of abbreviation? Heb. 6:1, 2, shows the points on which Peter doubtless dwelt in his directions in this case. But the fact that in more than eighty passages in the New Testament we are told how pardon and salvation is to be obtained, and baptism is not mentioned as one of the conditions, renders it impossible for me to believe that, for the sake of brevity, it was thus left out of them all, and never added except in this evidently abridged sermon of Peter's.

As this is a vital question, I will here refer to these eighty texts, so that brethren can see whether or no I handle "the word of God deceitfully":

Luke 7:50; 24:47; 13:3–5; 15:7–10; John 1:12; 3:15, 36, 18; 5:24; 6:29, 35, 40, and 47; 7:38, 39; 8:24; 11:25; 12:46; 14:12; 17:20; Acts 3:19; 5:31; 10:43; 11:18; 13:43, 39; 16:31; 15:9; 20:21; 26:18–20; 28:27; Rom. 3:26, 28, 30, 31, 22; 4:5, 11, 13, 16; 10:4, 9, 10, 13; 17:26; 9:30; 1:16, 17; 5:1, 2; 1 Cor. 1:21; 15:2, 14, 17; Gal. 2:16; 3:2, 8, 14, 24, 26; 5:5, 6; Eph. 1:13, 15, 19; 2:8, 9; 3:12; Col. 1:4; 1 Tim. 1:16; 4:10; 2 Tim. 3:15; 1 John 3:23; 1:9; Heb. 4:3; 6:12; 10:39; 1 Pet. 1:9; 2 Cor. 7:10.

About all, if not the whole, of these eighty texts tell the way the sinner is to obtain pardon and life, while a far greater number tell of faith, repentance and prayer, as the duty and exercise of the christian. I affectionately ask my brethren in Christ to read these passages carefully, and ask themselves if they can fully believe that baptism was left out of the whole of them for the sake of brevity, if Christ and the apostles knew it was one of the essential conditions by which the ignorant sinner was to obtain eternal life? I ask them also to keep in mind the fact, that only about half a dozen texts are generally claimed, or can be claimed, as proving it essential (it is essential to duty of the converted), and that in half of these the term baptism is not used, but only claimed to be inferred.

Is the precious Bible so dark and contradictory on an essential doctrine? or have these few passages been misunderstood by some who love our Lord Jesus Christ, and reverse his word?

I will give a few more samples of the numerous class of texts referred to above. Eph. 1: 13, . . . "in whom also, after that ye believed, ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise." 2 Thess. 2: 13,—"God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation, through sanctification of the Spirit, and belief of the truth." In these texts we see the work of the Spirit, and also when and how it is obtained. Rom. 3: 22;—"Even the righteousness of God, which is by faith of Jesus Christ unto all, and upon all them that believe; for there is no difference." Rom. 4: 5;—But to him that worketh not, but believeth on Him that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousness." Chap. 1: 16;—"For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ; for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek." Eph. 2: 8, 9;—"For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God: not of works, lest any man should boast." Is not baptism a work, differing much from the exercise of faith and repentance? And do not some boast in relation to it, or is there not danger of such boasting?

We justly censure the popular churches for founding the doctrine of eternal misery on a few uncertain and symbolical passages, while they overlook, or wrongly explain, scores of plain texts which clearly establish the final destruction of the wicked; and can any one fully imitate them in relation to the doctrine of baptism and the Spirit, and be innocent? The Lord willing, I shall continue to examine other passages on this subject, and will next examine Gal. 3: 27.

Consistent Faith.

Do you love Christ and his cause? Then live your religion. Live it at home in your family. Be patterns to your children and others. Do not go home from the meeting where you have said good things, and get angry with your family, with or without a cause, and talk unkindly or harshly to them. "If a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual restore such an one in the spirit of meekness; considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted." "Let all bitterness, and wrath, and clamor, and evil speaking, be put away from you, with all malice: and be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you." Better not talk at all in meeting, or elsewhere to the unbeliever, than to say one thing and do another. If your example is not good, who will believe your report? Your family will not have confidence in you, neither will others. Perhaps you meet with severe trials, and losses, and injustice. These trials are doubtless for your good, although you do not now comprehend it. These losses are to show you how insecure are all things here. "Fret not thyself because of evil doers, . . . for they shall soon be cut down like the grass." "Commit thy way unto the Lord." Trust in him. Art thou tempted? Go pray to him. Perhaps Satan desires to sift thee. Then pray. You cannot? Why not? your best endeavors do not avail you anything—you labor hard for naught—do you not need some true friend? Who so true as Him who died for you? Then go to him when tempted. Strive to obey him, even to the bridling of the unruly member. O! pray and strive for the fruits of the Spirit—love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance. "Fear God, and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man. For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil."

A Dearth.

"Behold, the days come, saith the Lord God, that I will send a famine in the land; not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the words of the Lord. And they shall wander from sea to sea, and from the north even unto the east; they shall run to and fro to seek the word of the Lord, and shall not find it."—Amos 8: 11, 12.

There will be a cry for oil made by the foolish virgins. Matt. 25: 8. What is this oil? Faith. How does faith come? By hearing the word of the Lord. There will be a time when the word of the Lord will be sought for, but will not be obtained from God's preachers; but they will be told to "go . . to them that sell (hirelings) and buy for yourselves." Notwithstanding the foolish virgins have their lamps (the Bible), oil (or faith) is begotten by hearing the word of the Lord preached by the man whom God hath sent. Rom. 18: 14, 15. "So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of the Lord." "Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest, that he would send forth laborers into his harvest,"—men who love God better than all things else,—men who will stand in the gaps and defend the truth in its purity at the loss of life,—men of God, who could like a Paul speak the truth in soberness, notwithstanding he was called mad,—wandering through perils and dangers on every hand, beset by men and devils, tossed to and fro upon the ocean of time, crying, "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable,"—feeling the "woe" upon him if he preached not the gospel,—making himself of no reputation, a servant of servants, that he might win to himself the honor that comes from God alone,—thus making himself near kin to Moses who esteemed "the reproaches of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt,"—of Christ, who for our sakes became poor that we might be rich, he having in heaven a "more enduring substance," who, when called to surrender his life, did it cheerfully for the sake of the truth,—men to whom God will give the lively oracles to deliver unto the people who are famishing for want of something to eat. Past truth will not suffice. The cry comes from the people, "Watchman, what of the night?" Will they be answered? Yes. Now is the time of plenty, when we may be supplied with oil in our vessels. "Now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation." Make haste! Delay not! Fight, christian, fight! It is your last chance. You may be gone soon, unless you fight and pull down the strong holds of Satan. "Knowing the terror of the Lord, we persuade men."

"Ye Gentile sinners, ne'er forget
The wormwood and the gall."

Pray, pray! pray always, "that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all those things that are coming upon the earth, and stand before the Son of man." Plead with Jesus. Beg of God. Cry for sinners. Preach the truth.

The Hope.

"Because that for the hope of Israel I am bound with this chain."—Acts 28: 20.

What is the hope of Israel? The promises of God made to the Fathers that they should inherit the earth, and the Son of David, the Lord Jesus, would reign king over the house of Israel forever. And they "all died in faith," believing the promises of God. Their only hope was in a resurrection from among the dead. When living they preached this glorious gospel of the kingdom. Paul tells his brethren that the gospel was preached to them as well as to us. The gospel is a chain of promises; and our glorious hope is fastened to this great chain, which is like an anchor to the soul, "sure and steadfast." Paul calls this hope a "blessed hope." It is a blessed hope; for the pure in heart will see God. Paul says, "Christ in you the hope of glory." Surely this is our best bower or anchor. In connection with this hope is the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ. Paul standing before Agrippa says, "Now I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our Fathers;" then goes on to say, "Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you, that God should raise the dead?" Ezekiel said that the only hope for Israel was, that God would raise them from their graves and bring them into their own land. The prophet Joel says, "The Lord will be the hope of his people" when "the heavens and the earth shall shake." David says, "My flesh shall rest in hope." Paul says, "Unto Abraham and his seed were the promises made." After God had promised the whole land of Canaan to Abraham and his seed, he gives him the covenant of circumcision in his flesh. Paul calls it "a seal of the righteousness of the faith which he had, yet being uncircumcised; that he might be the father of all them that believe." Paul says that "Jesus Christ was a minister of the circumcision, . . . to confirm the promises made unto the fathers." Christ says he was "the truth and the life," and the "only way" whereby men could be saved; and they that climb up some other way, are thieves and robbers.

The apostle says Christ has "redeemed us from the curse of the law . . . that the blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles through Jesus Christ." He commissioned his disciples to go and preach the gospel to all the world; "he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; and he that believeth not shall be damned." And they went everywhere preaching the word. And "so mightily grew the word of God and prevailed." When Paul and Silas came to the city of Thessalonica, and reasoned with them out of the Scripture that Christ must needs have suffered and risen again from the dead, the unbelieving "Jews, moved with envy, . . . set all the city on an uproar." And the rulers cried out that they had "turned the world upside down." Iron chains, boiling oil, scourges, whips and rods, starvation, and all other tortures, could not stop them from preaching the gospel. The closer they were chained up, the louder they would sing; and their sound, like the prophets, went into all the earth. They were happy while bound with their chains. Paul and Silas when cast into prison, and their feet put in another prison, were so happy they sung praises to God, when every body else was asleep. Brethren, it is far better to be bound with Paul's iron chain for Christ's sake, than to be led captive by the devil with a gold one.

Discussion at Weeks Mills.

Our discussion with Eld. E. B. Fletcher (Methodist) was one of much interest, and has resulted in opening the eyes of many to see the glorious truths of the Bible that have been long obscured by mystical interpretation, based on Satan's great lie uttered to our first parents in Eden's garden.

The debate was held in the Union meeting house, at Weeks Mills, about fourteen miles north of Augusta, Me. We commenced Tuesday, June 24th, and continued three days. We debated five hours the first day, and six each of the other two, making seventeen in all. We discussed the following question:—"All men are immortal in the sense of continued and unending being."

Our opponent was said to be the Methodist champion in Maine; and if oft-repeated assertions and misrepresentations were argumentative proof, then he certainly established his points; and if all he said during the debate against us were true, our moral and christian character must be very low. It is a source of considerable comfort to know that man is not our judge; for if he were, our chance for salvation would often appear very small.

The following was the grand proposition of our opponent:—"Man has a spiritual soul destinct from the body." Effort was made on his part to show that this "spiritual soul, destinct from the body," would experience eternal misery if it did not repent.

We found an abundance of scripture to show that the entire man is mortal; and that all the talk about a "spiritual soul" that "goes to glory at death," is unscriptural and untrue. An oft-repeated saying was fully verified, in the case of our opponent, during this discussion:—

"A man convinced against his will,
Is of the same opinion still."

We had a fine opportunity to witness the power of prejudice, which is ever proof against the reception of truth. According to his assertions, the "Materialistic Annihilationists," as he called those who believe in the destruction of the wicked, are very far from being christians. He would often make statements that he would afterwards deny, when they were met and refuted by plain scripture. On one occasion, we took the liberty, by permission of the chairman, to appeal to the audience, asking those who recollected the saying that was denied, to raise their hands, when quite a number were raised. He at once inquired if there were any among them who were "not Annihilationists?" An intelligent citizen, who raised his hands, spoke at once, and said, "I am not." We were informed that this same gentleman afterwards noted down some fourteen statements made and denied by our opponent. This only served to make the truth shine the brighter, and strengthen the faith of its lovers.

During the discussion, many, who have been in darkness on the great truth that all men are mortal, and must obtain immortality "by patient continuance in well doing," were led to see the simple harmony of the Bible doctrine on this point, and we trust they will never be entangled again in the fables of these "last days."

Scarcely any attempt was made by our opponent to answer the plain and positive scriptures, which were presented to show that the entire man is mortal, and does not receive immortality till the resurrection; but he would reply by saying, "Who does not know that those texts are in the Bible. A boy ten years old could tell you that."

When we left, we had the satisfaction of knowing that the truth had been thankfully and joyfully received into many honest hearts. This fact afforded us a rich reward for the reproach and slandess received while defending the "blessed hope" of the gospel. The tears of joy that shone in the eyes of those who saw and embraced the light that came from the sacred page, were of more value to us than all the applause a wicked world can bestow upon those who support the popular errors of the day. It is even a privilege to suffer with Christ, for the truth's sake; while at the same time we feel the sweet influences of the heavenly Comforter.

In conclusion, we would say, we are glad we have had the discussion at Weeks Mills. The glorious results have abundantly paid us for all the hard sayings impeaching our moral and christian character, and we pray the Lord to forgive, instruct and bless the one who made them.—G.

Meetings in Concord.

We spent the Sabbath, June 22nd, in Concord, and had a very interesting season, while engaged in the worship of the Lord. Two more were converted, and three were baptized, making thirty-one in all. Others are seeking the Savior. The good work is still onward. The young converts are doing well, and pressing for the prize to be received at the coming of Christ. Many are anxiously inquiring what they shall do to be saved, being convinced something must soon be done or it will be forever too late. The audiences are very large and attentive, and our social meetings are scenes of lively interest. The Spirit of the Lord is present to comfort and enlighten, while many glad hearts unite in songs of holy joy in hope of eternal glory.

Sabbath evening was spent in commemorating the sufferings of Christ. It was a scene of rare interest and profit. We spread a table sixty-four feet in length, around which were seated about seventy-five of Christ's happy disciples. It was truly a heavenly place. Tears flowed freely while we talked of Jesus, and his great love for us, as shown by his sufferings on the cross; but we felt joyful in the thought that he is soon coming again to reign as the Prince of peace, the Lord of lords, and King of kings. We all felt resolved to be ready to meet him, and share in his glorious triumph, when the good are gathered home to enjoy the society of all the pure that have ever lived upon our planet. We felt sure that our waiting season is nearly ended, and that soon deliverance will come to gladden the hearts of all the faithful.—G.

The Spirit Land.

"The spirit land." Where is it? Echo answers—"where is it?" We have heard and read much about it, but have seen nothing in the Bible concerning such a place; and hence conclude that it exists only in the imaginations of those who believe in such visionary notions, borrowed from the heathen, with a few modifications, to suit the more refined tastes of civilized society. It is astonishing to see how a belief in this fabulous land is interwoven with a large amount of the poetry and other literature of the day. They seem to think it very tame, and without embellishment, unless it abounds in pretty references to the "spirit land." The following poetic effusion, which we clipped from the Advent Herald, of Apr. 26th, '62, is but a common example of the strange inconsistency of modern theology:—

The Dying Girl to her Father.

BY THEO. D. C. MILLER.

"Father, weep not for thy daughter,
Do not shed the bitter tear,
When you see me calmly sleeping
In my dark and silent bier.

Though fond memories often linger
Round your heart, now sad and sore,
Think of me as joined in heaven
With my mother—gone before.

Rays unfading greet my vision,
As I near that blissful shore;
Angels beckon me to hasten,—
Earthly joys are nearly o'er.

I can see my sainted mother—
Hear her notes of heavenly glee!
Listen, father! catch each whisper!
Soon I'll leave this earth—and thee.

Now my mother's form's receding—
See! she stops and waves her hand,
Pointing to the glories o'er us,
In that happy spirit land.

Father! life is swiftly ebbing—
Drawing to its final close,
And your loved and only Helen
In the grave will soon repose.'

Hark! I hear the angel's voices,
Breathed in tones of tender love;
Listen now, their low sweet chantings
Welcome me to worlds above.

Farewell, all ye mortal visions,
Beauteous nature, fare thee well;
Longer I may not behold thee,
Father, dear! farewell—farewell!"

Glen Villa, Oct. 1861.

[The italics are ours.—G.

From the foregoing, we learn that "Helen" is calmly sleeping" in her "dark and silent bier," and at the same time is "joined in heaven" with her "mother gone before." Then, again it is said, "Helen in the grave will soon repose;" and yet, "angel's voices" welcome her "to worlds above." Thank the Lord, that his word teaches no such absurdities as are set forth in the foregoing, and therefore we are not required to believe them.—G.

Excitement.

In these days people seem to be afraid of all religious excitement, while they are greedy after all other kinds. This is as Satan would have it. He is devising every possible means to keep men and women quiet in religious matters, that he may turn their attention to things of this world, and get them excited in picnics, fairs, festivals, old folks' concerts, politics, war, baby shows, dog shows, &c., which he tries to make them believe is all very nice, even if they are up late, and laugh and cry, and clap hands, and shout hurrah till they are hoarse; but if one happens to get happy in the Lord and shout his praise, rejoicing like angels because a sinner is pardoned, and has found peace in believing on Jesus, then the poor worldly professor is ready to cry, "fanaticism," and warn people against excitement.

Well, this is just as Paul said it would be "in the last days,"—"Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof."

The following interesting remarks are from the New York Independent:—G.

"Excitement is only another name for life. Within certain bounds the amount of life-power is determined by the degrees of excitability which exist in any organ or faculty. Every power languishes, and tends toward somnolency or death, as excitement and excitability decrease. The noblest experiences are those which excitement develops. In a poet, it is called inspiration; in an orator, eloquence; in a conversationalist, brilliancy; in a man of action, zeal. Every noble deed, every worthy emotion, is the child of excitement. Only by it can we rise at all into some notable christian moods. It is this that gives the mind repulsive power to throw off and resist evil. It is the secret of those exaltations of mind which are the conditions of faith, or the vivid realization of the invisible—of supersensuous truth.

No wonder that excitement is made a duty: is praised as an eminent virtue. 'Not slothful in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord.' Apollos, 'being fervent in spirit,' spake and taught diligently. He is called eloquent and mighty in the Scriptures. What must be that state of mind which is on fire, which burns? Is there no excitement in a condition for the description of which coals and flames are the images? And, on the other hand, the loss of religious life is described as the loss of heat. 'The love of many shall wax cold.' Zeal is but another name for excitement. That is praised and commended. In short, the sacred Scriptures commend intensity as well as rectitude of feeling—degree as well as kind. . . .

There are many who do not believe in fervid religious emotions, or in a spiritual life at any rate. They regard all moral excitements as extravagancies. They are not in good taste! They are the result of ignorance and weakness! They befit women, and are unbecoming manhood! If there is any religion, it is an esthetic calm; a solemn passage of peaceful awe. . . .

But we ought not to countenance such errors. They are more mischievous than even the most injurious animal excitements can be. Coarse and spurious excitements may adulterate religion; but the want of all excitement utterly destroys it.

Nor are our dangers on the side of undue fervor. A thousand influences are deadening religious feeling. Doubts, philosophies, refinements in taste, and sensitive social proprieties, tend to suppression of feeling among the good; pleasure, ambition, care, and excessive occupation tend to prevent it entirely among worldly men. We need stimulation, not soothing. We need to be aroused, not calmed to a yet greater moral indifference. The want of feeling is the curse and danger of the church."

Expenses of the War.

How often men let their wills run away with their interests. This fact is usually very prominent in war, and all other contentions, and litigations. Many a man has spent ten times more in a law-suit than the amount of his claim against his debtor, and received nothing but hatred and remorse for all his trouble. The same result almost universally follows from all the wars of modern times. The prospect is now that this will be emphatically true of the present war. It is evident that the North would have been far better off to-day, financially and morally, had they bought all the slaves at their full value, and set them free, or carried them home to their native land and loved ones. This would have been a noble deed, resembling the works of our Savior, in his sacrifices for our good. Such an act of christian kindness would have melted every Southern heart, if it was not ossified. How is it now? Let the following statement from the New York Independent be carefully considered; and remember the end is not yet:—G.

"The cost of the war to the Government, up to the 1st day of July, will be not less than $600,000,000. This amount, however, is but a small part of the total expenses of this monstrous rebellion. Who can estimate the damage it has been, and will be, to individuals? Hundreds of millions have already been lost by the depreciation, waste, and destruction of private property. How many ships have been sunk or burned! How many have been idle in our harbors! How many houses, with their contents, have been destroyed! What a vast amount of breadstuffs and other necessaries of life have been worse than wasted! Who can tell how many millions of days the past year have been idly spent? Time is money.

The loss on the real estate of the country, now going a-begging in all quarters, can only be counted by thousands of millions of dollars. How has business suffered in every city, town, and village! The losses here in profits and by depreciation of stock have been fabulous. The wheels of manufactories have been stopped, machine-shops have been closed, and every channel of trade has been clogged. Mechanics, laborers, and professional men have been forced to join the army to save their families from starvation.

The merchants of New York alone, it is estimated, have lost, in bad debts South, more than $100,000,000. Hundreds here have been utterly ruined in consequence. We know a large number of mercantile firms who, two years ago, were regarded independent, but are now hopelessly bankrupt. Their only hope of relief from the crushing burdens resting upon them is in Congress, whither they now look with distressing anxiety. What Senator or Representative will refuse to give them help?

Nearly the whole capital of the country has been diverted from its ordinary peaceful channels. It is used for war instead of aiding to promote our national growth and prosperity. The accumulated property of generations—the surplus gains of an industrious people, on which have rested our commercial strength and thrift—has thus in a moment been swept away.

We are supporting an army of 600,000 men, who have been producers, but are now consumers. Figures will fail to show the immense loss in this direction. But the expenditures and losses must go on for years to come. Sufferings and privations, caused by this unholy war, may begin now, but they will not end, it may be, for a century. How many have pledged their property—their all—to find means for support through these pinching times! Embarrassments thus begun will, in numerous cases, end in bankruptcy and ruin. Homesteads will be sold, and hundreds or thousands of dollars will be sacrificed, in many a little family group.

What is to become of the great army of maimed and crippled soldiers? What a mighty host of pensioners, for years, will draw their living from our National Treasury! These patriots, who counted not their lives dear unto them, will now add little to the capital of the country. They must be nursed and tenderly cared for till every tongue among them shall cease to tell the story of our wrongs and the price they have paid for liberty. The millions for their support we will give ungrudgingly.

The total losses of the nation and of individuals, traceable directly and indirectly to the war, cannot be less than ten thousand millions of dollars.

War News. There has been some very hard fighting near Richmond, during the past week, which has resulted in heavy losses on both sides.—G.

At Home.

To my Friends:—I am happy to report myself safe at home this morning, through God's mercy, after an absence of twenty-two days; during which time I have been enabled to travel, by land and water, about 1250 miles, in Mass., N. Y., Pa., N. J., and R. I., attend twenty-five or six meetings, and preach some twenty sermons in Barre, Shelby, Rochester, and Brockport, N. Y.; and in Riverpoint, Richmond, S Kingston, and Providence, R. I., besides attending to divers business matters of more or less importance to myself and others.

My family, I believe, are comfortably well, and I am in pretty good condition for a man who "don't eat anything," "lives without salt," has been to Dansville and "soaked himself to death in water," and does n't "eat pork to make him strong." I hope my friends who are strong, after a dozen years of such work as this, may feel better, and be able to do more than I, who always was of slender health from childhood.

After a few days at Tremont camp-meeting, I shall, if the Lord will, try to push the work of publishing with new vigor, and fill the many orders on hand for the long delay of which I am still obliged to beg indulgence. Grace be with you all.

H. L. Hastings.

Correspondence.

From Russell Williams.

Bro. Grant:—I have heard nothing directly upon the coming of the King of glory, since I enjoyed the labors and admonitions of Bro P. B. Morgan at Union Mills, Ia. Yet, glory to God, I can look forward with joyful anticipation to the day when the weary saint no more shall roam o'er the barren plains of earth, but, in the language of the poet—

"Dwell in a sunny, peaceful home," free from the turmoils of earth.

Dear brethren and sisters, let us stand firm and unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord; for surely at the ending of the days the vision will speak, and not lie. Then every one shall have deliverance who are written in the book. Our country and world is being convulsed with war and commotion; the cup of iniquity is nearly full, and He whose right it is will come and reign King of the nations. Then will the kings, princes and potentates of earth yield submission to the sceptre of "David's greater Son." The small and the great, the rich and the poor, will be there; and the servant will be free from his master. The prize is still in advance of us; but not as it was in the Grecian games: though all might run, but one could obtain the prize. In the christian race every one that runs the whole length of the celestial road, fights the good fight, keeps the faith, has the promise of a crown of everlasting life, of unfading glory, which the Lord the righteous Judge will give unto them at his appearing. Let us heed the admonition of the apostle, and so run that we may at last obtain that enduring crown. The reward promised is not a pension at the close of the war, but, listen!—"Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him."

War and dissension may fill our world, but the child of God, who has that hope which is as an anchor to the soul, sure and steadfast, reaching to that within the vail, whither the forerunner hath for us entered, all the combined powers of darkness can never move, whose faith and hopes are anchored within the meridian circle of the eternal throne. We may have trials and temptations for a few days here, but our "light afflictions," which are "but for a moment," may and will "work out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." With all the din of battle with which we are surrounded, the christian should remember the admonition of the Savior,—"My kingdom is not of this world; if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight." And after this, the declaration of the apostle that the "weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strong holds." How necessary then that we put on the whole armor of God, that we "may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, . . . against spiritual wickedness in high places." Let us then "endure hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ," looking for and preparing for the realization of that "blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ," who has promised, if we are faithful to our high and holy calling, to "change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body."

It appears evident that the Lord hath a controversy with the nations of earth; and that great day, looked and longed for by patriarchs and prophets, by the good and the blest of past ages, is fast approaching when the vail of mortality will be rent in twain, and the glories of eternity revealed to a sin-defiled and sorrow-stricken world. Then may you and I, dear brother and fellow-traveler to the judgment bar of God, find a hiding-place in the chambers of Omnipotence, secure within the pavilion of God's eternal love; no more clogged with mortality, but where our unfettered souls may bask in the full fruition of eternal felicity.

"Fly swifter round, ye wheels of time,
And bring the welcome day."

Jefferson City, Iowa.

From J. H. Horton.

Bro. Grant:—Your valuable paper comes laden with many good things from the dear brethren and sisters scattered abroad in the vineyard. It has now been a welcome visitor for nearly three years, and my dear wife and children would feel it a great loss to be without it, as we do not have preaching here very often. Bro. and Sr. Deviney, with ourselves, are all in this place who believe in immortality only through Christ. They have been growing in grace and in the knowledge of the truth since four years ago, when they were converted to the knowledge of lie only through Christ under the preaching of Bro. E. C. Cowles, who has preached occasionally for us. He is one of the best Bible scholars we have in our land. He is and has been preaching for the West Groton and Dresserville Christian churches for several years, with a good degree of success, and his labors are blessed by the conversion of many precious souls, whom he has buried in the likeness of Christ's death. He is truly a workman that "needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word."

Over twenty years have passed since God for Christ's sake forgave my sins, and I feel to rejoice in my Savior that I have been made to see the truth, and to hold fast through faith to this time, when the nations are becoming angry, and the weak say they are strong; when the mighty men are being stirred up, and the plowshare and pruning hook are beaten into implements of war. With great energy the nations are making arrangements for war. Soon the powers of the earth will be shaken, and then shall ye see the "sign of the Son of man" in the heavens. Brethren and sisters, are we not seeing the last signs coming to pass? May we not lift up our heads and rejoice? Soon the time will come when the implements of war will be beaten into pruning hooks and plowshares, when nations shall learn war no more, and all shall know the Lord, and none will say, I am sick. Soon He that hath the keys will come in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory, will bind Satan, unlock the dark charnel house embracing the sleeping saints, and we shall be changed. And then to those living,—oh death, where is thy sting? and those the grave had imprisoned,—oh grave, where is thy victory? Let us have our lamps burning brighter than ever, waiting for the Lord, that he come not on us as a thief in the night. "But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief. Ye are all the children of light, and the children of the day: we are not of the night, nor of darkness."

Kelloggsville, N. Y.

From Mary E. Streeter.

Dear Brn. and Srs. in Christ:—We are truly living in perilous times, when the love of many has already grown cold, and evil men and seducers are growing worse and worse. Now is the time for us to be up and doing all we can to get people ready for judgment. Let us gird on the gospel armor anew, and try and do more for Jesus than we ever have done before; for it is those that do the will of the Master that will hear that blessed word—"Come, ye blessed." It is a great thing to be a christian. To be a christian is to be Christ-like. Are we so? God help us! It will be very sad indeed to be deceived at the last great day, and that day is fast approaching. Have we done all we could to relieve our brother or sister?

It is truly heart-cheering to the weary pilgrim, as he journeys through this vale of tears, to think of the rich reward that is to be given at the end of the race. We shall indeed be well repaid for all the privations we have to encounter while in this wilderness. Eternal life in the kingdom will richly atone for all we suffer here. I often think how changed it will be when we get over on the other shore. Here my dear companion is called to go and sound the last notes of warning to a lost and perishing world, and hard indeed it is for us to be separated; but Father says, Go, and we must submit, knowing that it is but for a little while; and were it not for the blessed hope of the gospel, it seems that I could never submit to it; but in the world to come we will all be together, and never more fear separation. Blessed thought! that we are so near our journey's end. What a good Father we have! Dear children, be faithful. Soon it will be said—

"Child, thy Father calls, come home!"

Dana, Mass.

Obituary Notices.

Died in Augusta, Me., of diphtheria, June 26th, JOHN L., son of Bro. Wesley R. and Sr. Ann HOLT, aged three years and two months.

The loss of this pretty child was a sad stroke to the parents, whom we endeavored to comfort with the hope of the resurrection of the dead, showing them from the Scriptures that their little son is sure of a home in the kingdom. They intend to be ready to greet him when he rises into life again at the coming of Christ. May the Lord bless them in their days of affliction, and enable them to keep ready for the great day of the Lord.—C.

FOREIGN NEWS.

From Liverpool 11th ult., and Queenstown 12th.

The Times regards the defeat of General Banks as one of the most important successes of the Confederates, on account of the lesson that it teaches the North, showing that efforts and sacrifices, greater than any that have gone before, must be made if even a border State is to be won back to the Union. It also says hopes of an early solution must be dispelled, and mutual hatred tend to make a new union more and more impracticable.

The Daily News treats the defeat of Banks as quite unimportant, and not in the slightest degree calculated to disconcert Gen. McClellan's plans. It was nothing more than a mere raid of the Confederates.

The Morning Post denounces in the bitterest terms Gen. Butler's proclamation relative to the ladies of New Orleans, and thinks the Government is bound to recall and court martial him, and says such an act as this, if not promptly disavowed, would soon turn the scale finally and decisively in favor of the Confederate cause.

Visitors at the great exhibition were numbering about 60,000 a day.

The Paris journals announce that it has been decided to send reinforcements to Mexico, but not until next October.

The Bishops in their address to the Pope deplored the oppression of the church, and declared that temporal power was necessary for the independence of the Pope. They approved all the Pope has done, and entreated him to remain firm in resistance. The Pope in allocution deplored the spread of the revolutionary spirit, the oppression of the church, and the efforts against temporal power. He urged the Bishops to redouble their efforts in arresting these errors.

THREE DAYS LATER.—Per Arabia

[English Press on American affairs.]

The Times, in an editorial on the Ministers' denial of mediation projects, says: "There will be no disposition to quarrel with the decision of the Cabinet, and the country will gladly leave the question in the hands of the government to choose such opportunity and mode of action as it may think proper.

The Times admits that advice from England would not be acceptable; but it would rejoice to see Napoleon or the Czar press on the Americans the counsels which would be indignantly rejected if offered by England.

The Times then speculates on the disastrous effects of either Northern conquest or the reverse, and argues that if the Southerners continue to protract the struggle, the time must come when the intervention of Europe will be demanded by the interests of humanity, and perhaps accepted willingly by the exhausted combatants. England may then with prudence hold itself in readiness to support any proposition which may be urged by its more favored neighbors.

The Morning Post says that Lord Palmerston's announcement that no mediation in American affairs is intended, will be received with satisfaction, as indicative as well of the good sense of the governments of France and England as of their respect for international law. After expatiating, however, on the uselessness of any present effort, the Post says the time may come, and that shortly, when it will become the paramount duty of neutral states to interpose; but now, as at the commencement of the war, they are undoubtedly bound to stand aloof.

The Manchester Guardian contends that the time for England to interfere has not yet come, if, indeed it ever will, and attaches little importance to the French reports of negotiations for mediation. It thinks France can go further in the matter than England, and it would rejoice to see the struggle ended without interference by England.

Paris papers state that the approaching journey of Count Persigney to London is exclusively political, and that he will submit to the English Cabinet the private views of the Emperor relative to arrangements for a joint mediation in American affairs.

ITALY.

It is reported that the Papal Government has officially informed the French Government that it will listen to no proposition modifying the conditions of its temporal power.

It is stated that Russia has announced her willingness to recognize the Kingdom of Italy, if the government will undertake to prohibit any organization of Polish refugees.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

New York, June 24. The Tribune's Washington dispatch says there is reason to believe that a battle will be fought at Chattanooga within a day or two.

Harper's Ferry, June 24. A pontoon bridge will arrive this afternoon on the way to Gen. Fremont.

The greater part of the force here is throwing up earthworks on Bolivar Heights. Supplies are plenty.

It was rumored yesterday that the rebel General Ewell was advancing on New Creek with 4000 men. The 23d Illinois and the 87th Pennsylvania Regiments went there this morning.

Jackson is by this time checked, and Generals Fremont, Banks and Shields have joined their forces to pursue him.

New York, June 24. It is stated by persons well informed, that President Lincoln, accompanied by Gen. Pope, arrived from Washington last night and took a special train, which had been kept in readiness, and went to West Point, where Gen. Scott met them by appointment by telegraph. Speculations, in which the movements of the War Department are mixed up, are afloat, relative to the President's hasty visit of consultation with Gen. Scott, but nothing of a satisfactory or probable nature can be ascertained.

Fortress Monroe, June 24. The reports from Gen. McClellan's army to-day seem to indicate a desire on the part of the rebels to bring on a general engagement before McClellan is ready to make them skedaddle again with his siege guns and "regular approaches." Skirmishing has been going on for the last three days on the left of our line with the usual results.

Whilst Gen. McClellan is operating surely to save us the humiliation of the most insignificant retreat before Richmond, he has now so invested said city as to leave little else for the rebels to do but fight, and fight to the bitter end. Should they attempt to retreat South, McClellan can now head them off with an army south of Petersburg, which he can throw across the James river in a few hours, under cover of our gunboats. To retreat to Lynchburg and the mountains would entail starvation and utter demoralization to their army, and the rebels would simply wage war for a time as guerrillas.

Everything is ready on the left of our line, which is evidently to be the fulcrum of the advance upon Richmond, standing firm while the whole army sweeps gradually round upon the enemy. The rebel army numbers about one hundred thousand effective men, with seventy-two field pieces. To back this they have their parallels of earthworks, to which they will no doubt fall back, if they are so blind as not to know that they will certainly be crushed. Our entire lines are gradually advancing, and the big fight must soon take place. If they stand firm, it will be the most extensive and the bloodiest ever fought upon this continent. We have the advantage of the enemy in men, material, discipline and indomitable courage. Our artillery is far more effective than theirs in every way.

The enemy has no advantageous retreat left, and he must fight. Our success is certain and will be perfectly overwhelming if our artillery and cavalry are properly used, and our generals endeavor to fight brigades and divisions, rather than regiments.

I can say nothing of our numerical strength or of the advantages of position, but I may be permitted to say that the army of the Potomac contains more men than any one man can command, according to the best military authority.

The ball must open soon; indeed, the music for the promenade is now ringing in our ears. The rebels are said to be feeling our position with their artillery; they might as well save their ammunition, for we are not only feeling their positions, but advancing and holding them, one after another, every hour almost.

June 17. Our forces labor with surprising industry to carry out the designs of the General Commanding, and when Richmond has fallen, the immensity of their work, and the genius of his plans, will both surprise and gratify. Would that some of the growlers were here to see for themselves. How unfortunate that we newspaper correspondents can tell of nothing. All around us are preparations for a most magnificent—something; our eyes behold the sight; people are anxious to know all about it; but whisper not a word, ye drivers of the quill, who are presumed not only to know, but to tell, every thing. Suffice it to say, that in no case is another Casey surprise anticipated, and that once attacked, either the enemy must be ours, or we his.

Our first parallel, three miles long, is completed. It is believed the rebels cannot muster 60,000 men on whom they can rely.

June 25, evening. Gen. Hooker, at nine o'clock this morning, advanced his division with a view to occupy a new position.

The result was that the troops met with a most determined resistance from the enemy, which lasted until four o'clock in the afternoon, during which the rebels were forced to give way before the invincible courage of our men.

During the day everything indicated a general engagement, but the evening showed no disposition to accept the challenge. Our troops all fought gallantly as ever. The loss on our side was about 200 in killed and wounded.

Washington, June 26. It is believed here that the skirmishes of yesterday were contests for positions necessary to secure the construction of an advanced parallel, which will not only bring heavy siege guns into position, but will enable Hooker's division to move forward from its camp ground, which is so filled with partially buried men and horses as to have been unhealthy.

Richmond is represented as one great hospital, with sick and wounded in nearly every house, and provisions scarce and high.

New York, June 26. A letter from before Richmond to the times says Gen. McClellan is bringing up from Yorktown sundry siege guns, some of which have already arrived. It was agreed between Col. Keyes and Gen. Howell Cobb in a recent conference that surgeons taken on the field of battle should not be regarded as prisoners of war, but non-combatants. This arrangement has been sent to Washington for approval. There can be but little doubt it will receive it.

Temporary hospitals will be put up at Fair Oaks station, at Savage's, and elsewhere near the front, and accommodations in tents have already been prepared for 2500 or 3000 at White House. This will, if possible, be still further enlarged.

Deserters who came in to-day confirm the report that Gen. Johnston's wound is very severe, two of his ribs being broken; and that Lee is in command. Wise is in disgrace and has retired to a country residence.

In the Richmond Dispatch we find the announcement that Jeff. Davis was taken ill at Raleigh, N. C., whither he had gone to visit his sick child.

The Tribune's Washington dispatch says Gen. Pope laughs at the idea of Beauregard having reinforced the rebel army at Richmond by a single soldier. He considers the war at the West virtually at an end.

The retreat of Beauregard from Corinth was a necessity imposed on him by the circumstances that surrounded him, and not a stroke of strategy, as has been pretended by some admirers of his generalship. A correspondent of the Edgefield (S. C.) Advertiser, writing from Okolono, Miss., says the retreat from Corinth and upon Beauregard's army "a terribly demoralizing effect." He says "many declare they will quit the service and go home and indeed, the Tennesseeans are now deserting every day." It also appears that Beauregard has lost some of his laurels; "not a few of those who were heretofore foremost in his praise are now the most bitter in denouncing him." The same correspondent says the Southern army "suffered immensely from sickness at Corinth," and "the whole country from there to Columbus, Miss., is one vast hospital." There are two thousand sick at Okolona, and they are in a terribly suffering condition.

Professor Lowe now has three balloons inflated and making ascensions at all hours of the day and night. "The Union" now floats over Mechanicsville, "The Intrepid" over New Bridge, and "The Constitution" over the left wing. No movement can be made by the rebels, when it is calm or the air is free from fog, but it is instantly reported to headquarters.

Philadelphia, June 29. The Sunday Dispatch publishes the following:

City Point, Va., June 27. Refugees taken on board by our gunboats report that Jackson, Price, and Beauregard are in Richmond, and will be assigned to important commands shortly.

About one third of the valley of the Shenandoah is now held by the Union troops, and the rest is under the sway of Jackson and his horde. One of the rebel schemes is to attempt getting in the rear of our army and cutting it off. The possibility of this is believed to have been foiled by the falling back of Fremont.

Memphis, Tenn, June 25. A detachment of the 6th Illinois cavalry made a descent on the rebel cavalry guarding a train near Cold Water station, on the Mississippi and Tennessee Railroad, and captured 25 prisoners and 20,000 pounds of bacon. They also destroyed the bridges, making the road impassable.

Memphis, June 26. The first train on the Memphis and Charleston Railroad for Corinth, with a number of teams, wagons, and one company of the 56th Ohio Regiment, besides several officers, was attacked by a large force of rebel cavalry, yesterday, about twelve miles from this city. The rebels destroyed the locomotive, burnt the cars, killed ten of our men, and captured several officers.

Middletown, Va. June 29. Gen. Fremont this morning turned over the command of hisforces to Gen. Schenck.

New York, June 28. The Times' correspondent estimated our loss in the fight on the 25th before Richmond at from 600 to 700.

The Herald's letter says: "Wednesday, June 25, was signalized by another glorious struggle between the rebels and Union troops, in which the latter were twice victorious. About 6000 of our men on that day encountered two divisions of the rebel army, and drove them back a mile.

By a remarkable blunder we relinquished all the ground we had gained as soon as we obtained possession it, and then, when the error was sifted and understood, our gallant lads went at it again and corrected the mistake. Upon our retirement the enemy had once more swept in over the field, and a second time we drove him back step by step over the ground originally won, and maintained our position there at night.

New York, June 27. The steamer Philadelphia, from Beaufort, and the Ericsson, from Key West, and Port Royal have arrived.

The Ericsson brings 181 passengers, including Gen. Benham and staff, and 57 soldiers who were wounded in the late engagement on James Island, near Charleston. The United States troops under General Benham made an attack at 4 o'clock on the morning of the 16th, and were repulsed after four hours' hard fighting, with a loss of 668 in killed, wounded and missing. The Michigan 8th regiment had but 250 men left on roll call. The New York 79th suffered severely.

New York, June 30. A special dispatch to the Tribune says the Union ram fleet was off Vicksburg on the 26th inst., and communicated with Commodore Farragut, who was to attack that place on Friday. Twenty vessels were in position and Farragut was confident of victory. The rebel force is estimated at 12,000.

Great Battle Fought.

New York, June 30. The Tribune has just issued an extra with dispatches from the battle field Sunday morning.

The dispatch states that a severe and most determined battle was fought on the right wing on Thursday and Friday, which is claimed by some of our officers as a successful strategic movement into which the enemy unwittingly had been drawn, and which will soon result in the capture of Richmond and the entire rebel army.

The attack was made by the enemy in immense force, who crossed the Chickahominy near the railroad above Mechanicsville Thursday afternoon.

They fought desperately, but were unable to drive our men a single rod, though the enemy were ten to one.

The only force engaged on that day was Gen. McCall's division. The battle lasted from 2 o'clock to 9 P. M., when the division was ordered back.

General McClellan was on the field, and expressed himself satisfied with the result.

About 2 o'clock P. M., the enemy's infantry and squadrons of cavalry crossed the Chickahominy in immense force, making a rapid advance toward McCall's division, intrenched on a hilly woodland, across a swampy ravine, about a mile in the rear of Mechanicsville.

The enemy advanced down in the rear of Mechanicsville, on a low, marshy ground, where our forces were drawn up behind rifle pits and earth works, where the conflict became most terrible.

The rebels, with most determined courage, attempted to push forward over the miry ground, but bullets and grape fell among them like hail, until, in the words of an officer, 'they lay like flies in a bowl of sugar,' and withdrew Company K of Bucktails, was surrounded, and the last known of them they were trying to cut their way through an immense force. Their fate is not known, but it is presumed that the greater number are taken prisoners.

Washington, 24. The extradition treaty with Mexico is officially proclaimed. Its provisions do not apply to political offence or embrace the return of fugitive slaves.

The Providence Journal of the 24th of June, makes the following statement

It is only too clear that designing men in the northern states are already laying their plans to "fraternize with the rebels," so far as to oppose the war and patch up some kind of a miserable compromise with the traitors as soon as they dare. Fernando Wood and his brother are said to be in the plot at New York. Their clique has already held a meeting to prepare for their work. In Indiana and Illinois, leagues have already been formed to resist the payment of the national taxes. We have no doubt that these wretched intriguers could recruit their forces to some extent in New Hampshire and Connecticut. They could find a few of their sort in other states. It is well to be ready for them.

TERRIBLE ACCIDENT.—A very melancholy accident occurred on Tuesday, June 24th, in the extensive iron works of Messrs Lazell, Perkins & Co., Bridgewater. A boiler exploded in the building occupied for a forge, killing six, and wounding several other persons. The explosion created great havoc in the building, destroying one end of the structure and the windows of other portions. The windows of the houses in the neighborhood were broken. Every person in the vicinity of the boiler at the time of the accident was either killed or dangerously wounded.—Jour

TORNADO AT SPRINGFIELD.—A storm of wind and rain, very remarkable in its effects, passed over Springfield on Saturday evening, causing great damage in some places. On State street and for some distance south, huge trees were torn up or twisted off, in some cases as cleanly as if cut down with an axe. Chimneys were blown down, and a blacksmith's shop demolished. At West Springfield large hailstones fell, and considerable damage was done to trees.

☞ Letters received from Rome state that the bishops who have reached that city have handed over to the Pope a sum of five hundred thousand Roman crowns collected as Peter's pence.

☞ A telegraphic dispatch from West Point states that Gen. Scott has received intelligence of the death of his wife at Rome June 10th. Her age was seventy-two years.

Married.

At Essex, Ct., June 19th, by Rev. J. A. Gallup, Bro. FRANKLIN HALE, of Collinsville, Ct., to Sister H. JANETTE BROWN of Essex.

Notices, &c.

GHOSTOLOGY.—The tract on Ghostology is now ready. Price 10 cts. single, postage paid. $6 per hundred.

☞ We were obliged to omit some of the cash receipts this week.

Campmeeting.

The great interest manifested at our tent meeting in New Preston, Ct., has induced us, with the advice of the brethren in that section, to appoint a campmeeting, to commence Tuesday, Sept. 2d, at 10 A. M. Some eight tents have already been counted up for the occasion, and we hope the number will be much larger. Brethren that want to work for the Lord will find here a new and interesting field.

We desire all who can, to bring provisions and tents for themselves and others. Plain food, and "all things common" is the Bible rule; let us practice it cheerfully. A daily stage from New Milford (Housatonic R. R.) at 12 will bring in all who wish. Distance eight miles.

H. PRATT.

Grove Meeting.

The grove meeting in Sauk Co., Wis., July 18th, will be in Sumpter, (formerly Kingston) near the centre of the town. Sumpter joins Baraboo on the South. Brethren coming from a distance will call on Bro. Knapp.

G. W. BARNES.

Meeting of the Advent Christian Association.

To the brethren in Christ, and churches of the Lord who "serve the living God," and "wait for his Son from heaven," Greeting:—The Board of Managers, after due consultation, have decided to appoint the third annual meeting of the Advent Christian Association, at Wilbraham, Mass., to commence Tuesday, 4 o'clock, P. M., August 26th, 1862.

Two reasons have led them to decide upon this time in preference to October, as heretofore. First—A larger attendance can be secured; Second—Much expense can be saved. These are weighty considerations. The business to be transacted at the annual meeting of this Association is very important. The interests of every church, and every individual, "looking for the blessed hope," are involved in its proceedings. This Society controls the World's Crisis. It appoints its Editors and Managers. It decides what its character shall be, and marks out its policy, whether it shall give expression to every idea, however fanciful or absurd, which may demand its columns; or whether it shall select such only as are "meat in due season." It becomes necessary, therefore, that every church be represented, that our family paper be sustained in such a manner as to "feed the flock," that we may know whether its Editorship, eminently successful thus far, shall be changed or not.

A full representation, so desirable, can be best secured during campmeeting week. Distant churches in the South, West and East, are usually represented then, while they cannot afford six weeks afterwards to send other representatives so far to attend the Association alone. Having, for these reasons, fixed upon this time for our third annual meeting, it is hoped that we may have a large and profitable one. Lest we be disappointed, let earnest prayer be made to God daily, that whatever shall be done at that time may be done, not in the name of man, self, or party, but "in the name of the Lord Jesus."

DANIEL T. TAYLOR, Chairman.
H. F. CARPENTER, Clerk.

June 7th, 1862.

NOTE. The Board of the Advent Christian Association are requested to meet at Wilbraham on Tuesday, August 26th, at 8 o'clock, A. M. A prompt and punctual attendance desirable.

D. T. TAYLOR, President.
H. F. CARPENTER, Clerk.

NOTE. Letters are solicited from churches and ministers who cannot possibly be otherwise represented. They may be directed to H. F. Carpenter, Collins Depot, Mass.

All pastors and evangelists, and delegates from churches co-operating with this Society, are members. Each church is allowed one delegate, and one additional delegate, for every fifty members above the number of twenty-five members. None can vote by letter.

Fourth of July Meeting.

The meeting held for two years on the 4th, in the grove on Bro. Higgins' place in Palmer, and advertised to be there again this year, will be held on the camp ground in Wilbraham, and continue over the following Sunday. All that can come, are invited. Bring your provisions with you, unless you want to board at the hotel. Two tents will be raised to accommodate those who wish to stop on the ground one night. Bro. Ross and Wendell are invited and expected, with others. Baptism and the Lord's Supper will be attended to. For the Church,

A. M. HIGGINS.

Campmeeting at Wilbraham.

It is thought best that our great annual gathering at Wilbraham commence this year Monday, Aug. 25th, and continue one week. Particulars hereafter.

F. H. BERICK, MILES GRANT, GEO T ADAMS, } Committee of Arrangements.

Notice.

The Lord willing, a two days meeting will be held at Norwalk, O., commencing Saturday, July 5th, and continuing over Lord's day. We extend a cordial invitation to all the brethren in this section to come and worship the Lord with us. Elder John T. Ongley will be with us to minister in the word of life, and we shall be happy to see other preaching brethren here also.

Yours in hope, P. B. HOYT.

Notice.

A special conference of the Iowa, Minn., and Wis. Christian Conference will be held in connection with the grove meeting at Hesper, Almikee Co., Iowa, July 4th, 1862. Hope to see many preachers and delegates, as there is business of importance, in which all are interested.

WM. SHELDON, Pres.
PETER S. W. DEYO, Clerk.

P. S. We expect to have the New England Mission Tent.

Information.

To the churches in the vicinity of Plainville, Ct., I would say, having moved to Plainville, I desire to devote my time to the cause of Christ in Plainville and the adjoining towns, as the Lord may seem to direct. I have a standing appointment in Plainville once in four weeks. My next appointment here is July 13th. I hope to hear from the churches in this vicinity soon.

The preaching brethren who wish to visit Plainville to preach, will please confer with Bro. George Morgan, who is corresponding Secretary of the Church. My P. O. address is Plainville, Ct.

WM. A. FENN.

Notice.

By divine permission, the annual meeting of Adventists will be held in Kingston, N. H., on Friday, the 4th of July next, (in a grove most probably) commencing at 10 1-2 o'clock, A. M. Eld. A. Hale, of Charlestown, Mass., will be with us. Brethren and sisters from the sister churches, we cordially invite, and whosoever will, let them come.

F. GALE.

Notice.

Eld. Peter Noka is expected to preach in the new Meeting-house in Gloucester, R. I., July 4th, at half-past ten o'clock, A. M., and at one o'clock, P. M.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brethren that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as TUESDAY MORNING, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

Reasons for my Hope, and the Tokens of its Speedy Realization. 3d 1000. Paper, 25 cts. Cloth, 40 cts.

Containing an exposition of the hope of the Church—abounding in facts pertaining to Prophecy, the signs of the times, the increase of knowledge, spread of the Gospel, Missions, Tracts, Bible translations, Bible societies &c. The Statistics alone are worth many times the price of the book.

Retribution; or, The Doom of the Ungodly, after the Resurrection of the Dead, Just and Unjust. Paper, 20 cts. Cloth, 40 cts.

A solemn and earnest argument in proof of the resurrection of the dead, just and unjust; the punishment of the ungodly in the lake of fire, the second death; and a refutation of the notion that wicked men have no resurrection, judgment or conscious punishment after death. Judging from the reception it meets with, it hits the nail on the head!

Pauline Theology; or, The Scripture Doctrine of Future Punishment, as taught in the Epistles of Paul. 12th 1000. Paper, 15 cts.

This work contains the passages on future punishment found in Paul's FOURTEEN EPISTLES. His words are quoted and defined in Greek and in English. Many, upon reading it, have given up their sectarian theology to embrace the theology of Paul. The wide circulation of the work, which has never been refuted, indicates its value and interest.

The Old Paths; or, The Primitive Doctrine of a Future Life. 3d 1000. Paper, 10 cts.

Beginning where Pauline theology closes, this treatise exhibits the teachings of all the Apostolical Fathers, as found in the writings bearing their names, such as Barnabas, Clement, Hermas, Ignatius, and Polycarp, giving large quotations illustrating their opinions upon the questions of Life, Immortality, Future Punishment, and the Kingdom of God.

Tracts on Immortality: containing Pauline Theology, The Old Paths, Milton on the State of the Dead, and other minor tracts. Bound in cloth, 30 cts.

Tracts on Prophecy: containing more than Twenty pointed, stirring, and earnest Tracts on Prophetical and Practical subjects. Bound in cloth, 30 cts.

The Perfect State; or, Forever with the Lord. A Book of Instruction and Consolation. PREPARING. $1.00.

This work contains a statement of the Scripture teachings concerning how men shall come to be forever "with the Lord," including lengthy and critical discussions of Paradise, Hades, Sheol, the Intermediate State, and other matters of interest; while it serves to cheer the heart-stricken and with the hope of glory when Christ, who is our life, shall appear.

The Voice of the Church on the Coming and Kingdom of the Redeemer; or, a History of the Doctrine of the Reign of Christ on Earth. By D. T. Taylor. Edited and published by H. L. Hastings. 4th edition. 420 pp. 12mo. Price, $1.00.

This is the ablest work extant on this subject. It proves that the common notion of the world's conversion was unknown to the Church of Christ for 1500 years. ## Earth's Coming Doom.

I read in ancient prophets
Of earth's approaching doom,
Of a burning, awful judgment,
Of heavens veiled in gloom;

Read of Jehovah's terror
On guilty nations hurled,
I read of woe and horror
That shall seize a guilty world.

The heavens shall blaze with baleful fire,
And worlds in ruin lay;
Jehovah, robed with vengeance dire,
Shall sweep their thrones away.

While burning heavens with thunders shake,
And lightnings blast the skies,
The dead their rocking graves forsake,
With terror and surprise.

The mutterings of the thunder
On Europe's shores we hear;
The nations gaze in wonder,
And tremble with dire fear.

Dissension, strife, commotion,
Are traveling hand in hand;
Dregs of the Vial's potion
We drink in our fair land.

Ye sons of pleasure, waken!
Ere skies in ruin rend,
Christian, for the conflict strengthen,
Prepare ye for the end!

Gospel of the Kingdom.

[Statistics from Dr. Coggswell's Harbinger Mill.]

Jesus Christ said, "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." "And I will give power unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and threescore days (1260 years), clothed in sackcloth." Matt. 24; Rev. 11. The abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, was the persecuting power over the Christians for 1260 years, and the word of God, or the two witnesses. God raised up translators of his word in that desolation. In 1324 Wiclif was born. He translated first the New Testament, then the Old, out of Latin into English, for the use of the people. Between Wiclif's first English version of the Scriptures in manuscript, and the establishment of the British and Foreign Bible Society, the Scriptures were not only translated but printed in the ancient languages, which were the roots of all the others. Fifty versions of the Scriptures in different languages were preserved through the 1260 years of the papal persecution. In ancient languages, four; for Europe, thirty-two; Asia, nine; Africa, two; America, three. Wiclif's version spread widely, even in manuscript, throughout England. He died Dec. 29, 1384. In his time, the price of a Bible, fairly written in manuscript, with a commentary, was not less than thirty pounds. A hundred years after Wiclif died, William Tyndal and Luther and Zuingle were born. These men made great progress in learning, especially in the languages, and translated the Old and New Testaments. Wiclif, the first translator, expected to die a martyr; but he did not, and after he had been dead forty-four years, his grave was ransacked for his "body and bones," which were burnt, and the ashes cast into the brook, that conveyed them into the river that emptied into the ocean. The Roman Church burnt men, bones, and books. Tyndal and Dr. Barnes were both burned at the stake. Luther died in peace in his native town in 1546, notwithstanding all his aggressions on the papacy, for he even burned its bulls or decrees; but his writings were consumed; and on the very spot where the bones and books of Wiclif, Tyndal and Luther were burnt, now stands the Depository of the Religious Tract Society, whence the writings of Wiclif, Tyndal and Luther go forth throughout the world.

William Tyndal gave to England its greatest treasure—the printed English Bible. In 1450 the first book in the world was printed, and it is believed that book was the Bible in Latin. It was beautifully printed on vellum. One of the existing copies was sold in 1827 for five hundred pounds. The Bible has been copied as no book of man ever was or ever will be. It has seen itself often persecuted, or forgotten, or forbidden, or burned. It has had to traverse the first three centuries of pagan persecutions, when persons found in possession of the holy books were thrown to the wild beasts,—next the seventh, eighth, and ninth centuries, when false books and traditions were everywhere multiplied,—the tenth and eleventh centuries, when so few could read even among princes,—the twelfth, thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, when the use of the Scriptures was punished with death, and the books of the ancient fathers were burnt. God gave mighty power unto his two witnesses, and they did prophesy 1260 years, clothed in sackcloth and mourning.

Jesus said, "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." "Immediately after the tribulation of those days the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven." In 1780 the sun and moon were darkened, and the two witnesses were no more in sackcloth,—the time (1260 yrs.) ended there, and the saints are no longer in tribulation. In 1780 the first Bible Society was established for the use of the Army and Navy in England;—in 1781, a society was formed to abolish slavery;—in 1782, the first Sabbath School Society, by Robert Raikes. He died in 1811; and Sabbath Schools had increased to the number of 300,000 in Great Britain. In 1783, Rev. Thomas Charles, a missionary in Wales, found in many parts of the country the sound of the gospel had scarcely been heard for centuries, and the people were ignorant; in many parishes not ten persons could read. The Bible was scarcely to be found in any poor cottage in Wales. In 1784–5, Mr. Cowper, Rev. John Newton, Dr. Scott, Rev. John Wesley, and Dr. Coke, were interested in forming Sabbath Schools; also sent out missionaries to the West Indies. In 1786, a Missionary Society was formed, and three hundred and nine missionaries sent out of England to different parts of the world. In 1787, Bible Society formed by Dr. Scott for the poor in Wales. Oct. 2d, 1789, English Baptist Missionary Society established by Rev. William Carey, one of its first missionaries. Dr. Carey, Dr. Marshman, and Rev. W. Ward, the great translators for the continent of India, reached there in 1793. Two or three days before the death of Dr. Carey, in 1834, he was carried down stairs by his intimate friends into his study, in a state of extreme exhaustion, to finish the last revised sheets of the last language into which he had translated the Scriptures. His work was done, and he was ready to depart. He had labored in India forty years, and had given her the word of God, in whole or in part, in thirty different languages. Dr. Morrison and Dr. Milne have labored in China from the year 1807. Dr. Medhurst and other Protestant missionaries at present in China, have recently completed a revised edition, comprising both the Old and New Testaments. The Chinese Testament can now be printed in China for the small sum of four-pence. Three hundred and sixty millions of people have the gospel for a witness in their nation. In 1791, the first Sabbath School Society in the United States. 1792, Baptist Missionary Society. 1794, Society for the slaves in the West Indies. 1795, London Miss. Society. 1796, Edinburgh Miss. Society. 1797, Baptist Home Miss. Society. 1798, Connecticut Miss. Society,—also Church Miss. Society, Africa East. 1799, Mass. Miss. Society, in Boston. 1799, Religious Temperance Society, Eng'd. 1800, Church Miss. Society, England. 1803, first Tract Society, United States. 1804, British Foreign Bible Society.

Twenty-four years from the time the sun and moon were darkened, to the establishment of this Bible Society in 1804, God's people made a mighty effort to spread the gospel, without any opposition from the Catholic power to hinder them. Rev. John Wesley said, he wondered that Satan had not sent out some able champion against them. The time had come for the gospel of the kingdom to be preached in every nation, before the end come. During the first twenty-five years of its existence, Bible societies were established in England, Scotland, Ireland, Holland, half of Germany, three-fifths of Prussia, three-fifths of Switzerland, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Iceland, United States America, Canada, and West India Islands, subject to Dutch, Danish, Swedish and British sway. The destitution of the Bible was so great every where that the ministers of Christ made it a public affair to stir up the people; and Mr. Charles at last made his appeal before the Tract Society, before Rev. Joseph Hughes, for more Bibles for Wales. Mr. Hughes replied, "If for Wales, why not for the whole world?" A meeting was held in a room at the London Tavern, about three hundred persons being present, of every denomination, making an effort to send the Bible to all the world. The God of the Bible was with them, and blessed the means. 700*l.* were subscribed on the spot, 7th March, 1804. These godly men exerted their influence to obtain subscriptions for the support of the new Society; so that the contributions of the first year amounted to nearly 1900*l.*, contributed chiefly, says Mr. Owens, by the plain and lower orders of the people. Lord Teignmouth was the President. He had an extensive knowledge of the languages, and his intimate acquaintance with the manners and sentiments of eastern nations, acquired while he was Governor-General of India, were of the highest importance to the society. Joseph Hughes, Secretary. William Wilberforce and Hannah Moore its advocates and supporters. They all died in 1834, after serving thirty years in the blessed cause of spreading the word of God. O! how glorious they will shine in the resurrection morning.

The first Auxiliary Bible Society was formed in 1809. For two years and a half the results were cheering. Many thousand Bibles and Testaments were distributed, and 46,000*l.* remitted to the Auxiliary Society. In Great Britain there are now 445 of these auxiliaries, with 2825 branches. In 1812, the Scriptures were introduced into Prussia by a decree of King Frederick William III., the first German sovereign who became a patron of Bible Societies. The Bible Society was established there in 1814. In 1817, it had twenty auxiliaries; one of these had seven branches. In 1821, it had thirty-two auxiliaries, and distributed 50,000 Bibles and 33,000 Testaments. In the locality of Luther's monastery, the destitution was great. The churches were left without the Bible necessary to the performance of Divine worship. In 1812, Bible Society formed in Russia. Also the Emperor added 5000 roubles from his private purse, in the province of Finland, in this year. This, in the following year, gave rise to another Society at St. Petersburg. During fourteen years it translated the Scriptures or parts of them into seventeen languages, in which they had not been previously known. In ten years were issued 800,000 copies. In 1806, they began to print the Scriptures in six languages in India, by Carey, Marshman and Ward. The Scriptures were also provided at low prices for the inhabitants of the Isle of Man. 1807, an application from Edinburgh, to assist in procuring Arabic types and paper, for printing the New Testament in Turkish. The request was readily complied with, and the work completed in 1813. A Bible Association established in Jersey, France. There are now fourteen associations, a ladies' branch, and an auxiliary. 3000 Bibles have been distributed by them in 1807–8.

In 1809, first Bible Society established in Philadelphia. America in her northern regions fared more generously; the colonies of England were partially supplied. The Bible constituted the inheritance of the magnificent Union of the States; the pilgrim fathers had conveyed it in the "Mayflower," in 1620; Oglethorpe bore it to Georgia. We have now in possession one of those Bibles which our pilgrim fathers brought to New England in the Mayflower; and according to the paper mark it is over two hundred and fifty years old. It has been sent to England three times and bound, and the last time was in 1735. It is broken some in the middle, but the New Testament is entire. It weighs now 7 lbs. This blessed old book has been in the sackcloth state,—my husband is its present owner,—handed carefully down from one generation to another for us, as a sacred relic of our forefathers; and if no accident befals it, will remain till our Lord comes again. 1810 witnessed the establishment of ten societies in England, and three in Scotland, and copies sent to the Roman Catholics in the south of France. In 1811, attempted to present versions of the Scriptures in Arabic. In 1812, the Bible Society sent 1525 Bibles and Testaments to Londonderry, to be sold at half their cost, for Ireland was destitute of the Scriptures, not one Bible to five hundred persons. The Scriptures were also sent to Norway. The same year the Icelandic Bible was completed by Rev. E. Henderson. In 1813, the number of Bible societies rose from eight to thirty-five, and the number of Bibles and Testaments issued was 40,000, in Ireland. 1814, Calcutta Auxiliary Bible Society. 1815, the Armenian Bible printed for the Armenian inhabitants of Russia. Bible Society established in Iceland.

Salvation's Rock.

He is the Rock, and only those
Who build upon its perfect strength,
Shall yet encompass all their foes,
And win eternal life at length.

Our God is truly called a rock, and "the shadow of a great rock in a weary land." Perhaps only those who have traveled in eastern countries can fully comprehend what a great blessing is comprised in these words, "The shadow of a great rock." The traveler who has passed over several leagues of hot, arid sands, eagerly looks, as the burning sun ascends higher in the heavens, for some shelter in which to pass the noontide heat; but he looks in vain for a clump of trees. At the best only a few stinted shrubs, or a detached palm, meet his vision. But he is not disappointed, for he does not expect to find a leafy shelter; but there are many large, overhanging rocks, beneath one of which he finds refuge, and reposes in its shadow until the sun hath passed the meridian, and his fiery glances are somewhat subdued, when he again resumes his journey. And thus the "shadow of a . . . rock" has become an emblem, in the Hebrew tongue, of the overshadowing love of God. We too are travelers in a "weary land," and we need, far more than ever eastern traveler needed, a resting place, a refuge from a gathering storm; and we well know that it can only be found beneath the Rock of Ages.

I have heard of an English clergyman expressing the wish that God might be to the sailor "like a great rock in the midst of the sea." This was considered as a very dubious expression of good-will, for there is scarcely anything that a sailor dreads more than a rock, when his ship is staunch and firm beneath his feet, when the heavens are bright above him, and propitious gales waft him on his way; but when wild winds have lashed the waves to fury; when sails are torn to ribbons, and he feels the shipboards parting beneath his tread, then, oh! then, how gladly will he look for the rock, for he knows his only hope of life is there. It is thus with the world. In the summer's sunshine they keep afar from the Rock; but mid winter's storms, when the foundation that they themselves have builded is passing from beneath their feet, how eagerly will they seek for the Rock foundation that can never be destroyed. Thrice happy are they who have secured a foot-hold there, though to the eye of the world they may seem as insecure as they were before. The rain may descend, the winds howl, and waves roar around them as of old, yet here all resemblance ceases, for then there was fear, aye, terror mingling with the storm; but now the wildest storms may shriek around, the red bolts fly above them, while they smile at these feeble efforts to dislodge them, for they know they are secure.

This feeling of safety is, I think, the brightest gem in the christian's crown. He feels he is safe while the world is distracted with fears, while thrones are trembling, while empires are crumbling to ruins, and destruction descends on every side. He needs no earthly guard, for he knows he is guarded by Him "who walks unseen," who is ever near him, "swift to hear and strong to save;" and he has only to keep within the shadow of the Rock to be assured of protection forevermore.

"I am the Way."

"Jesus saith, I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father but by me." —JOHN 14: 6.

When sins do like a mountain
Before my vision rise,
To Christ, the living fountain,
I turn my weary eyes;
And to him make confession
Of all my sins and woes,—
With words of intercession
He to the Father goes.

The Father then speaks pardon,
Bids me look up and live,
Removes my every burden,
And freely doth forgive;
And tells me though but mortal,
That I a home at last
May find within the portal,
Where conflicts all are past.

The Last Chance.

A traveler who was pursuing his journey on the Scottish coast, was thoughtlessly induced to take the road by the sands as the most agreeable. This road, which was safe only at low tides, lay on the beach, between the sea and the lofty cliffs which bound the coast. Pleased with the view of the inrolling waves on the one hand, and the abrupt and precipitous rocks on the other, he loitered on the way, unmindful of the sea, which was gradually encroaching on the intervening sands. A man, observing from the lofty cliffs the danger he was incurring, benevolently descended, and arresting his attention by a loud halloo, warned him not to proceed. "If you pass this spot, you lose your last chance for escape. The tides are rising. They have already covered the road you have passed over, and they are near the foot of the cliff before you, and by this ascent alone you can escape." The traveler disregarded the warning. He felt sure he could make the turn in the coast in good time; and leaving his volunteer guide, he went more rapidly on his way. Soon, however, he discovered the real danger of his position. His onward journey was arrested by the sea. He turned in haste, but to his amazement he found that the rising waters had cut off his retreat. He looked up the cliffs, but they were inaccessible. The waters were already at his feet. He sought higher ground, but was soon driven off. His last refuge was a projecting rock; but the relentless waters rose higher and higher—they reached him—they rose to his neck—he uttered a despairing shriek for help, and no help was near, as he had neglected his last opportunity to escape. The sea closed over him; and it was the closing in upon him of the night of death.

An incident like this has its pregnant moral. How many travelers are there on the coast of time, amusing themselves with the surrounding scenery as they pass along! They are beset with dangers of which they are wholly unmindful. They are warned and importuned against proceeding in their present course. Only one narrow way of escape is pointed out to them, which they are besought to take before it is too late. They laugh at the predicted danger, and pursue their way. The crisis at length comes—inevitable ruin stares them in the face. Worse dangers than a roaring sea, inaccessible cliffs, and a relentless tide, surround them. They have disregarded and passed by the cleft rock in which they might have taken refuge; and now, surprised by the sudden and surrounding death, they shriek for help in their bewilderment, and sink hopelessly in the raging flood.—Sel.

Believing on Christ.

What is it to believe on Christ? It is to believe that he is the only Savior; that "there is no salvation in any other; no other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved." Acts 4: 12. It is to feel your need of him; that you are guilty, and need forgiveness; sinful, and need to be made holy; under condemnation, and need to be pardoned; lost, and need to be saved.

It is to believe that he is able and willing to save you, and to save you now. He is able, "almighty," "able to save to the uttermost them that come unto God by him," Heb. 7: 25; "not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance," 2 Pet. 3: 9; ready to save you now, for "now is the accepted time, and now the day of salvation." 2 Cor. 6: 12.

It is to cast yourself at once, and without reserve, on his mercy, trusting in him alone for salvation, renouncing self-righteousness and self-dependence—all idea of meriting salvation by any thing you can do, and relying on what Christ has done; to give yourself up to him just as you are; to be accepted, forgiven, purified, directed and saved; to take him for your prophet to teach, your priest to atone, your king to rule over and in you, and your example; to be imitated in all your feelings, purposes and conduct. Do this, and you will be a believer in Christ, and he shall be your refuge, your portion, your Savior, all your salvation, and all your desire.—Selected by Emma A. Wheeler.

Embalming the Dead.

A Washington correspondent gives the following account of the process of embalming:—

The body is placed on an inclined platform, the mouth, ears, nose, &c., are stopped with cotton; if wounded, cotton is put in the wound, and a plaster is put on; an incision is made in the wrist, the attachment is made from an air pump, and fluid is ejected into the arteries. The wound is then sewed up and the body is hoisted to dry. To save the eyes from sinking in, wax is put under the eyelids. The hair is found to come out very easy, but after the embalming it could not be removed. The bodies take, on an average, about seven quarts. There were some eight bodies on hand; some had been there thirty days. The operators say that in four months the body will become solidified like marble, but no change has yet been had to prove it. Col. Baker's body, on arriving at San Francisco, was in an advanced state of decomposition. Dr. Holmes, late of Williamsburg, Long Island, is the oldest in the business here, and I am informed he has made $30,000. Messrs. Brown & Alexander are trying to get a bill through Congress for the exclusive right to embalm bodies, and to have Congress authorize a corps of embalmers for each division. The charges are $56 for an officer, and $25 for a private, and I must say the bodies are as life-like as if they were asleep.—Scientific American.

WORK.—We should learn to love work, and leave to pestilent despots the love and enjoyment of indolence. There has been prevalent abroad an idea that gentlemanliness requires that a man shall do nothing. And in our land this same idea has been very much spread by the despicable example of the petty despots of the plantation, who work not, owning workmen to do their work for them, and who have an utter contempt for working. Blessed be God, there is a New England in this land, and there are many States leavened with the same blood that flows in the veins of New Englanders, where men are brought up to honor real work, of brain or of hand.

To honor work; to shrink from no work; to hold work in such high esteem that no ridicule can make you ashamed of it, or turn you from it—this is noble. And let parents inspire a love for work in their children. Let young men, apprentices, clerks, that are seeking a fortune, honor work. Let no man be ashamed of it. The great worker of the world and the universe is the Lord God Almighty. Nobody else works as he does. Nobody else can.—H. W. Beecher.

CHILDREN.—Whatever you wish your child to be, be it yourself. If you wish it to be happy, healthy, sober, truthful, affectionate, honest, and godly, be yourself all these. If you wish it to be lazy and sulky, and a liar and a thief, and a drunkard and a swearer, be yourself all these. As the old cock crows, the young cock learns.

What Good Can I Do?

BY AUNT MARY.

DEAR CHILDREN:—I once read of a poor farmer, who had a little field, which he had ploughed and planted with corn. He weeded it carefully, and watched it day by day, to see it grow. But, for a long time, no rain fell, and the corn was drying up, and withering sadly; which the poor farmer saw with grief, for he depended on it for the support of his family.

One day, feeling very sad, he went out to look at his corn, when a little rain-drop up in the clouds saw him, and said to one of his companions,—"See that poor man, how badly he feels! I wish I could do something to revive his corn. I have a good mind to go down, and see what I can do."

"O, that would be folly!" said its companion, "what could you do? one little rain-drop! You could not even moisten one hill."

"I don't care," replied the first, "I am going to try; I may do something." And down it fell—spat on the farmer's nose.

"Ha! what is this?" cried the farmer, looking up, "are we going to have a shower?"

The little rain-drop's companion just then said to itself, "Well, if you are going, I will go too;" and many of its mates, who had overheard the conversation, cried, "And I," "And I," till a great number followed, and there was a refreshing shower. The farmer's corn grew, and yielded a good crop, and he was happy.

Now, my young friends, I hope you will all learn a lesson from this little rain-drop, and each try and see what you can do. God made you to do something. He made you to do good, and he wants you to fit yourself for doing good, now, while you are young.

"But," cries one, "what good can I do, among so many? I am only one."

You can do a great deal, if you try. You can do good, by setting a good example for others to follow, as did the little rain-drop.

You can do good, by being kind to your playmates, and gentle and affectionate to your brothers and sisters, and ever ready to do them a good turn.

You can do good, by being obedient and respectful to your parents, and always glad to deny yourself to give them pleasure and happiness.

You can do good, by helping the poor and needy, and giving them such things as they are in want of, even if it be no more than a bit of bread or a cup of cold water.

You can do good, by being kind and attentive to your young friends who are sick,—by bringing sweet flowers and fruits for them, or by reading to them, and talking to them of the blessed Jesus. A few words from a little child have sometimes done great good, and who knows but yours might.

You can do good, by seeking out poor children, and bringing them to the Sabbath School, where they can learn about God, and Jesus, and Paradise, and the way to get there.

You can do good, too, by writing little pieces for the Crisis, and getting as many as you can to join the "Try Company." What you write, a great many boys and girls all over the land will read, and it will do them good; and they, too, will begin to think and write, and then we shall have ever so many children writing for the Crisis every week, and that would make the paper more interesting to you all.

But we can do no good without God helps us. Let us, then, go to Jesus, and he will help you to do what you can. And so you will gladden the hearts of your parents and friends, be happier yourselves, make the angels rejoice over you, and please the good God who reigns over all and grants us all life's blessings, and who will soon give us a sweet home to live in, where we shall be full of joy and happiness forevermore.

Boston, June, 1862.

S. S. Convention.

DEAR CHILDREN:—I wish to tell you something about the Sabbath School Convention held in Lawrence last week. This is an annual State convention of superintendents and teachers of the evangelical churches in the State of Mass. The exercises consisted of addresses, discussions upon the best mode of conducting Sabbath schools, devotional exercises, singing by the children, etc. The singing was considered by many to be the most interesting part of the meeting. There were between two and three hundred in the choir, each one of which had a little flag, and during the exercises they sung some patriotic or national hymns, when they would all wave their little flags. A gentleman said he had come all the way from New York to see how much better they conducted Sabbath schools in New York than in New England, and how much better the children sing in that State than here. He said he never heard better singing in his life. One of the speakers said the question was often asked by children and others, What can I do? A number of incidents were related of what children have done in this cause. One by Mr. Moody, of Chicago, Ill. A little girl whose father was intemperate was brought into a Sabbath school, and hearing them pray, asked if she could pray. They told her she could, and to ask for any thing she desired. She went home and into an upper room, and began to repeat this prayer: "O Jesus! stop my father from drinking." Her mother hearing her, went and called her father. He crawled up to the top of the stairs and listened awhile, and then went out to a saloon to get some strong drink. He put the glass to his lips, but the prayer of his little daughter,—"O Jesus! stop my father from drinking,"—was ringing in his ears, and he could not drink. He threw it down and went out; but the words of his daughter followed him until he became a sober man and a christian. Another little girl was going along the street, and saw two boys fighting. She went up to them kindly and said, "Don't quarrel any more!" They were affected by her kind words, and became friends. Many years after there was a meeting in London of a society for the support of missionaries who had become too infirm to labor, and during the meeting the leader requested an old gentleman to stand up. "This," said he, "is one of the boys who quarrelled." He then asked another old grey-headed man to stand up. "This," said he, "is the other boy who quarrelled." They had spent their life in preaching the gospel to the heathen. He then asked an old lady to stand up. "This," said he, "was the little girl who spoke to the boys in the street, and the few words she said to them were the means of their conversion." Another little girl was going to the Sabbath school with her brother, and they saw a boy fishing. She went up to him and asked him if he would not go to the Sabbath school. He said his hands and face were dirty. "O! here is water," said she, and she persuaded him to wash himself, gave him her little white handkerchief for a towel, then led him to the Sabbath school, and he became a punctual attendant and a good boy.

Many other instances were related of what little boys and girls have done by trying. I think those three little girls must have belonged to the Try Company. The best hymn the children sung was the one called "Marching Along," and for the benefit of the Try Company, and all the little boys and girls who read the Crisis, I have requested the Editor to publish it, and I hope all the children who are going to the campmeeting at Wilbraham will commit it to memory, and we will learn the tune. And how many will commit to memory some passage of Scripture to repeat at the Children's Meeting? Each one try.

Question. Find some example in the word of God of what has been done by trying.

D. N. SMITH.

P. S. I have just been to the union prayer meeting of the Old South Chapel, where I saw Mr. Van Meter of New York, with some little girls whom he has brought from the "Home of the Little Wanderers" in that city, and heard them sing. A story was told of a little girl in Chicago, whose father was a sailor. She became a christian, and they used to call her "little praying Mary." Her father took her in the vessel once to cross the lake, and then a storm came up. They were in danger of being lost, and some one asked if there were any on board who could pray? There was no one found but this little girl, and she kneeled down and prayed. She then began to sing the hymn called the "Evergreen Shore." They were surprised to see her so calm in the midst of such danger. She said she trusted in Jesus. They were saved.

If the Editors publish this hymn, let the children learn it, and we will teach them the tune at the campmeeting.

Marching Along.

The children are gath'ring from near and from far,
The trumpet is sounding the call for the war,
The conflict is raging, 't will be fearful and long,
We'll gird on our armor, and be marching along.

CHORUS.
Marching along, we are marching along,
Gird on the armor, and be marching along,
The conflict is raging, 't will be fearful and long,
Then gird on the armor and be marching along.

The foe is before us in battle array,
But let us not waver nor [illegible] from the way,
The Lord is our strength, be this ever our song,
With courage and faith we are marching along.
CHO.—Marching along, etc.

We've listed for life, and will camp on the field,
With Christ as our Captain we never will yield;
The "sword of the Spirit," both trusty and strong,
We'll hold in our hands as we're marching along.
CHO.—Marching along, etc.

Through conflicts and trials our crowns we must win,
For here we contend 'gainst temptation and sin;
But one thing assures us we cannot go wrong,
If trusting our Savior while marching along.
CHO.—Marching along, etc.

For the Try Company.

BRO. GRANT:—I like the suggestion of Martin L. Howard respecting the campmeeting, and hope we shall see a large gathering of children at Wilbraham next August. Those who were there last summer will not soon forget the pleasant meetings we had, and the interesting exercises attending them. We hope the next meeting will be the best that has ever been held at this old homestead. Let the cords be lengthened and the stakes strengthened, and the young and old come up to this feast.

QUESTIONS. 1. Where and when will Christ reign in his kingdom? 2. Who will be the subjects of that kingdom? 3. What is of most importance for us to know?

"Do we love His appearing?"

Are we waiting now for the glorious day,
When the Lord will come the earth to bless;
When the dark'ning shadows will flee away
Before the Sun of Righteousness?
Do we hopefully watch and pray for the hour
When every eye will His face behold?
When Satan's host will lose their power,
And the dust of earth be turned to gold?

Do we see the types, in the things that are,
Of the glorious things that yet will be?
When the earth will her robes of beauty wear,
And the slaves of sin are by Christ made free?
Do we watch, as we watch for an absent friend?
Do we trust his word that the time is nigh,
When Christ in his power and might will descend,
And the world will see him eye to eye?

Do we know that he'll rule and reign alone,
That death and hell will their captives bring
To his feet; that he'll reign on Judah's throne,
And the Jews will hail him as their king?
Dare we doubt that the earth will soon be free,
Eden's lost beauty restored again;
That soon, oh! soon there'll be no more sea,
And the Lord our God will rule and reign?

The Great Prayer Meeting.

God hath said that "at the name of Jesus EVERY knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; and that EVERY tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father." I believe that this great event will occur when Christ comes "to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe."

For nearly twenty centuries the note of warning has been sounded in the ears of a world that "lieth in wickedness," but the masses have replied, "We will not have this man to reign over us," and they are rushing on to "swift destruction." Ere long, "the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God." The sea shall give up the dead which are in it; death and hell shall deliver up the dead which are in them, and all will appear at "the judgment seat of Christ." This day will be one of joy to the believer; but to the ungodly, one of weeping and "wailing, and gnashing of teeth." No pen can describe the terrors of that day. "The kings of the earth, and the great men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bondman, and every freeman," will hide "themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains," and will say "to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb." At that time the wicked will seek Him early, and call upon him, but he will answer, "I have called, and ye refused." "I also will laugh at your calamity." This will be the only answer to the prayers of the condemned.

Unconverted reader! God has commanded you to pray. You have refused to obey him, and in your present condition you are "without Christ, . . . having no hope, and without God in the world." If you do not "call on the name of the Lord" before he comes, you will be compelled to take an active part in the great prayer meeting. You cannot escape the notice of the Savior, though there be millions of others around you. God hath said, "Every knee should bow," and "every tongue should confess." You cannot hope for mercy then, but will have to hear that awful sentence—"Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels."

As a friend, I beseech you to "repent . . . and believe the gospel." God says, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." "Flee from the wrath to come!" Delay not. "The kingdom of heaven is at hand." Every moment is precious. You have no time to spare. "Now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation." Listen to the invitations of the gospel. "The Spirit and the Bride say, come; . . . let him that heareth say, come; . . . whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." "Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord; though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool." Our heavenly Father is "not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance"; "and him that cometh to me, I will in no wise cast out." Come, in your lost condition, to Christ, for such he came to save. Refuse to come, and you must perish forever. F. H. BURBANK.

Plymouth, Mass.

For the Crisis.

Family and Closet Devotion.

Don't be afraid of spending too much time in reading God's word, in secret and family prayer. Hold on, read on, pray on. Get your soul full of God in the morning; it is gain, clear gain. It is gain every way, temporally and spiritually. When the heart is right with God, calm, sweet, peaceful, heavenly, every thing goes right. In this happy, joyful, composed state of mind, business men, merchants, printers, mechanics of every kind, husbandmen, doctors, lawyers, ministers, editors—all, great and small, can accomplish ten-fold walking thus in wisdom's ways, God-fearingly, strengthened with might in the inner man. A man rich in faith, full of the Holy Spirit, is a giant; he rises above the world—its temptations, trials, conflicts. He does every thing in the spirit of meekness and love of Christ.

Some holy men spend whole hours in the morning feasting on angels' food. They drink deeply at the living Fountain. Then, when they go forth into the battle-field, Satan trembles before them. God smiles graciously on their labors, on things secular and divine, all the day, gloriously. Friends, don't hurry over your morning devotions, in the closet or around the family altar. Give yourselves ample time for secret prayer, reading the word of God, meditation and self-examination; get your souls on fire, richly imbued with the spirit of holy benevolence; build on solid rock. "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom; teaching and admonishing one another in psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord."

Wait on God, put on the whole armor, then go out to your varied, secular employments newly and freshly baptized with an increased faith, hope and love. This hurrying over hap-hazardly secret and family devotion, omitting reading, singing and expostulation, as very many do, is mockery, high-handed, God-dishonoring. It is not only robbery, slighting Omnipotence, but it is starvation to the soul, degrading the family altar, making it a mere pack-horse, or scape-goat. It is like the children of Israel before the golden calf, sitting down to eat and drink, and rising up to play. God, the Almighty, is not in all their thoughts. Besides, the family, the children and servants, are led into a loose, careless, slip-shod, half-heartedness.

"How many useless prayers we say,
Because our lives our prayers belie;
Because devotion dies away,
As on the air the echoes die!"

Friends, give yourselves time, do up the work faithfully, patiently, profitably. Let your children, your friends, your neighbors, see and know you fear God, and have respect unto all his commandments. Say with the divine poet, "My voice shalt thou hear in the morning, O Lord; in the morning will I direct my prayer unto thee and will look up."

"My God, is any hour so sweet,
From blush of morn to evening star,
As that which calls me to thy feet,
The hour of prayer?"

"What manner of Love."

"Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God: therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not."—1 JOHN 3: 1.

When some of the Danish missionaries in India appointed some of their Indian converts to translate a portion of the Bible, when they came to these words—"Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God," one of them started at so bold a saying, as he thought it, exclaiming, "It is too much; rather let me render it, 'they shall be permitted to kiss his feet.'" In what sense are we the sons of God? Says one, We are the children of God by adoption. So it seems by what Paul says, "That we might receive the adoption of sons."—Gal. 4: 5. But is that all? It seems to me that is too cold, too distant, though we deserve not so much honor as that. "What!" says one, "is there any more endearing title for us to bear than to become the adopted sons of God? An adopted child is not as near and dear as a natural child, or a child according to the flesh. But then is it possible for us to sustain any higher, any nearer, any more endearing relation to a loving God than that of adopted children?" Let Peter answer,—"Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises, that . . . ye might be partakers of the divine nature." 2 Pet. 1: 4. Is it possible that we are to become divine, and have the nature of our Father, God, and of our elder brother, Jesus? So Peter thought, and so I believe. Paul declares (Rom. 8: 15) that in this life we are the children of God by adoption. Peter, that in the life to come, when we are born again, we shall be divine and so become the natural sons of God, and the natural brothers and sisters of Jesus. This then is the highest possible honor, the greatest possible blessing, and the most inestimable endearment that infinite affection can bestow. "Therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not." What then if the world cannot know us, cannot appreciate the humble sons and daughters of God? What if the children of the devil, the sons of perdition, do not love us, do not speak well of us, and evil judge us? All this is of little moment if we have the hope of being made "like Him" who was so evil treated when on earth. "And every man that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself even as he is pure."

Extracts from Dr. Herman Schultz.

"Man is above all beings of nature personality. But he is created personality, because will and being is not one with him; because the end, which his will is able to take hold of, lies without him, in that God for whose susceptibility he was created. So man has no physical connection with God; he is not created holy and immortal; if he were by nature, he would be God himself, would have both end and will united within him. But he has the image-personality, bears the power within him to take hold of the absolute, to make to his own by free will that which could not be created to him by his nature, the power to become holy and immortal. Both is he, who feels the divinity within him and himself with it indissolubly united. So does the christian feel himself immortal, where he knows himself united with the life, the immortality itself, the prince of life. (Rom. 8: 38.) This, however, can only be done by mediation of the free will, and this includes the possibility that man may become neither the one or the other, neither holy or immortal. * * * *

"Plain is the expression—to take away the spirit; which, especially in Job and Eccl., also in some of the Psalms, stands for die. (Job 27: 2; comp. ver. 5.) There is nothing alluding to the personality of man. As the animal lives through the spirit (breath), and if it is withdrawn from him dies (Eccl. 3: 14; Ps. 104: 29; Job 42: 40; 22: 2; 34: 14;) so also man has become alive through inhaling the spirit (Gen. 2: 7); and if thus is withdrawn, the time of his consciousness, his life, ceases. (Eccl. 3: 18; 12: 7; 8: 8; Ps. 146: 4) Here spirit is something uncreated, divine, incorruptible, the animating, by which life only can exist. But this is no part of man, but an animating principle, which God withdraws, which he gives back again to re-animate. And it is only in this sense in which the singular translation of the Septuagint of Job 7: 15 can be understood. * * * *

"Neither body or soul or spirit are immortal; all three are created and can perish; all three are in their life caused through participation with the spirit of life, which is God. But through the spirit man can lay hold on God, and hereby become immortal; i. e., by filling the soul through the spirit, the body through the soul, with the true life, with God. But where this is not done, it does not follow that the spiritual soul must with the body perish, as a soul not spiritual. [H. Schultz makes a difference between human soul, which he calls spiritual, and the soul of animals, or animal soul.] The spiritual soul is not like a soul without spirit, entirely dependent on the body; it has a sphere of existence without the body, another principle, with which it hangs together. Its connection with the life is not only that by mediation of the body, but it can also exist without the body as long as it is not entirely separated from God. Even if it did not accomplish this its end, if man dissolved, and the spiritual soul had no longer for its organ the body, the same could exist on, could perhaps be eternal, according to the designs of the Creator (for a necessity of ending does not follow), but never immortal.

Immortal can only be the whole man. For whenever he accomplishes his end, if he by his free will does not exclude God from him, but makes him indissolubly to his own,—there he is entirely immortal. Where he does not do this, where he excludes the life from him,—there soul and spirit are not immortal,—there they have the true life not within them; they have separated themselves from it; therefore whatever they may be, eternal or not, they are not immortal. * * * *

"So man was created for immortality; he had, as in the second creation the spirit was imparted to him, access to God; there was nothing which hindered him from accomplishing his end. Only a pure development was required; only the opposition of the self-will was to be avoided. Because the free will is a necessary condition of accomplishing a moral end, man was capable to cut himself off from his fountain; the spiritual soul could withdraw from its life-principle,—hereby cut off the possibility of immortality, which is given only where God is,—be subjected to the death-principle, which rules over all that does not bear eternal life within itself, etc. * * * *

"The New Testament declares the logos of God as him in whom and through whom and for whom every thing is created. In connection herewith we can therefore say, that in union with this logos man could become immortal. So was already the first Adam created and designed to have eternal life in the Son, by gradually uniting himself with the eternal Son through an undisturbed development of those powers that were imparted to him, and through a voluntary acceptance of the relation in which the Creator has placed him; not physical, not with loss of our personality, but ethical, so that he might obtain by his own exertion that personality, as the creature only can have it. So man stands opposite in the creation to immortality, not as its possessor, but as its boon inheritor, who only had to remain in his original state, in order to come into possession of it." L. REIMER.

NOTE. Dr. H. Schultz speaks of two creations of man; according to the first, he is equal to the animal creation, and possesses, like this, an animal soul. according to his second creation, his animal soul is spiritualized by the spirit (a spiritual soul), in consequence of which he becomes able to receive divine impressions, while the animal soul is never capable of this; but neither one or the other are immortal. ### Contentment.—No. 1.

An extract from an ancient work on "Divine Contentment," by Simeon Ashe, minister of the gospel, London, 1653.

"I have learned in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content."—PHIL. 4. 11.

"The inspired apostle in the former verses of this chapter has left for our instruction some useful and heavenly exhortations, among the rest, to be careful for nothing. Not to exclude a prudential care, for he that provideth 'not for his own, . . . hath denied the faith.' 1 Tim. 5: 8. Nor yet a religious care, for we must 'give diligence to make' our 'calling and election sure.' 2 Pet. 1: 10. But to exclude all anxious care about the issue and event of things. "Take no thought for your life what ye shall eat'; and in this sense it should be a christian's care not to be careful. The word careful in the Greek comes from a primitive, that signifies to cut the heart in pieces—a soul-dividing care. Take heed of this. We are bid to commit our ways unto the Lord. The Hebrew word is, Roll thy way upon the Lord. It is our work to cast our care upon him, but it is God's work to take care. By our immoderacy we take his work out of his hands. Care, when it is eccentric, either distrustful or distracting, is very dishonorable to God. It takes away his providence, as if he sat in heaven, and minded not what became of things here below. Immoderate care not only takes the heart off from better things, but it is a spiritual cancer, that doth waste and dispirit, and does no good to the soul. We may sooner, by our care, add a furlong to our grief, then a cubit to our comfort. God doth threaten it as a curse,—'they shall eat their bread with carefulness.' Ezek. 12: 19. Better fast than eat of that bread. Be careful for nothing. 'I have learned in whatsoever state I am therewith to be content.' Noble sentiment! A speech worthy to be engraven upon our hearts, and treasured up in our memory forever. Observe, he says not, 'I have heard,' but, 'I have learned.' It is one thing to hear, and another thing to learn, as it is one thing to eat and another thing to digest. St. Paul was a practitioner. Christians hear much, but, it is to be feared, learn but little. There were four sorts of ground in the parable, and but one good ground. An emblem of this truth;—many hearers, but few learners." C. H.

FREEDOM OF OPINION.—Condemn no man for not thinking as you think. Let every one enjoy the full and free liberty of thinking for himself. Let every man use his own judgment, since every man must give an account of himself to God. Abhor every approach, in any kind or degree, to the spirit of persecution. If you cannot reason or persuade a man into the truth, never attempt to force him into it. If love will not compel him, leave him to God, the Judge of all.—John Wesley.

Impromptu.

O! come again to earth and reign,
Jesus, on thy throne;
Hasten the day, when thy blest sway
Old earth shall gladly own.

Give to the blest the promised rest,
And set the captives free;
And let them bathe within the wave
Of immortality.

O! come and save, from sea and grave,
The millions who have died;
The pure and just take from the dust,
And bring them to thy side.

Remove sin's stain from earth's domain,
And end her night of woe;
And let sweet flowers begem green bowers,
And living waters flow.

O! let thy voice bid earth rejoice,
When sin has passed away;
Let victory's strain, in glad refrain,
Proclaim thy righteous sway.

Gospel of the Kingdom.

[Statistics from Dr. Coggswell's Harbinger Mill.]

(Concluded.)

1816, a version of the New Testament, in modern Arabic, for the Mohammedans. 1817, Bible Society in Australia. 1818, missionaries translated the Old and New Testaments into the language of the Buriat Mongolians in Siberia. 1819, the Bible printed in twenty-seven languages in India, and an edition of 4000 copies of the Syrian Old Testament. The same year, the formation of the Smyrna Bible Society. 1820, Madras Society. Since that time almost 800,000 copies have been put in circulation. Tahiti, an edition of 3000 copies of Luke's Gospel, and 10,000 copies of the book of Acts and the other Gospels followed. 1821, Dutch Society furnished with the Scriptures, and the Marine Bible Society formed. They also undertook a version of the New Testament for Java, and a Malay version for Amboyna. 1822, a Bible Association was formed in the town of Berditchev, Russia, for the Jews, who aided it by their subscriptions, and were anxious to obtain the Old and New Testaments. 1825, an African Jew purchased thirty-three Hebrew Bibles at Malta, and carried to Tunis, and another Jew purchased one hundred and thirty-two Hebrew Bibles to carry to Leghorn for the use of their brethren. In Sweden, 1824, the Hernosand Ladies' Bible Society. 1828, Professor Kieffer finished his most careful revision of the Turkish Bible. 1828, Protestant Bible Society formed in Russia. In 1826, the four Gospels were completed in Ethiopic, and the entire New Testament in 1830. In 1829, the New Testament was published for the Abyssinians in Africa. New Testament translated into Amharic, and published in 1829.

It is known to be a fact that, even in 1814, some pious Englishmen, who came to Paris, made an attempt to meet with a French Bible of any version, and that they were unsuccessful in their search. The Bible Society subscribed 250*l*. to a stereotype edition of Le Maistre de Sacy's version of the New Testament for the use of the Catholics in France. 1818, when Mr. Owen paid a visit in Paris to Prof. Kieffer, and found him revising the Turkish Bible, his thoughts were also busy on what might be done among the Roman Catholic portion of the population. His distributions among them in 1819 and 1820 cost the committee upwards of 2000*l*. Prof. Kieffer was appointed as regular agent in 1820, and continued so to act until 1833. His issues during this period amounted to more than 730,000 copies, chiefly among Roman Catholics. In 1830, when religious liberty was at its height in France, a strenuous effort was made to aid the religious movement which it had commenced in Paris, with a view to evangelize the Roman Catholics. Several places were opened in the capital, which were filled to overflowing. Monsieur de P. was appointed agent in 1833 for the Bible Society, and for twenty years he directed the agency, with consummate zeal and prudence. In 1830, the Geneva and Paris Bible Societies employed 150 colporteurs. In 1837, the British and Foreign Bible Society began to send forth colporteurs. These colporteurs now traverse the continent of Europe,—a band of humble but zealous and valiant soldiers of the Cross. They carry with them the "sword of the Spirit," and their weapon is "not carnal, but mighty, through God, to the pulling down of strong holds." From the shores of the Mediterranean to the Baltic, in Belgium, in Holland, France and Germany, they unfurl the gospel banner, and wondrous are the tales they tell of its willing reception among those who would never have heard of it but through their means. During the first fifteen years by colporteurs, in France alone, were circulated almost seventeen hundred thousand copies.

It is calculated that one of these excellent men offered the Scriptures and spoke of their contents to more than 200,000 persons. He had been colporteuring eleven years before he died, and sold at least 18,000 copies of the Scriptures. His name was Osee Derbecq, and he labored in Belgium. The Bible Society never had a more faithful servant. His whole soul was absorbed in his work; his deep piety and profound humility made him a welcome visitor wherever he went; and many persons who had persecuted him, afterward became his warmest friends. In more than one locality, where there is now a flourishing congregation, he was the sower of the seed. He died at the age of forty-two, and his death made a strong impression on those around him, for it was full of bliss.

Sometimes the colporteurs in France are addressed in this way: "As for you, you are men of the Bible; you never speak of anything else: you certainly are not men of this world. Whether Louis Napoleon or Louis Phillippe sits on the throne, it matters very little to you; you are comical fellows; you seem as if you belong neither to the republic, the empire, nor to anything else; and, to look at you, and to listen to you, one might almost say that God is always before you, and that it is he that governs. How is it? Explain yourselves." And they do explain themselves: they stand by many a dying bed, and are brought into sympathy with many a strange scene: they sow the good seed through the field of the world, and often reap, years afterward, the seed they have sown.

1832. The Netherlands Bible Society, Holland, obtained a good translation of the Javanese New Testament. They employed for this purpose Mr. Gericke; and the King of Netherlands presented, on this account, a gold medal, showing that the government also prized his exertions. In 1844 colportage was adopted with great advantage in Holland; and Mr. Tiddy writes, that the sales at the depot surpass all idea; in one week they amounted to 2250 volumes. In nine years, the sale of the Scriptures has surpassed 326,000 volumes. The depository at Amsterdam writes in 1853: "Armed with the sword of the Spirit, the colporteurs continue their travels; and this year we have again experienced that our God is faithful, and that his word retains its power. The opposition of papacy is increasing. The strongest bulwark is the word of God. Nothing is feared by Rome more than this. In 1832, in the valleys of Piedmont and Vaudois, have been distributed 600 copies, and another edition was called for of 2000 copies." 1840. Maj. Gen. Beckwith writes, that the Gospels sent into Northern Italy are freely circulating among the Protestants. The General, with other friends, has erected and endowed a hundred schools among the Vaudois. 1854, in the report, Maj. Gen. Beckwith is said to have made a remittance of 95*l*. 13*s*. 4*d*. for Italian and Piedmontese Scriptures. Now comes the memorable year of 1833,—"the stars shall fall from heaven." Jesus said that immediately after the tribulation of those days the sun and moon should be darkened; but the stars did not fall till fifty-three years after, which is a strong and mighty bulwark to defend that sign in 1780. The spread of the gospel from that year, the circulation of the Scriptures, and the new impetus in colportage given to spread the word, clusters around the falling of the stars in '33, while on the other side of that great sign were 1260 years of tribulation, and Jesus said, "such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be," and the great earthquake that shook all the world. The tribulation of the saints, the sackcloth state of the two witnesses, and the great earthquake, were the strong bulwark on that side of the sign in 1780, that is immovable as the throne of God. "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away," saith Jesus Christ. These are some of the beautiful sayings of Jesus, full of mercy and truth. More has been done in those fifty-three years to spread the word of God among the nations than ever was before.

1833. The Old Testament translated into the language of the Buriat Mongolians, Siberia. 1834. American missionaries commenced their labors with the Nestorian Church in the north of Persia. Their language is the Syriac, closely akin to the Hebrew, and spoken many centuries before Christ. In 1830, the B. F. Bible Society put in their possession 2000 copies of the four Gospels. The American missionaries say of these tribes: "Many of the people appear like persons awakened from a deep sleep, and are inquiring 'How is it that we have been kept so long in ignorance and self-delusion?' To which inquiry their priests reply, 'We ourselves have been dead in sins, and our sins are greater than yours for having hidden the light from you so long.'" In 1835 the Scriptures were introduced into Spain, while the cholera was raging; in 1836, by the colporteurs in the Pyrenees; in 1838, while confusion and misery reigned in the country, the Holy Scriptures gained a silent entrance, and were openly bought and sold in several of the principal towns. Between 5 and 6000 copies were sold. "The expressions of gratitude for the books were innumerable. It is said, 'The words and the history of the crucified Savior and of his followers are most interesting to us. We were altogether ignorant of such a book, and it delights us;' it was received by the laboring class of people. 16,000 copies have been scattered in five years."

In 1839, the Arabic Scriptures were executed at Malta. From 1811, the Bible Society attempted to present versions in Arabic. Henry Martin said, "When we gain this language, we will begin to preach to Arabia, Syria, Persia, Tartary, part of India and China, half of Africa, all the sea coasts of the Mediterranean, and Turkey, and one tongue shall suffice for them all." The Scriptures sent to Arabia, where the great Apostle of the Gentiles commenced his ministry. Gal. 1; 15–17. 1840, the Calcutta Bible Association established. This object was now effectually accomplished; scarcely a family of Protestant christians has been found without the Bible. In 1841, Mongolian translation completed. Mr. Shagdur went out to distribute copies of the Scriptures in the districts bordering on the Chinese frontiers. In a few days the whole of his stock was disposed of. He says he felt like a man who had gone out with a bushel of seed-corn to sow a field of ten acres. We have been told that the books are well understood, and are much sought after. In 1842, the entire Old Testament was published in ancient and modern Syriac, by the American Bible Society. 1843, the missionary cause called forth more interest in the Protestant states of Germany. 1844, Mr. Henderson visited Denmark, after the lapse of nearly forty years, and found the total issues of the Bible Society had been 193,000 copies. 1845, in the county of Radnor, England, a colporteur supplied every family with a copy in one district, among a population of 5804. The years of 1845 and 1846 were remarkable for the increasing demand for the Scriptures. From the Manchester Depository 96,711 copies were issued in one year. The Auxiliaries at Liverpool, Bristol, Bath, Hereford, Derby, Leicester, greatly increased their distributions. The total issues of 1846 amounted to 1,441,651 copies; in 1847, to 1,419,283 copies. 1847, the distribution of the Scriptures in Austria. Despotism and popery clasp hands, and work together to shut out the Bible from its territories, even in the midst of this nineteenth century, but not till 41,659 copies were distributed. In some parts, the desire for the word is described as a "rage," and a "famishing"; and the priests of Rome, becoming aware of this, denounced the books from the pulpit. Spain is closed against the Bible.

1848, the committee, at the earnest recommendation of Dr. Barth, of Germany, granted the sum of 100*l*. to Dr. Gutzlaff, for the Chinese Union, composed of converted natives, a considerable number of whom traverse the interior parts of China, introducing the word of God into those portions of the country to which no missionary had access. 1849, Mr. Barker writes: "Our work goes on steadily (among the Jews), and the demand for the Hebrew Scriptures continues unabated, and, if anything, gains ground. During the last quarter of a century vast numbers of copies of the Scriptures, in Hebrew and other languages, have been circulated among the Jews of different countries. The report of the Bible Societies witnesses to the desire of the Jews to possess the Bible at Malta, Damascus, and St. Petersburg. In the space of four years, 5000 copies of the Scriptures have been put into circulation at Algiers, at Tunis, and Tripoli, and in many other towns. 1850, Calcutta Society ordered to press 125,000 copies of the Hindui Scriptures. 1852, a Baptist missionary visited numerous places where neither their missionary nor christian book had ever been seen before. He says, "The desire of the people to obtain the Scriptures is most intense." 1853, the number distributed was 67,418; and from the year 1820 almost 800,000 copies have been put in circulation. ### "Do we love His appearing?"

Are we waiting now for the glorious day,
When the Lord will come the earth to bless;
When the dark'ning shadows will flee away
Before the Sun of Righteousness?
Do we hopefully watch and pray for the hour
When every eye will His face behold?
When Satan's host will lose the r power,
And the dust of earth be turned to gold?

Do we see the types, in the things that are,
Of the glorious things that yet will be?
When the earth will her robes of beauty wear,
And the slaves of sin are by Christ made free?
Do we watch, as we watch for an absent friend?
Do we trust his word that the time is nigh,
When Christ in his power and might will descend,
And the world will see him eye to eye?

Do we know that he'll rule and reign alone,
That death and hell will their captives bring
To his feet; that he'll reign on Judah's throne,
And the Jews will hail him as their king?
Dare we doubt that the earth will soon be free,
Eden's lost beauty restored again;
That soon, oh! soon there'll be no more sea,
And the Lord our God will rule and reign?

The Great Prayer Meeting.

God hath said that "at the name of Jesus EVERY knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; and that EVERY tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father." I believe that this great event will occur when Christ comes "to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe."

For nearly twenty centuries the note of warning has been sounded in the ears of a world that "lieth in wickedness," but the masses have replied, "We will not have this man to reign over us," and they are rushing on to "swift destruction." Ere long, "the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God." The sea shall give up the dead which are in it; death and hell shall deliver up the dead which are in them, and all will appear at "the judgment seat of Christ." This day will be one of joy to the believer; but to the ungodly, one of weeping and "wailing, and gnashing of teeth." No pen can describe the terrors of that day. "The kings of the earth, and the great men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bondman, and every freeman," will hide "themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains," and will say "to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb." At that time the wicked will seek Him early, and call upon him, but he will answer, "I have called, and ye refused." "I also will laugh at your calamity." This will be the only answer to the prayers of the condemned.

Unconverted reader! God has commanded you to pray. You have refused to obey him, and in your present condition you are "without Christ, . . . having no hope, and without God in the world." If you do not "call on the name of the Lord" before he comes, you will be compelled to take an active part in the great prayer meeting. You cannot escape the notice of the Savior, though there be millions of others around you. God hath said, "Every knee should bow," and "every tongue should confess." You cannot hope for mercy then, but will have to hear that awful sentence—"Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels."

As a friend, I beseech you to "repent . . . and believe the gospel." God says, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." "Flee from the wrath to come!" Delay not. "The kingdom of heaven is at hand." Every moment is precious. You have no time to spare. "Now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation." Listen to the invitations of the gospel. "The Spirit and the Bride say, come; . . . let him that heareth say, come; . . . whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." "Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord; though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool." Our heavenly Father is "not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance"; "and him that cometh to me, I will in no wise cast out." Come, in your lost condition, to Christ, for such he came to save. Refuse to come, and you must perish forever. F. H. BURBANK.

Plymouth, Mass.

Family and Closet Devotion.

Don't be afraid of spending too much time in reading God's word, in secret and family prayer. Hold on, read on, pray on. Get your soul full of God in the morning; it is gain, clear gain. It is gain every way, temporally and spiritually. When the heart is right with God, calm, sweet, peaceful, heavenly, every thing goes right. In this happy, joyful, composed state of mind, business men, merchants, printers, mechanics of every kind, husbandmen, doctors, lawyers, ministers, editors—all, great and small, can accomplish ten-fold walking thus in wisdom's ways, God-fearingly, strengthened with might in the inner man. A man rich in faith, full of the Holy Spirit, is a giant; he rises above the world—its temptations, trials, conflicts. He does every thing in the spirit of meekness and love of Christ.

Some holy men spend whole hours in the morning feasting on angels' food. They drink deeply at the living Fountain. Then, when they go forth into the battle-field, Satan trembles before them. God smiles graciously on their labors, on things secular and divine, all the day, gloriously. Friends, don't hurry over your morning devotions, in the closet or around the family altar. Give yourselves ample time for secret prayer, reading the word of God, meditation and self-examination; get your souls on fire, richly imbued with the spirit of holy benevolence; build on solid rock. "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom; teaching and admonishing one another in psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord."

Wait on God, put on the whole armor, then go out to your varied, secular employments newly and freshly baptized with an increased faith, hope and love. This hurrying over hap-hazardly secret and family devotion, omitting reading, singing and expostulation, as very many do, is mockery, high-handed, God-dishonoring. It is not only robbery, slighting Omnipotence, but it is starvation to the soul, degrading the family altar, making it a mere pack-horse, or scape-goat. It is like the children of Israel before the golden calf, sitting down to eat and drink, and rising up to play. God, the Almighty, is not in all their thoughts. Besides, the family, the children and servants, are led into a loose, careless, slip-shod, half-heartedness.

"How many useless prayers we say,
Because our lives our prayers belie;
Because devotion dies away,
As on the air the echoes die!"

Friends, give yourselves time, do up the work faithfully, patiently, profitably. Let your children, your friends, your neighbors, see and know you fear God, and have respect unto all his commandments. Say with the divine poet, "My voice shalt thou hear in the morning, O Lord; in the morning will I direct my prayer unto thee and will look up."

"My God, is any hour so sweet,
From blush of morn to evening star,
As that which calls me to thy feet,
The hour of prayer?"

"What manner of Love."

"Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God: therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not."—1 JOHN 3: 1.

When some of the Danish missionaries in India appointed some of their Indian converts to translate a portion of the Bible, when they came to these words—"Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God," one of them started at so bold a saying, as he thought it, exclaiming, "It is too much; rather let me render it, 'they shall be permitted to kiss his feet.'" In what sense are we the sons of God? Says one, We are the children of God by adoption. So it seems by what Paul says, "That we might receive the adoption of sons."—Gal. 4: 5. But is that all? It seems to me that is too cold, too distant, though we deserve not so much honor as that. "What!" says one, "is there any more endearing title for us to bear than to become the adopted sons of God? An adopted child is not as near and dear as a natural child, or a child according to the flesh. But then is it possible for us to sustain any higher, any nearer, any more endearing relation to a loving God than that of adopted children?" Let Peter answer.—"Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises, that . . . ye might be partakers of the divine nature." 2 Pet. 1: 4. Is it possible that we are to become divine, and have the nature of our Father, God, and of our elder brother, Jesus? So Peter thought, and so I believe. Paul declares (Rom. 8: 15) that in this life we are the children of God by adoption. Peter, that in the life to come, when we are born again, we shall be divine and so become the natural sons of God, and the natural brothers and sisters of Jesus. This then is the highest possible honor, the greatest possible blessing, and the most inestimable endearment that infinite affection can bestow. "Therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not." What then if the world cannot know us, cannot appreciate the humble sons and daughters of God? What if the children of the devil, the sons of perdition, do not love us, do not speak well of us, and evil judge us? All this is of little moment if we have the hope of being made "like Him" who was so evil treated when on earth. "And every man that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself even as he is pure."

Extracts from Dr. Herman Schultz.

"Man is above all beings of nature personality. But he is created personality, because will and being is not one with him; because the end, which his will is able to take hold of, lies without him, in that God for whose susceptibility he was created. So man has no physical connection with God; he is not created holy and immortal; if he were by nature, he would be God himself, would have both end and will united within him. But he has the image-personality, bears the power within him to take hold of the absolute, to make to his own by free will that which could not be created to him by his nature, the power to become holy and immortal. Both is he, who feels the divinity within him and himself with it indissolubly united. So does the christian feel himself immortal, where he knows himself united with the life, the immortality itself, the prince of life. (Rom. 8: 38.) This, however, can only be done by mediation of the free will, and this includes the possibility that man may become neither the one or the other, neither holy or immortal. * * * *

"Plain is the expression—to take away the spirit; which, especially in Job and Eccl., also in some of the Psalms, stands for die. (Job 27: 2; comp. ver. 5) There is nothing alluding to the personality of man. As the animal lives through the spirit (breath), and if it is withdrawn from him dies (Eccl. 3: 14; Ps. 104: 29; Job 42: 40; 22: 2; 34: 14;) so also man has become alive through inhaling the spirit (Gen. 2: 7); and if this is withdrawn, the time of his consciousness, his life, ceases. (Eccl. 8: 18; 12: 7; 8: 8; Ps. 146: 4) Here spirit is something uncreated, divine, incorruptible, the animating, by which life only can exist. But this is no part of man, but an animating principle, which God withdraws, which he gives back again to re-animate. And it is only in this sense in which the singular translation of the Septuagint of Job 7: 15 can be understood. * * * *

"Neither body or soul or spirit are immortal; all three are created and can perish; all three are in their life caused through participation with the spirit of life, which is God. But through the spirit man can lay hold on God, and hereby become immortal; i. e., by filling the soul through the spirit, the body through the soul, with the true life, with God. But where this is not done, it does not follow that the spiritual soul must with the body perish, as a soul not spiritual. [H. Schultz makes a difference between human soul, which he calls spiritual, and the soul of animals, or animal soul.] The spiritual soul is not like a soul without spirit, entirely dependent on the body; it has a sphere of existence without the body, another principle, with which it hangs together. Its connection with the life is not only that by mediation of the body, but it can also exist without the body as long as it is not entirely separated from God. Even if it did not accomplish this its end, if man dissolved, and the spiritual soul had no longer for its organ the body, the same could exist on, could perhaps be eternal, according to the designs of the Creator (for a necessity of ending does not follow), but never immortal.

Immortal can only be the whole man. For whenever he accomplishes his end, if he by his free will does not exclude God from him, but makes him indissolubly to his own,—there he is entirely immortal. Where he does not do this, where he excludes the life from him,—there soul and spirit are not immortal,—there they have the true life not within them; they have separated themselves from it; therefore whatever they may be, eternal or not, they are not immortal. * * * *

"So man was created for immortality; he had, as in the second creation the spirit was imparted to him, access to God; there was nothing which hindered him from accomplishing his end. Only a pure development was required; only the opposition of the self-will was to be avoided. Because the free will is a necessary condition of accomplishing a moral end, man was capable to cut himself off from his fountain; the spiritual soul could withdraw from its life-principle,—hereby cut off the possibility of immortality, which is given only where God is,—be subjected to the death-principle, which rules over all that does not bear eternal life within itself, etc. * * * *

"The New Testament declares the logos of God as him in whom and through whom and for whom every thing is created. In connection herewith we can therefore say, that in union with this logos man could become immortal. So was already the first Adam created and designed to have eternal life in the Son, by gradually uniting himself with the eternal Son through an undisturbed development of those powers that were imparted to him, and through a voluntary acceptance of the relation in which the Creator has placed him; not physical, not with loss of our personality, but ethical, so that he might obtain by his own exertion that personality, as the creature only can have it. So man stands opposite in the creation to immortality, not as its possessor, but as its boon inheritor, who only had to remain in his original state, in order to come into possession of it." L. REIMER.

NOTE. Dr. H. Schultz speaks of two creations of man; according to the first, he is equal to the animal creation, and possesses, like this, an animal soul. according to his second creation, his animal soul is spiritualized by the spirit (a spiritual soul), in consequence of which he becomes able to receive divine impressions, while the animal soul is never capable of this; but neither one or the other are immortal. ### Contentment.—No. I.

An extract from an ancient work on "Divine Contentment," by Simeon Ashe, minister of the gospel, London, 1653.

"I have learned in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content."—PHIL. 4: 11

"The inspired apostle in the former verses of this chapter has left for our instruction some useful and heavenly exhortations, among the rest, to be careful for nothing. Not to exclude a prudential care, for he that provideth 'not for his own, . . . hath denied the faith.' 1 Tim. 5: 8. Nor yet a religious care, for we must 'give diligence to make' our 'calling and election sure.' 2 Pet. 1: 10. But to exclude all anxious care about the issue and event of things. "Take no thought for your life what ye shall eat'; and in this sense it should be a christian's care not to be careful. The word careful in the Greek comes from a primitive, that signifies to cut the heart in pieces—a soul-dividing care. Take heed of this. We are bid to commit our ways unto the Lord. The Hebrew word is, Roll thy way upon the Lord. It is our work to cast our care upon him, but it is God's work to take care. By our immoderacy we take his work out of his hands. Care, when it is eccentric, either distrustful or distracting, is very dishonorable to God. It takes away his providence, as if he sat in heaven, and minded not what became of things here below. Immoderate care not only takes the heart off from better things, but it is a spiritual cancer, that doth waste and dispirit, and does no good to the soul. We may sooner, by our care, add a furlong to our grief, then a cubit to our comfort. God doth threaten it as a curse,—'they shall eat their bread with carefulness.' Ezek. 12: 19. Better fast than eat of that bread. Be careful for nothing. 'I have learned in whatsoever state I am therewith to be content.' Noble sentiment! A speech worthy to be engraven upon our hearts, and treasured up in our memory forever. Observe, he says not, 'I have heard,' but, 'I have learned.' It is one thing to hear, and another thing to learn, as it is one thing to eat and another thing to digest. St. Paul was a practitioner. Christians hear much, but, it is to be feared, learn but little. There were four sorts of ground in the parable, and but one good ground. An emblem of this truth;—many hearers, but few learners." C. H.

FREEDOM OF OPINION.—Condemn no man for not thinking as you think. Let every one enjoy the full and free liberty of thinking for himself. Let every man use his own judgment, since every man must give an account of himself to God. Abhor every approach, in any kind or degree, to the spirit of persecution. If you cannot reason or persuade a man into the truth, never attempt to force him into it. If love will not compel him, leave him to God, the Judge of all.—John Wesley.

Impromptu.

O! come again to earth and reign,
Jesus, on thy throne;
Hasten the day, when thy blest sway
Old earth shall gladly own.

Give to the blest the promised rest,
And set the captives free;
And let them bathe within the wave
Of immortality.

O! come and save, from sea and grave,
The millions who have died;
The pure and just take from the dust,
And bring them to thy side.

Remove sin's stain from earth's domain,
And end her night of woe;
And let sweet flowers begem green bowers,
And living waters flow.

O! let thy voice bid earth rejoice,
When sin has passed away;
Let victory's strain, in glad refrain,
Proclaim thy righteous sway.

Gospel of the Kingdom.

[Statistics from Dr. Coggswell's Harbinger Mill.]

(Concluded.)

1816, a version of the New Testament, in modern Arabic, for the Mohammedans. 1817, Bible Society in Australia. 1818, missionaries translated the Old and New Testaments into the language of the Buriat Mongolians in Siberia. 1819, the Bible printed in twenty-seven languages in India, and an edition of 4000 copies of the Syrian Old Testament. The same year, the formation of the Smyrna Bible Society. 1820, Madras Society. Since that time almost 800,000 copies have been put in circulation. Tahiti, an edition of 3000 copies of Luke's Gospel, and 10,000 copies of the book of Acts and the other Gospels followed. 1821, Dutch Society furnished with the Scriptures, and the Marine Bible Society formed. They also undertook a version of the New Testament for Java, and a Malay version for Amboyna. 1822, a Bible Association was formed in the town of Berditchev, Russia, for the Jews, who aided it by their subscriptions, and were anxious to obtain the Old and New Testaments. 1825, an African Jew purchased thirty-three Hebrew Bibles at Malta, and carried to Tunis, and another Jew purchased one hundred and thirty-two Hebrew Bibles to carry to Leghorn for the use of their brethren. In Sweden, 1824, the Hernosand Ladies' Bible Society. 1828, Professor Kieffer finished his most careful revision of the Turkish Bible. 1828, Protestant Bible Society formed in Russia. In 1826, the four Gospels were completed in Ethiopic, and the entire New Testament in 1830. In 1829, the New Testament was published for the Abyssinians in Africa. New Testament translated into Amharic, and published in 1829.

It is known to be a fact that, even in 1814, some pious Englishmen, who came to Paris, made an attempt to meet with a French Bible of any version, and that they were unsuccessful in their search. The Bible Society subscribed 250*l.* to a stereotype edition of Le Maistre de Sacy's version of the New Testament for the use of the Catholics in France. 1818, when Mr. Owen paid a visit in Paris to Prof. Kieffer, and found him revising the Turkish Bible, his thoughts were also busy on what might be done among the Roman Catholic portion of the population. His distributions among them in 1819 and 1820 cost the committee upwards of 2000*l.* Prof. Kieffer was appointed as regular agent in 1820, and continued so to act until 1833. His issues during this period amounted to more than 730,000 copies, chiefly among Roman Catholics. In 1830, when religious liberty was at its height in France, a strenuous effort was made to aid the religious movement which it had commenced in Paris, with a view to evangelize the Roman Catholics. Several places were opened in the capital, which were filled to overflowing. Monsieur de P. was appointed agent in 1833 for the Bible Society, and for twenty years he directed the agency, with consummate zeal and prudence. In 1830, the Geneva and Paris Bible Societies employed 150 colporteurs. In 1837, the British and Foreign Bible Society began to send forth colporteurs. These colporteurs now traverse the continent of Europe,—a band of humble but zealous and valiant soldiers of the Cross. They carry with them the "sword of the Spirit," and their weapon is "not carnal, but mighty, through God, to the pulling down of strong holds." From the shores of the Mediterranean to the Baltic, in Belgium, in Holland, France and Germany, they unfurl the gospel banner, and woodrous are the tales they tell of its willing reception among those who would never have heard of it but through their means. During the first fifteen years by colporteurs, in France alone, were circulated almost seventeen hundred thousand copies.

It is calculated that one of these excellent men offered the Scriptures and spoke of their contents to more than 200,000 persons. He had been colporteuring eleven years before he died, and sold at least 18,000 copies of the Scriptures. His name was Osee Derbecq, and he labored in Belgium. The Bible Society never had a more faithful servant. His whole soul was absorbed in his work; his deep piety and profound humility made him a welcome visitor wherever he went; and many persons who had persecuted him, afterward became his warmest friends. In more than one locality, where there is now a flourishing congregation, he was the sower of the seed. He died at the age of forty-two, and his death made a strong impression on those around him, for it was full of bliss.

Sometimes the colporteurs in France are addressed in this way: "As for you, you are men of the Bible; you never speak of anything else: you certainly are not men of this world. Whether Louis Napoleon or Louis Phillippe sits on the throne, it matters very little to you; you are comical fellows; you seem as if you belong neither to the republic, the empire, nor to anything else; and, to look at you, and to listen to you, one might almost say that God is always before you, and that it is he that governs. How is it? Explain yourselves." And they do explain themselves: they stand by many a dying bed, and are brought into sympathy with many a strange scene: they sow the good seed through the field of the world, and often reap, years afterward, the seed they have sown.

1832. The Netherlands Bible Society, Holland, obtained a good translation of the Javanese New Testament. They employed for this purpose Mr. Gericke; and the King of Netherlands presented, on this account, a gold medal, showing that the government also prized his exertions. In 1844 colportage was adopted with great advantage in Holland; and Mr. Tiddy writes, that the sales at the depot surpass all idea; in one week they amounted to 2250 volumes. In nine years, the sale of the Scriptures has surpassed 326,000 volumes. The depository at Amsterdam writes in 1853: "Armed with the sword of the Spirit, the colporteurs continue their travels; and this year we have again experienced that our God is faithful, and that his word retains its power. The opposition of papacy is increasing. The strongest bulwark is the word of God. Nothing is feared by Rome more than this. In 1832, in the valleys of Piedmont and Vaudois, have been distributed 600 copies, and another edition was called for of 2000 copies." 1840. Maj. Gen. Beckwith writes, that the Gospels sent into Northern Italy are freely circulating among the Protestants. The General, with other friends, has erected and endowed a hundred schools among the Vaudois. 1854, in the report, Maj. Gen. Beckwith is said to have made a remittance of 95*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* for Italian and Piedmontese Scriptures. Now comes the memorable year of 1833,—"the stars shall fall from heaven." Jesus said that immediately after the tribulation of those days the sun and moon should be darkened; but the stars did not fall till fifty-three years after, which is a strong and mighty bulwark to defend that sign in 1780. The spread of the gospel from that year, the circulation of the Scriptures, and the new impetus in colportage given to spread the word, clusters around the falling of the stars in '33, while on the other side of that great sign were 1260 years of tribulation, and Jesus said, "such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be," and the great earthquake that shook all the world. The tribulation of the saints, the sackcloth state of the two witnesses, and the great earthquake, were the strong bulwark on that side of the sign in 1780, that is immovable as the throne of God. "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away," saith Jesus Christ. These are some of the beautiful sayings of Jesus, full of mercy and truth. More has been done in those fifty-three years to spread the word of God among the nations than ever was before.

1833. The Old Testament translated into the language of the Buriat Mongolians, Siberia. 1834. American missionaries commenced their labors with the Nestorian Church in the north of Persia. Their language is the Syriac, closely akin to the Hebrew, and spoken many centuries before Christ. In 1830, the B. F. Bible Society put in their possession 2000 copies of the four Gospels. The American missionaries say of these tribes: "Many of the people appear like persons awakened from a deep sleep, and are inquiring 'How is it that we have been kept so long in ignorance and self-delusion?' To which inquiry their priests reply, 'We ourselves have been dead in sins, and our sins are greater than yours for having hidden the light from you so long.'" In 1835 the Scriptures were introduced into Spain, while the cholera was raging; in 1838, by the colporteurs in the Pyrenees; in 1838, while confusion and misery reigned in the country, the Holy Scriptures gained a silent entrance, and were openly bought and sold in several of the principal towns. Between 5 and 6000 copies were sold. "The expressions of gratitude for the books were innumerable. It is said, 'The words and the history of the crucified Savior and of his followers are most interesting to us. We were altogether ignorant of such a book, and it delights us;' it was received by the laboring class of people. 16,000 copies have been scattered in five years."

In 1839, the Arabic Scriptures were executed at Malta. From 1811, the Bible Society attempted to present versions in Arabic. Henry Martin said, "When we gain this language, we will begin to preach to Arabia, Syria, Persia, Tartary, part of India and China, half of Africa, all the sea coasts of the Mediterranean, and Turkey, and one tongue shall suffice for them all." The Scriptures sent to Arabia, where the great Apostle of the Gentiles commenced his ministry. Gal. 1; 15–17. 1840, the Calcutta Bible Association established. This object was now effectually accomplished; scarcely a family of Protestant christians has been found without the Bible. In 1841, Mongolian translation completed. Mr. Shagdur went out to distribute copies of the Scriptures in the districts bordering on the Chinese frontiers. In a few days the whole of his stock was disposed of. He says he felt like a man who had gone out with a bushel of seed-corn to sow a field of ten acres. We have been told that the books are well understood, and are much sought after. In 1842, the entire Old Testament was published in ancient and modern Syriac, by the American Bible Society. 1843, the missionary cause called forth more interest in the Protestant states of Germany. 1844, Mr. Henderson visited Denmark, after the lapse of nearly forty years, and found the total issues of the Bible Society had been 193,000 copies. 1845, in the county of Radnor, England, a colporteur supplied every family with a copy in one district, among a population of 5804. The years of 1845 and 1846 were remarkable for the increasing demand for the Scriptures. From the Manchester Depository 96,711 copies were issued in one year. The Auxiliaries at Liverpool, Bristol, Bath, Hereford, Derby, Leicester, greatly increased their distributions. The total issues of 1846 amounted to 1,441,651 copies; in 1847, to 1,419,283 copies. 1847, the distribution of the Scriptures in Austria. Despotism and popery clasp hands, and work together to shut out the Bible from its territories, even in the midst of this nineteenth century, but not till 41,659 copies were distributed. In some parts, the desire for the word is described as a "rage," and a "famishing"; and the priests of Rome, becoming aware of this, denounced the books from the pulpit. Spain is closed against the Bible.

1848, the committee, at the earnest recommendation of Dr. Barth, of Germany, granted the sum of 100*l.* to Dr. Gutzlaff, for the Chinese Union, composed of converted natives, a considerable number of whom traverse the interior parts of China, introducing the word of God into those portions of the country to which no missionary had access. 1849, Mr. [illegible] writes: "Our work goes on steadily (among the Jews), and the demand for the Hebrew Scriptures continues unabated, and, if anything, gains ground. During the last quarter of a century vast numbers of copies of the Scriptures, in Hebrew and other languages, have been circulated among the Jews of different countries. The report of the Bible Societies witnesses to the desire of the Jews to possess the Bible at Malta, Damascus, and St. Petersburg. In the space of four years, 5000 copies of the Scriptures have been put into circulation at Algiers, at Tunis, and Tripoli, and in many other towns. 1850, Calcutta Society ordered to press 125,000 copies of the Hindui Scriptures. 1852, a Baptist missionary visited numerous places where neither missionary nor christian book had ever been seen before. He says, "The desire of the people to obtain the Scriptures is most intense." 1853, the number distributed was 67,418; and from the year 1820 almost 800,000 copies have been put in circulation. Mr. Hill, the missionary, when at one time proclaiming the love of Christ and the blessings of salvation, would frequently hear the expression, "What mercy!" "What words of mercy!" "Tarry with us, sahib, and teach us more of these things." And at another time he writes: "One evening, while preaching to about one hundred and fifty persons at my [illegible] door, I observed a tall old man approaching, leaning on a silver-headed cane. He sat down with the rest, and listened with marked attention, and afterward addressing me, said: 'Sahib, I have been to every holy place in India; I have consulted all the [illegible] sages and pundits I have met with; I am two years short of eighty, and have not found a religion in which I can hope for eternity. My remaining days are few; the evening of life is set in; and oh!' he exclaimed with emotion, 'may it please God to bring me at the close of my long life to know and find a way by which I can die in peace! Do give me a book which will tell me this way, and I will read it earnestly.' I gave him a book." Ah! who can tell how many such persons may in the jungles be like him, thirsting for the waters of life, and endeavoring to feel after God, if haply they might find him.

In South America, the American agent says the Bible is here excluded by royal mandates, and by papal bulls. The new governments are not only willing, but anxious, that the Scriptures should have a general circulation. "Surely it is a new thing in this land to see twenty-four mules loaded with Bibles and Testaments, making their way up the mountains and through the woods into the interior." A Bible Society formed at Buenos Ayres, supplies Brazil, Chili, Peru, and Buena Vista. In the region of Rio de la Plata, and Rio de Janeiro, and Pernambuco, the Spanish and Portuguese Scriptures are received with gratitude. Since 1809 the American Bible Society has 1400 auxiliary societies, and nearly 2000 branch societies. The Bible Society House in New York, and their income increasing by 8500*l.* a year, with their annual distribution of 779,000 volumes. These all unite to speed the bright angel flying "in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel, saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication." Rev. 14: 6–8.

What do I believe?

First, I believe there is a God, and that he is "a rewarder of them that diligently seek him"; that he is not an immaterial, intangible being, as is almost universally taught in these last days, but that he has a body and parts, like man, who was created "in the image of God," Gen. 1: 26, 27; 2: 7; 3: 8; Ex. 33: 18–23. Seeing then that God is a tangible, substantial being, he must have some permanent place of abode. Where is it? Let the wise man Solomon answer. Read 2 Chron. 6: 21, 23, 25, 27, 30, 33, 35, 39. I believe that, notwithstanding his dwelling-place is now in heaven, the day is coming when he will dwell with men on the earth made new. See Rev. 21: 3; Dan. 7: 27; Isa. 65: 17; Rev. 21: 5. I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, according to the Scriptures; that he died, rose again, and ascended to heaven bodily, and now sits at the right hand of his Father as our high priest, to make intercession for us; that he will come again "in like manner" as he ascended, that is, bodily, in the clouds of heaven, and will reign on David's throne, and of his kingdom there shall be no end; and to them that overcome in this life will be given the blessed privilege of sitting with him in his throne, even as he also overcame, and is now set down with his Father on his throne. May God help us to be overcomers!

I do most firmly believe that we are living in the "time of the end," when it may most emphatically be said that the Judge standeth at the door; and all things in the earth, comparatively speaking, moral, social, and physical, seem to give ten-fold weight to the declaration of Christ—"Behold, I come quickly." Seeing, then, that these things are so, what manner of person ought I to be "in all holy conversation and godliness."

I do most firmly believe that the message which has been preached to this world for the last twenty years is the "gospel of the kingdom," and that whoever rejects it, may as well reject God; and it were better for that person that he had never been born. The more people scoff at and ridicule the blessed doctrines of Christ, the stronger, and more determined are those who are walking in the light. May God give us strength and boldness, that we may always be ready to give a reason for our hope with meekness and fear, and to instruct all who will be instructed.

I firmly believe that the signs which were to foretoken the coming of the Lord are nearly, if not quite, all in the past: the darkening of the sun and the moon in 1780, the falling of the stars in 1833, and the "distress of nations, with perplexity," if not already begun, to be fulfilled, will evidently be fulfilled very soon. And with all these things so plainly to be seen, the world goes headlessly on, and like the swan, which is said to sing the most sweetly just before its death, is singing its song of future peace and prosperity for this world; when everything bespeaks war, and the end of all things. Truly, "darkness (covers) the earth, and gross darkness the people." But thus it must be, or the Scriptures would be broken; for "as the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be; for as in the days before the flood, they were eating and drinking, marrying, and giving in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark, and knew not until the flood came and took them all away: so shall also the coming of the Son of man be."

Finally, I believe that these are "perilous times," according to the Scriptures; and that there is much need of having on the whole armor of God, that we may be able to stand against all opposition, and meet the Lord when he comes. God help me, and all his children, to live humbly, and keep his word patiently, always remembering that "with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation."

From Canada East.

Visit of Eld. J. V. Himes to Canada East, in Waterloo, Melbourne and Danville.

We have been struck with his improved health, and with it a very decided and happy state of mind. I have never seen him when he possessed more of the spirit of the Master than now. It is evident to me that his work is not yet done; and although he has gone through enough within the last twenty years of our complex history to have killed many ordinary men, or sent them to an insane hospital, yet he seems to me to have vigor and strength, spirit and life, to accomplish much more work for the expectant church, which I have no doubt the Lord and the brethren will not fail to sustain him in doing. His practical discourses are just what the church needs in this late hour of her history. His sermon on "perfect peace" has some claim to special notice. It is well known that some christians (?) are always in a broil among their neighbors; their lot is always cast in bad neighborhoods and among quarrelsome folks. One of these unfortunate christians happened to be present, when the Eld. insisted that a man should be at peace not only with his neighbors, his family, but also with his horse and his dog, and even in some respects with the Devil himself. At the close of the discourse the man rose and made some confessions much unexpected by others.

His prophetical discourses have given us a new interest upon the all-absorbing subject of the coming Lord They appear to me and many others to be sound, and important to the church, on the time. Time ought to be to us now, of no less importance than it was to the prophets. I was much interested by the time as given by Bro. Himes. I wish all could hear. I did not think I could feel so much interest on the subject again. His argument on the 1260, 1290, and 1335 days was very clear for the ending of the latter period in 1868, but that the Lord might come before, as there might be some things to be done after and before Daniel stands in his lot. The above arguments were favorably received by many at the conference in Waterloo; but some who stood on conservative ground objected; yet they did not give any light on these periods. 1st. They objected to the light given by Bro. H.; and 2nd, they gave no light in the place of it. This was the case of an esteemed brother who made some remarks and objections at the close of the conference on the Sabbath evening. He reminded me of the case of Joseph Hume and his pious mother. She was a christian, but her infidel son gave her no rest until he had destroyed the foundation of her hope. She became sick, and on her death bed he was at a distance, and she wrote complaining for the loss of her former consolation in sickness, and to come home and give her in her dying hour something to lean upon, instead of that which he had taken away. But it is notorious that he never answered the letter, and so there was nothing forthcoming, just because there was nothing to be had. I say it is not enough for the brethren to object, and try to throw doubts over what others give with clearness and force,—but give us light—a better argument,—we are ready to hear. This was what we demanded of our opponents in 1842–3.

I am glad Bro. H. has visited Canada again. It is now ten years since he was with us in Danville, and I am sure he has appeared to us with fifty per cent improvement, and ten years hence I believe he will have improved upon that ten-fold. His visit has done us all good, and as usual there was a large turnout to hear. I would say to the brethren all abroad, let Bro. H. be sustained. He needs the sympathy and support of all. He has, no doubt, subtle foes to deal with, such as might be expected; but God is able to sustain his servants who put their trust in him, and faithfully do their duty.

Our meeting closed here with the Lord's Supper in the evening, when between forty and fifty of the brethren and sisters surrounded the long table, and no man could feel more at home in the family or more happy than J. V. Himes. J. Porter.

AND
SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

The Church in Portland.

We spent Sabbath, June 29th, with the church in Portland, Me., and had an interesting time. They have a pleasant hall, and large congregations. Their prospect is good. They have opened a Sabbath School that bids fair for excellent success. Although this church has passed through some trying scenes, it appears to gather strength in every battle with Satan, and receive new courage for another conflict. It seems to be firmly resolved, in the strength of the Lord, to have a complete victory at last, and share in the triumphs attending the grand coronation of the King of kings. They are longing for his return, and expecting it soon.—G.

Scatter Tracts.

We think but few realize the importance of the tract enterprise. We know of no way in which so much good can be accomplished with so small means as by the distribution of tracts. One dollar will pay for thirteen hundred pages of tracts including the postage, to any part of the United States. It is hardly among the probabilities that so many pages would be scattered without producing a lasting benefit to several of the readers, and very probably result in the salvation of some. If one dollar may do so much good, are there not many who will make this little sacrifice for the benefit of their fellow men? People are now anxious to read. They express even a greedy desire for our tracts, which a few years since they would only use for kindling their fires. Let us supply them. Many have already done nobly, but let others come and share in the blessing that follows those who give cheerfully to the Lord.

That is the best use of money which does the most good. Come, brethren, and sisters, let every one have some stock in this glorious enterprise. While some cannot give more than five cents, which would pay for sixty pages, others can give five, or fifty dollars. Let us do all we can to spread the light we prize so highly. Unless we do it soon, we shall lose the opportunity.

The following from the Tract Journal, may serve to show the worth of tracts:—G.

The Torn Tract.—When a student of theology, I became acquainted with a pious and intelligent family, living in the neighborhood of the Seminary, where I learned, from the lips of Mr. —— himself, the facts now related:—

In early life Mr. —— was a sailor. He fell into those habits of profanity and dissipation too frequently belonging to that class. One day, as he walked the deck, after a violent storm, he saw a piece of paper at his feet. Picking it up, he discovered it was a piece of a religious tract. He read the few words it contained. They filled his mind with a sense of his sinfulness. He thought them exactly appropriate to his own case. He had no rest till he repented, gave his heart to God, and made, the first opportunity, a public profession of religion. He continued a christian life, became an officer in the church, and brought up his family religiously.

We see in this the . . . method which God often employs for convincing men of sin, and bringing them into holy service to himself. We see, too, how the humblest instrument may be used for this purpose. It should encourage us to pray with earnestness and faith that the word of truth, scattered in so many ways on the printed page, may ever be blessed by the same results. C. H. M.

Dark War Clouds.

All classes are now free to admit that the future of our country looks very gloomy. No "silver lining" appears upon the war clouds hanging over our nation. Men have tried to penetrate the gathering darkness, and, like the sailor at sea, have often imagined they saw a pleasant landscape, which proved to be only a fog-bank. There is but one prospect before our nation—ruin. Like Nebuchadnezzar, it still boasts in its haughty pride; but its valley of humiliation is at hand. Its days of glory will evidently soon be among the things that were. Ere long, we may expect to be ruled by the rod of earth's noted monarch. Then the system of man-worship will be complete; and demons will rule the nations through their chosen man and his subordinates.

Thank the Lord, to the view of the saints, the clouds are now lined not with "silver" alone, but tinged with the golden glory of the coming kingdom of peace. Let us keep ready to welcome the Great King, who is to raise the dead, and immortalize those who love his appearing.

The following from the Boston Evening Journal shows the state of feeling among thinking men who are thoroughly posted in passing events:—G.

"The Crisis.—With no information beyond what we lay before the public, we have no hesitation in saying that we have now reached the critical moment of the war. Darkness overhangs the tremendous struggle that has been for the last two days going on before Richmond, and no one can tell us in what accents the terrible silence will be broken. Perhaps our loyal brethren have been fighting for the possession of Richmond, and perhaps for their own lives. All we know is, they have been contending against a greatly superior force, coming on in successive waves of attack, while our men have had to keep up a continuous, exhausting fight, nearly encompassed by the enemy.

If they win the battle under these circumstances, it will be the most glorious and beneficent victory ever known. If they fail——but we will not calculate on that event. While there is room for hope—as there clearly is—we shall cherish it. It is enough to know that our brothers in the field are doing their duty, and the question for us is, are we doing ours? Every energy we possess that can be lent to the cause should be given instantly. All complaints, fault-finding, croaking, should be dropped, as if they were coals of fire on our own heads. Providence is throwing us into the scales of trial—let us see that we prove not wanting.

Whether our army is victorious or not, it will need immense succor from the loyal community. Its thousands of dead and wounded and exhausted, will call for immediate attention. Reinforcements, physicians, medical stores, supplies, conveniences in whatever the North has that is demanded by the exigency, must be hurried on without stint or hesitation. We beseech every man to consider instantly whether he cannot do something for his country in this hour of her need. Let there be no panic, no misgiving of the future—for this mighty nation is not vulnerable to human hands—but only the quick, calm exercise of that patriotic prudence, skill and energy, that have made us what we are as a people. If we do our duty, it will be the best pledge that everything will go on well, and that the unsetting sun of victory will cheer the land."

The State of Italy.

There is strong probability that Rome is near its end as the capitol of the Pope's dominions. There appears to be no chance for him to regain his lost power. The Italians are most firmly resolved that Rome shall be their capitol without a Pope to dictate their laws. They are determined that Italy shall be "United and Free." But when we arrive at this point in the history of this harlot power, we may know from this very state of things, if there were no other signs, that the Lord is soon coming to set up his kingdom, and give it to the saints. Thank the Lord, our home is rapidly approaching. Our days of toil and doubt are nearly over. Soon the glad hour of redemption will burst upon our enraptured vision. We are glad we ever saw this glorious truth, and took it to our embrace.

Touching the state of Italy, a correspondent of the N. Y. Independent writes:—G.

"I see you are not well posted up of Italy. I have within a week read sixty or more of letters, etc., from different parts of Italy. Her patriots are almost maddened by the infernal policy of the French emperor. The state of southern Italy is fearful. Organized atrocities at Rome, which, by aid and comfort of the Emperor, is made garrison, mint, recruiting ground for the ex King of Naples. Language is inadequate to describe the horrible atrocities perpetrated by the bands of brigands so organized and sustained. Eighteen months since I wrote an article here: "America, United and Free—Italy, United and Free." You, as we hope and trust, have passed through, or nearly through the ordeal; but the imperial, regal and papal Floyds, Davises, and Masons are working their will on Italy conspirator fashion, and according to their decree."

Speak the Truth.

How little regard is paid to the particular instruction in the Bible relative to the use of the tongue. How few seem to believe that "all liars shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone." Because deception and exaggeration are so common, many appear to excuse themselves on the ground that others do the same. This has become a great sin in these last days, and is still increasing like all other sinful practices. If there was any necessity for speaking lies, then, of course, the sin would cease; but men can tell the truth if they choose.

David asks the important question, "Lord, who shall abide in thy tabernacle?" In the answer it is said,—"He that . . . speaketh the truth in his heart." The Lord wishes all his people to tell the truth, and has decided that no liar shall have any place in his kingdom.

The following, from the Home Monthly, affords a specimen of the way by which parents teach their children to lie by their own careless example:—G.

'I will skin you alive if you do that again,' exclaimed a mother to a naughty child. It was a sort of hyperbolical expression that has crept into frequent use, with a multitude of other expressions of similar character. She did not mean that she should proceed to flay the little one as butchers would a calf or lamb. The execution of her threat would fill her own soul with excessive horror. She would not have strength to make much progress in the very barbarous work of skinning her child alive. It would not be motherly.

'I will whip you within an inch of your life,' said a father to his erring son. This would be a terrible whipping indeed. Coming so near to death's door with the rod would be revolting. He did not mean this. He only meant that he would administer a very severe chastisement. No one would be more careful than he not to jeopardize the life of his son. His expression was only a form of exaggeration which society seems to tolerate.

How many precisely such speeches are made in every circle. 'It was done as quick as lightning.' 'He is as slow as a snail.' 'It is as hot as an oven.' 'It is as cold as Greenland.' There is no end to such expressions. And they indicate that the habit of exaggeration is very strong in the human family. Human nature seems inclined to stretch the truth. This is the reason that such strange stories are told, often becoming magnified to such an extent after having passed through several hands. 'A story loses nothing by traveling' is an old saying. It usually grows like a ball of snow which school-fellows roll. Every tongue that repeats it gives it an additional turning over, by which it accumulates. Yet none mean to exaggerate.

It is a fault, however, is it not? May it not be a sin? It is certainly deceptive to tell a child that you will skin him alive when you have no idea of perpetrating the infernal deed. Should we not talk as we mean? Let your yea be yea, and your nay, nay. At least, this should be done to children."

The Billiard Tournament.

On the night of last April 3d a noted Billiard Tournament came off at Irving Hall, New York, between two champion billiard players, for $500, a side. The game lasted from eight o'clock in the evening till four o'clock in the morning. The reporter says:—

"The attendance was somewhat of the composite order, consisting of divines, lawyers, merchants, clerks, professional billiard players, horse jockeys, gamblers, and sporting men generally. The affair was rather select, as far as appearances went, and at no time during the evening was there the slightest confusion or disturbance. Among the celebrities present were the following persons:—Henry Ward Beecher, Simeon Draper, Isaac A. Bell, Hiram Woodruff, Judge McCunn, Capt. Rynders, Theodore E. Tomlinson, Niel Bryant, James Lingard, Thomas Stone, of this city; Ralph Benjamin and Chris. Bird, of Philadelphia; Philip Tieman, of Cincinnati: L. Fox, of Rochester, and J. B. Riley, of Detroit."

Truly these are strange times, when popular ministers can stay in a billiard gambling hall till four o'clock in the morning, and the professed church of Christ pass it by unnoticed.—G.

Close of the War.

At the commencement of the present terrible civil war in America, it was quite commonly believed that the rebellion would be crushed out in sixty or ninety days. Nearly five times ninety days are passed, but still the war continues. But during the last two months, many have said it will be closed up in sixty or ninety days, and then prosperity will return to our land. The following from the Boston Herald, June 27th, shows that some begin to look at things in a different light. The writer says:—G.

"The theory that the present deplorable civil war would come to an end in sixty days or ninety days, is abandoned, and another year is now allowed for its duration by those who manage our financial affairs. Some who were formerly of the opinion that it would be a short war, would now be glad to be promised a peace in five years. The chief argument against the probability of a long war is, that it would be ruinous to the country. But neither party will propose peace on this account. The South, according to Mr. Howell Cobb, would prefer 'annihilation' to restoration of the Union."

Effects of War.—Notwithstanding the awful effects of war in desolating homes, ruining the financial interests of the country, as well as its morals, we find the mass of professing christians and popular ministers are urging people to engage in the bloody conflict that is sweeping thousands to a premature grave and finally to eternal destruction. We do not wonder that the world has lost its confidence in such christianity.

It is said the bereavements caused by the war in the single city of New Orleans has produced not less than twenty-four hundred orphan children.—G.

Southern Feeling.

The following language from the Southern Christian Advocate does not sound much like the teachings of Jesus:—G.

"For one, we would be willing to see both our large armies going into the fight, when the impending conflict comes, with only the black banner floating over them. Let the cries "no retreat," no "surrender," "no quarter asked or given" "only victory or death," carry terror to the hearts of the cruel and wicked aggressors who seek our destruction."

Tracts.—We have just received an interesting tract entitled, "Bible Doctrine of the Old and New Covenant." By A. N. Sibley. Price 8 cents single, postage 1 cent. We are pleased with this tract.—G.

Tremont Tent Meeting.—We have only time this week to say it was excellent. We purpose to say more about it next week.—G.

A new German Tract.

Das Zukunftige shicksal der Gottlosen. (The future fate of the ungodly.)

Another German tract, from the pen of our brother in the Lord, Louis Reimer. As I have not "the gift of tongues," I cannot testify of its merits without some one "interpret" for me; but in my opinion, if you will give your German neighbor a copy of it, he will get important information from it. Send for a few copies and try it. Price 5 cts. single, $3 per one hundred. Address L. Reimer, 722 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia. H. L. H.

Correction.

Bro. Grant:—In the report of the Ill. Conf., I notice an error, perhaps my own, in the first column, near the bottom. Instead of reading, "Bro. Royce was recommended," etc., it should read Bro. G. Moyer was appointed Evangelist, and recommended to the churches, etc.

Faithful Wounds.

"Faithful are the wounds of a friend."—Prov. 27: 6.

I will take the lowest place, and simply speak as a man the thoughts that wear upon my mind by day and night. Why should I wound the Adventists, when in so doing I shall wound myself? I love the truths to which the Crisis is devoted. I am thankful to those who have gratuitously sent it to me for nearly two years. But I also believe that you, like the Laodicean church, proudly assume a character and position which is false, exposing you to the same awful rebuke. You have received truths in advance of the Protestant church, but all in vain, so long as you hold them in unrighteousness, and deny the power of godliness. "We see not our signs (or tokens of distinction): there is no more any prophet: neither is there among us any that knoweth how long."—Ps. 74: 9. Then, "Woe unto you that desire the day of the Lord! to what end is it for you? The day of the Lord is (or shall be) darkness and not light."—Amos 5: 18. You may have escaped from a lion—some absurd protestant traditions; but if you retain others, the bear will meet you (v. 19), and you may as well perish by a lion as by a bear.

This will not harm the humble, who can give up their own way, believe and wait for the Holy Spirit. For God will remember his covenant with Abraham, and in due time turn away from his fierce anger, for the sake of Him who will soon be the desire of all nations. Isa. M. Bruce.

Enquiry.

Bro. Grant:—Cannot we of N. H. and Maine have a campmeeting nearer than Wilbraham, giving us a privilege to enjoy that which we have so long desired? We have anxiously waited a decision in its favor. It is but a little of the precious truth we hear preached up here amongst the "Granite Hills," yet we know how to appreciate that little, and could we have a "Feast of Tabernacles" nearer, it would be a great saving; but if not, the Lord willing, we intend to make the sacrifice and effort to go to Wilbraham. It seems that we cannot be longer denied. Shall we have an answer soon? D.

"Thessalonica; or, the Model Church." A stirring little volume, in which the example of the church at Thessalonica, as it appears in the Epistles bearing the name, is set forth and applied to the churches of our day, with no little forceful and healthy criticism. . . . As a whole, evangelical and Scriptural in tone. The extract from the 'Thessalonica Daily News,' is a pungent and not unneeded sarcasm.—American Presbyterian.

Correspondence.

From N. J. Pribble.

Brn. and Srs.—My course is onward and upward, believing we are near the port. I feel like facing the storm, believing it will not be long. We must have pure hearts and clean hands, for "the pure in heart" shall "see God." When our hearts are pure, we can present our "bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is (our) reasonable service." Paul says, "Be not conformed to this world; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God." We must be very humble, bringing every thought to the obedience of Christ. The nations are angry. God's wrath will soon come, and the time that the dead will be judged. Are we ready? Will it be said to us, "Well done?" Do we still love the prayer meeting? Do we love to visit our closet? If we saw the Lord coming to-day, could we say, "This is our God?" When he comes, it will be to receive a spotless church, without wrinkle. "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." We are coming down to the time of trouble. But God will bring us off conquerors through the "blood of the Lamb, and the word of (our) testimony." If we love God, all things shall work for our good; for "they that trust in the Lord shall be as Mount Zion, which cannot be removed."

Danbury, N. H.

From Eld. S. S. Brewer.

Bro. Grant:—Through the mercy of God we are having some very good, hard times out here among the highways and hedges; in many places, for the sparseness of the population, I may say large congregations and certainly very attentive listeners. All the good accomplished by our feeble efforts, assisted by Him who has promised to be with us even unto the end of the world, will be manifest when He shall appear. These are solemn times to me. Universal humanity is forming a character for the judgment with astonishing rapidity. O! how rapid the mental element fluctuates. Convictions are very transitory. The three great classes set forth in the parable of our Lord, namely, the way-side, stony and thorny-ground hearers, are very numerous, and good-ground hearers very few indeed. Satan, with his cohorts of devotees, dragged to a state of consummate insensibility by his sugar-coated pills, through the instrumentality of men possessing high-sounding religious titles, defies the truth and glories in unrighteousness.

Yet on, on, the sublime yet awful day hasteth, with its joy and gladness to the "pure in heart," and despair and death to them that obey not God and the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. To all such, death is their fearful retribution. O my soul! what a thought. A being created in the purpose of God to exist in the future state, where every sight shall please, and every sound shall cheer an immortal, redeemed saint, neglecting the offered conditions of life, and choosing death,—to be blotted out of existence, never, never to see or think; dead, dead, no ray of light or sound to break in upon the dark, still, oblivious state! Awake! awake! the sun is setting. A night of gloom is brooding o'er the world. Seek shelter speedily.

West Martinsburgh, N. Y.

From D. Q. Kent.

Bro. Grant:—I wish you could devise some way that we in this lonely corner of Creation might be once permitted to hear something upon the great question of the Advent. I see by the Crisis there are preachers in some parts of Iowa. I think there are many that would like to hear (and that for the first time), and some willing to help pay expense. We have no money, but we have everything else. I can give a colt, or a cow, or a yoke of young steers, or two of them; but money I could not at present. But the truth I want to hear. I cannot reconcile myself to the thought that the harvest should perish while the fields are white for the want of laborers. O! that God would send some earnest watchman that loves the return of the Master.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in Wrentham, Mass., June 4th, of heart complaint, Sister Melancy A. Belcher, wife of Abner Belcher, aged sixty years.

Sister Belcher was one of those women who are a blessing to the world while living, and whose works follow them for good after they are dead. In early life she professed faith in Christ her Savior, and she honored that profession to the day of her death. For several years she was connected with the Congregational church. Early in the history of the late Advent movement she united with those who were looking for the reign of Christ on the earth. While she was diligent in useful employment at home and abroad, with the sick and needy, she was "fervent in spirit, serving the Lord," and ever carried with her a healthy, moral and religious influence. She enjoyed her faith in the soon coming of her Redeemer to raise the dead to life and immortality, and to set up his kingdom on the earth, to fill the earth with his glory, removing from the same all things that offend, and to reign on the throne of his father David forever.

Such was the nature of her disease, that she suffered much in body and mind in the last two years of her life. Now she sleeps in Jesus, and is where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest. She has left a companion and children to feel the loss of one who was a friend indeed. May He who afflicteth not willingly, sanctify the event to them for their good, in this life and in the life to come. Her funeral was attended in the Baptist church, where a discourse was delivered from Col. 1: 23,—"The hope of the gospel." J. S. White.

In the Military Hospital, Savannah, Tenn., April 18th, Andrew Judson Babcock, aged twenty-seven years, four months and fifteen days, after a protracted illness, brought on by exposure and fatigue during the battle of Fort Donelson.

Andrew J. Babcock was the eldest son of Mrs. Euphrasia D. Spaulding, wife of A. Spaulding, Aurora, Ill., formerly of Onondaga Co., N. Y. When about five years of age, he removed with his parents to Ill., but before he completed his tenth year, death deprived him of his father. From childhood, he was always of an earnest, sober and studious disposition, seeking knowledge from every thing that engaged his attention, but always preferring religious, scientific and historical reading to the popular literature of the day. Among his classmates he was universally respected, and his uniform kindness won the good will of all around him.

At the outbreak of the present war he manifested much interest, but his general health being feeble, he did not deem it his duty to leave home until an old friend, a Lieutenant in the company, enlisted the sympathies of his youngest brother to enter the army, when he felt that if one of them must go, he would be the one; that his brother should not be exposed and surrounded by the many temptations incident to a soldier's life. Accordingly, with full realization of hardships he would have to endure, in the month of December he enlisted in the 45th Reg. Ill. Vol Co. K., and with them he served faithfully his country's call. Enduring cheerfully, without murmur or complaint, the many deprivations they were called upon to undergo, his physical system, already sinking under the unusual fatigue he was so illy prepared to meet, he fought among his comrades the battle of Fort Donelson, after which was entirely unfit for duty, and was placed among the sick in the Hospital. Still uncomplaining, in his letters to his mother he alluded to his illness as only transient indisposition, hoping to recover in a few days. He had, however, applied for a discharge, knowing he could be of no further service in the army. He said, "I have faithfully performed my duty, and all I ask is an honorable discharge, that I may return home where I can rest." But before arrangements were completed for his discharge, death released him from further anxiety. [illegible]

sages and pundits I have met with; I am two years short of eighty, and have not found a religion in which I can hope for eternity. My remaining days are few; the evening of life is set in; and oh!' he exclaimed with emotion, 'may it please God to bring me at the close of my long life to know and find a way by which I can die in peace! Do give me a book which will tell me this way, and I will read it earnestly.' I gave him a book." Ah! who can tell how many such persons may in the jungles be like him, thirsting for the waters of life, and endeavoring to feel after God, if haply they might find him.

In South America, the American agent says the Bible is here excluded by royal mandates and by papal bulls. The new governments are not only willing, but anxious, that the Scriptures should have a general circulation. "Surely it is a new thing in this land to see twenty-four mules loaded with Bibles and Testaments, making their way up the mountains and through the woods into the interior." A Bible Society formed at Buenos Ayres, supplies Brazil, Chili, Peru, and Buena Vista. In the region of Rio de la Plata, and Rio de Janeiro, and Pernambuco, the Spanish and Portuguese Scriptures are received with gratitude. Since 1809 the American Bible Society has 1400 auxiliary societies, and nearly 2000 branch societies. The Bible Society House in New York, and their income increasing by 8500*l.* a year, with their annual distribution of 779,000 volumes. These all unite to speed the bright angel flying "in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel, saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication." Rev. 14: 6–8.

For the Crisis.

What do I believe?

First, I believe there is a God, and that he is "a rewarder of them that diligently seek him"; that he is not an immaterial, intangible being, as is almost universally taught in these last days, but that he has a body and parts, like man, who was created "in the image of God," Gen. 1: 26, 27; 2: 7; 3: 8; Ex. 33: 18–23. Seeing then that God is a tangible, substantial being, he must have some permanent place of abode. Where is it? Let the wise man Solomon answer. Read 2 Chron. 6: 21, 23, 25, 27, 30, 33, 35, 39. I believe that, notwithstanding his dwelling-place is now in heaven, the day is coming when he will dwell with men on the earth made new. See Rev. 21: 3; Dan. 7: 27; Isa. 65: 17; Rev. 21: 5. I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, according to the Scriptures; that he died, rose again, and ascended to heaven bodily, and now sits at the right hand of his Father as our high priest, to make intercession for us; that he will come again "in like manner" as he ascended, that is, bodily, in the clouds of heaven, and will reign on David's throne, and of his kingdom there shall be no end; and to them that overcome in this life will be given the blessed privilege of sitting with him in his throne, even as he also overcame, and is now set down with his Father on his throne. May God help us to be overcomers!

I do most firmly believe that we are living in the "time of the end," when it may most emphatically be said that the Judge standeth at the door; and all things in the earth, comparatively speaking, moral, social, and physical, seem to give ten-fold weight to the declaration of Christ—"Behold, I come quickly." Seeing, then, that these things are so, what manner of person ought I to be "in all holy conversation and godliness."

I do most firmly believe that the message which has been preached to this world for the last twenty years is the "gospel of the kingdom," and that whoever rejects it, may as well reject God; and it were better for that person that he had never been born. The more people scoff at and ridicule the blessed doctrines of Christ, the stronger and more determined are those who are walking in the light. May God give us strength and boldness, that we may always be ready to give a reason for our hope with meekness and fear, and to instruct all who will be instructed.

I firmly believe that the signs which were to foretoken the coming of the Lord are nearly, if not quite, all in the past: the darkening of the sun and the moon in 1780, the falling of the stars in 1833, and the "distress of nations, with perplexity," if not already begun, to be fulfilled, will evidently be fulfilled very soon. And with all these things so plainly to be seen, the world goes heedlessly on, and like the swan, which is said to sing the most sweetly just before its death, is singing its song of future peace and prosperity for this world, when everything bespeaks war and the end of all things. Truly, "darkness (covers) the earth, and gross darkness the people." But thus it must be, or the Scriptures would be broken; for "as the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be: for as in the days before the flood, they were eating and drinking, marrying, and giving in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark, and knew not until the flood came and took them all away: so shall also the coming of the Son of man be."

Finally, I believe that these are "perilous times," according to the Scriptures; and that there is much need of having on the whole armor of God, that we may be able to stand against all opposition, and meet the Lord when he comes. God help me, and all his children, to live humbly, and keep his word patiently, always remembering that "with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation."

From Canada East.

Visit of Eld. J. V. Himes to Canada East, in Waterloo, Melbourne and Danville.

We have been struck with his improved health, and with it a very decided and happy state of mind. I have never seen him when he possessed more of the spirit of the Master than now. It is evident to me that his work is not yet done; and although he has gone through enough within the last twenty years of our complex history to have killed many ordinary men, or sent them to an insane hospital, yet he seems to me to have vigor and strength, spirit and life, to accomplish much more work for the expectant church, which I have no doubt the Lord and the brethren will not fail to sustain him in doing. His practical discourses are just what the church needs in this late hour of her history. His sermon on "perfect peace" has some claim to special notice. It is well known that some christians (?) are always in a broil among their neighbors; their lot is always cast in bad neighborhoods and among quarrelsome folks. One of these unfortunate christians happened to be present, when the Eld. insisted that a man should be at peace not only with his neighbors, his family, but also with his horse and his dog, and even in some respects with the Devil himself. At the close of the discourse the man rose and made some confessions much unexpected by others.

His prophetical discourses have given us a new interest upon the all-absorbing subject of the coming Lord. They appear to me and many others to be sound, and important to the church, on the time. Time ought to be to us now, of no less importance than it was to the prophets. I was much interested by the time as given by Bro. Himes. I wish all could hear. I did not think I could feel so much interest on the subject again. His argument on the 1260, 1290, and 1335 days was very clear for the ending of the latter period in 1868, but that the Lord might come before, as there might be some things to be done after and before Daniel stands in his lot. The above arguments were favorably received by many at the conference in Waterloo; but some who stood on conservative ground objected; yet they did not give any light on these periods. 1st. They objected to the light given by Bro. H.; and 2nd, they gave no light in the place of it. This was the case of an esteemed brother who made some remarks and objections at the close of the conference on the Sabbath evening. He reminded me of the case of Joseph Hume and his pious mother. She was a christian, but her infidel son gave her no rest until he had destroyed the foundation of her hope. She became sick, and on her death bed he was at a distance, and she wrote complaining for the loss of her former consolation in sickness, and to come home and give her in her dying hour something to lean upon, instead of that which he had taken away. But it is notorious that he never answered the letter, and so there was nothing forthcoming, just because there was nothing to be had. I say it is not enough for the brethren to object, and try to throw doubts over what others give with clearness and force,—but give us light—a better argument,—we are ready to hear. This was what we demanded of our opponents in 1842–3.

I am glad Bro. H. has visited Canada again. It is now ten years since he was with us in Danville, and I am sure he has appeared to us with fifty per cent improvement, and ten years hence I believe he will have improved upon that ten-fold. His visit has done us all good, and as usual there was a large turnout to hear. I would say to the brethren all abroad, let Bro. H. be sustained. He needs the sympathy and support of all. He has, no doubt, subtle foes to deal with, such as might be expected; but God is able to sustain his servants who put their trust in him, and faithfully do their duty.

Our meeting closed here with the Lord's Supper in the evening, when between forty and fifty of the brethren and sisters surrounded the long table, and no man could feel more at home in the family or more happy than J. V. Himes. J. Porter.

The World's Crisis

AND

SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, July 9, 1862.

☞ Please remember to write all NAMES of subscribers, and POST OFFICES, in a VERY PLAIN MANNER.—G.

The Church in Portland.

We spent Sabbath, June 29th, with the church in Portland, Me., and had an interesting time. They have a pleasant hall, and large congregations. Their prospect is good. They have opened a Sabbath School that bids fair for excellent success. Although this church has passed through some trying scenes, it appears to gather strength in every battle with Satan, and receive new courage for another conflict. It seems to be firmly resolved, in the strength of the Lord, to have a complete victory at last, and share in the triumphs attending the grand coronation of the King of kings. They are longing for his return, and expecting it soon.—G.

Scatter Tracts.

We think but few realize the importance of the tract enterprise. We know of no way in which so much good can be accomplished with so small means as by the distribution of tracts. One dollar will pay for thirteen hundred pages of tracts including the postage, to any part of the United States. It is hardly among the probabilities that so many pages would be scattered without producing a lasting benefit to several of the readers, and very probably result in the salvation of some. If one dollar may do so much good, are there not many who will make this little sacrifice for the benefit of their fellow men? People are now anxious to read. They express even a greedy desire for our tracts, which a few years since they would only use for kindling their fires. Let us supply them. Many have already done nobly, but let others come and share in the blessing that follows those who give cheerfully to the Lord.

That is the best use of money which does the most good. Come, brethren, and sisters, let every one have some stock in this glorious enterprise. While some cannot give more than five cents, which would pay for sixty pages, others can give five, or fifty dollars. Let us do all we can to spread the light we prize so highly. Unless we do it soon, we shall lose the opportunity.

The following from the Tract Journal, may serve to show the worth of tracts:—G.

The Torn Tract.—When a student of theology, I became acquainted with a pious and intelligent family, living in the neighborhood of the Seminary, where I learned, from the lips of Mr. —— himself, the facts now related:—

In early life Mr. —— was a sailor. He fell into those habits of profanity and dissipation too frequently belonging to that class. One day, as he walked the deck, after a violent storm, he saw a piece of paper at his feet. Picking it up, he discovered it was a piece of a religious tract. He read the few words it contained. They filled his mind with a sense of his sinfulness. He thought them exactly appropriate to his own case. He had no rest till he repented, gave his heart to God, and made, the first opportunity, a public profession of religion. He continued a christian life, became an officer in the church, and brought up his family religiously.

We see in this the . . . method which God often employs for convincing men of sin, and bringing them into holy service to himself. We see, too, how the humblest instrument may be used for this purpose. It should encourage us to pray with earnestness and faith that the word of truth, scattered in so many ways on the printed page, may ever be blessed by the same results. C. H. M.

Dark War Clouds.

All classes are now free to admit that the future of our country looks very gloomy. No "silver lining" appears upon the war clouds hanging over our nation. Men have tried to penetrate the gathering darkness, and, like the sailor at sea, have often imagined they saw a pleasant landscape, which proved to be only a fog-bank. There is but one prospect before our nation—ruin. Like Nebuchadnezzar, it still boasts in its haughty pride; but its valley of humiliation is at hand. Its days of glory will evidently soon be among the things that were. Ere long, we may expect to be ruled by the rod of earth's noted monarch. Then the system of man-worship will be complete; and demons will rule the nations through their chosen man and his subordinates.

Thank the Lord, to the view of the saints, the clouds are now lined not with "silver" alone, but tinged with the golden glory of the coming kingdom of peace. Let us keep ready to welcome the Great King, who is to raise the dead, and immortalize those who love his appearing.

The following from the Boston Evening Journal shows the state of feeling among thinking men who are thoroughly posted in passing events:—G.

"The Crisis.—With no information beyond what we lay before the public, we have no hesitation in saying that we have now reached the critical moment of the war. Darkness overhangs the tremendous struggle that has been for the last two days going on before Richmond, and no one can tell us in what accents the terrible silence will be broken. Perhaps our loyal brethren have been fighting for the possession of Richmond, and perhaps for their own lives. All we know is, they have been contending against a greatly superior force, coming on in successive waves of attack, while our men have had to keep up a continuous exhausting fight, nearly encompassed by the enemy.

If they win the battle under these circumstances, it will be the most glorious and beneficent victory ever known. If they fail——but we will not calculate on that event. While there is room for hope—as there clearly is—we shall cherish it. It is enough to know that our brothers in the field are doing their duty, and the question for us is, are we doing ours? Every energy we possess that can be lent to the cause should be given instantly. All complaints, fault-finding, croaking, should be dropped, as if they were coals of fire on our own heads. Providence is throwing us into the scales of trial—let us see that we prove not wanting.

Whether our army is victorious or not, it will need immense succor from the loyal community. Its thousands of dead and wounded, and exhausted, will call for immediate attention. Reinforcements, physicians, medical stores, supplies, conveniences in whatever the North has that is demanded by the exigency, must be hurried on without stint or hesitation. We beseech every man to consider instantly whether he cannot do something for his country in this hour of her need. Let there be no panic, no misgiving of the future—for this mighty nation is not vulnerable to human hands—but only the quick, calm exercise of that patriotic prudence, skill and energy, that have made us what we are as a people. If we do our duty, it will be the best pledge that everything will go on well, and that the unsetting sun of victory will cheer the land."

The State of Italy.

There is strong probability that Rome is near its end as the capitol of the Pope's dominions. There appears to be no chance for him to regain his lost power. The Italians are most firmly resolved that Rome shall be their capitol without a Pope to dictate their laws. They are determined that Italy shall be "United and Free." But when we arrive at this point in the history of this harlot power, we may know from this very state of things, if there were no other signs, that the Lord is soon coming to set up his kingdom, and give it to the saints. Thank the Lord, our home is rapidly approaching. Our days of toil and doubt are nearly over. Soon the glad hour of redemption will burst upon our enraptured vision. We are glad we ever saw this glorious truth, and took it to our embrace.

Touching the state of Italy, a correspondent of the N. Y. Independent writes:—G.

"I see you are not well posted up of Italy. I have within a week read sixty or more of letters, etc., from different parts of Italy. Her patriots are almost maddened by the infernal policy of the French emperor. The state of southern Italy is fearful. Organized atrocities at Rome, which, by aid and comfort of the Emperor, is made garrison, mint, recruiting ground for the ex-King of Naples. Language is inadequate to describe the horrible atrocities perpetrated by the bands of brigands so organized and sustained. Eighteen months since I wrote an article here: "America, United and Free—Italy, United and Free." You, as we hope and trust, have passed through, or nearly through the ordeal; but the imperial, regal and papal Floyds, Davises, and Masons are working their will on Italy conspirator fashion, and according to their decree."

Speak the Truth.

How little regard is paid to the particular instruction in the Bible relative to the use of the tongue. How few seem to believe that "all liars shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone." Because deception and exaggeration are so common, many appear to excuse themselves on the ground that others do the same. This has become a great sin in these last days, and is still increasing like all other sinful practices. If there was any necessity for speaking lies, then, of course, the sin would cease; but men can tell the truth if they choose.

David asks the important question, "Lord, who shall abide in thy tabernacle?" In the answer it is said,—"He that . . . speaketh the truth in his heart." The Lord wishes all his people to tell the truth, and has decided that no liar shall have any place in his kingdom.

The following, from the Home Monthly, affords a specimen of the way by which parents teach their children to lie by their own careless example:—G.

'I will skin you alive if you do that again,' exclaimed a mother to a naughty child. It was a sort of hyperbolical expression that has crept into frequent use, with a multitude of other expressions of similar character. She did not mean that she should proceed to flay the little one as butchers would a calf or lamb. The execution of her threat would fill her own soul with excessive horror. She would not have strength to make much progress in the very barbarous work of skinning her child alive. It would not be motherly.

'I will whip you within an inch of your life,' said a father to his erring son. This would be a terrible whipping indeed. Coming so near to death's door with the rod would be revolting. He did not mean this. He only meant that he would administer a very severe chastisement. No one would be more careful than he not to jeopardize the life of his son. His expression was only a form of exaggeration which society seems to tolerate.

How many precisely such speeches are made in every circle. 'It was done as quick as lightning.' 'He is as slow as a snail.' 'It is as hot as an oven.' 'It is as cold as Greenland.' There is no end to such expressions. And they indicate that the habit of exaggeration is very strong in the human family. Human nature seems inclined 'to stretch the truth.' That is the reason that such strange stories are told, often becoming magnified to such an extent after having passed through several hands. 'A story loses nothing by traveling' is an old saying. It usually grows like a ball of snow which school-fellows roll. Every tongue that repeats it gives it an additional turning over, by which it accumulates. Yet none mean to exaggerate.

It is a fault, however, is it not? May it not be a sin? It is certainly deceptive to tell a child that you will skin him alive when you have no idea of perpetrating the infernal deed. Should we not talk as we mean? Let your yea be yea, and your nay, nay. At least, this should be done to children."

The Billiard Tournament.

On the night of last April 3d a noted Billiard Tournament came off at Irving Hall, New York, between two champion billiard players, for $500, a side. The game lasted from eight o'clock in the evening till four o'clock in the morning. The reporter says:—

"The attendance was somewhat of the composite order, consisting of divines, lawyers, merchants, clerks, professional billiard players, horse jockeys, gamblers, and sporting men generally. The affair was rather select, as far as appearances went, and at no time during the evening was there the slightest confusion or disturbance. Among the celebrities present were the following persons:—Henry Ward Beecher, Simeon Draper, Isaac A. Bell, Hiram Woodruff, Judge McCunn, Capt. Rynders, Theodore E. Tomlinson, Niel Bryant, James Lingard, Thomas Stone, of this city; Ralph Benjamin and Chris. Bird, of Philadelphia; Philip Tieman, of Cincinnati: L. Fox, of Rochester, and J. B. Riley, of Detroit."

Truly these are strange times, when popular ministers can stay in a billiard gambling hall till four o'clock in the morning, and the professed church of Christ pass it by unnoticed.—G.

Close of the War.

At the commencement of the present terrible civil war in America, it was quite commonly believed that the rebellion would be crushed out in sixty or ninety days. Nearly five times ninety days are passed, but still the war continues. But during the last two months, many have said it will be closed up in sixty or ninety days, and then prosperity will return to our land. The following from the Boston Herald, June 27th, shows that some begin to look at things in a different light. The writer says:—G.

"The theory that the present deplorable civil war would come to an end in sixty days or ninety days, is abandoned, and another year is now allowed for its duration by those who manage our financial affairs. Some who were formerly of the opinion that it would be a short war, would now be glad to be promised a peace in five years. The chief argument against the probability of a long war is, that it would be ruinous to the country. But neither party will propose peace on this account. The South, according to Mr. Howell Cobb, would prefer 'annihilation' to restoration of the Union."

Effects of War.—Notwithstanding the awful effects of war in desolating homes, ruining the financial interests of the country, as well as its morals, we find the mass of professing christians and popular ministers are urging people to engage in the bloody conflict that is sweeping thousands to a premature grave and finally to eternal destruction. We do not wonder that the world has lost its confidence in such christianity.

It is said the bereavements caused by the war in the single city of New Orleans has produced not less than twenty-four hundred orphan children.—G.

Southern Feeling.

The following language from the Southern Christian Advocate does not sound much like the teachings of Jesus:—G.

"For one, we would be willing to see both our large armies going into the fight, when the impending conflict comes, with only the black banner floating over them. Let the cries "no retreat," no "surrender," "no quarter asked or given" "only victory or death," carry terror to the hearts of the cruel and wicked aggressors who seek our destruction."

Tracts.—We have just received an interesting tract entitled, "Bible Doctrine of the Old and New Covenant." By A. N. Sibley. Price 8 cents single, postage 1 cent. We are pleased with this tract.—G.

Tremont Tent Meeting.—We have only time this week to say it was excellent. We purpose to say more about it next week.—G.

A new German Tract.

Das Zukunftige shicksal der Gottlosen. (The future fate of the ungodly.)

Another German tract, from the pen of our brother in the Lord, Louis Reimer. As I have not "the gift of tongues," I cannot testify of its merits without some one "interpret" for me; but in my opinion, if you will give your German neighbor a copy of it, he will get important information from it. Send for a few copies and try it. Price 5 cts. single, $3 per one hundred. Address L. Reimer, 722 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia. H. L. H.

Correction.

Bro. Grant:—In the report of the Ill. Conf., I notice an error, perhaps my own, in the first column, near the bottom. Instead of reading, "Bro. Royce was recommended," etc., it should read Bro. G. Moyer was appointed Evangelist, and recommended to the churches, etc.

Faithful Wounds.

"Faithful are the wounds of a friend."—Prov. 27: 6.

I will take the lowest place, and simply speak as a man the thoughts that wear upon my mind by day and night. Why should I wound the Adventists, when in so doing I shall wound myself? I love the truths to which the Crisis is devoted. I am thankful to those who have gratuitously sent it to me for nearly two years. But I also believe that you, like the Laodicean church, proudly assume a character and position which is false, exposing you to the same awful rebuke. You have received truths in advance of the Protestant church, but all in vain, so long as you hold them in unrighteousness, and deny the power of godliness. "We see not our signs (or tokens of distinction): there is no more any prophet: neither is there among us any that knoweth how long."—Ps. 74: 9. Then, "Woe unto you that desire the day of the Lord! to what end is it for you? The day of the Lord is (or shall be) darkness and not light."—Amos 5: 18. You may have escaped from a lion—some absurd protestant traditions; but if you retain others, the bear will meet you (v. 19), and you may as well perish by a lion as by a bear.

This will not harm the humble, who can give up their own way, believe and wait for the Holy Spirit. For God will remember his covenant with Abraham, and in due time turn away from his fierce anger, for the sake of Him who will soon be the desire of all nations. Isa. M. Bruce.

Enquiry.

Bro. Grant:—Cannot we of N. H. and Maine have a campmeeting nearer than Wilbraham, giving us a privilege to enjoy that which we have so long desired? We have anxiously waited a decision in its favor. It is but a little of the precious truth we hear preached up here amongst the "Granite Hills," yet we know how to appreciate that little, and could we have a "Feast of Tabernacles" nearer, it would be a great saving; but if not, the Lord willing, we intend to make the sacrifice and effort to go to Wilbraham. It seems that we cannot be longer denied. Shall we have an answer soon? D.

"Thessalonica; or, the Model Church." A stirring little volume, in which the example of the church at Thessalonica, as it appears in the Epistles bearing the name, is set forth and applied to the churches of our day, with no little forceful and healthy criticism. . . . As a whole, evangelical and Scriptural in tone. The extract from the 'Thessalonica Daily News,' is a pungent and not unneeded sarcasm.—American Presbyterian.

Correspondence.

From N. J. Pribble.

Brn. and Srs.:—My course is onward and upward, believing we are near the port. I feel like facing the storm, believing it will not be long. We must have pure hearts and clean hands, for "the pure in heart" shall "see God." When our hearts are pure, we can present our "bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is (our) reasonable service." Paul says, "Be not conformed to this world; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God." We must be very humble, bringing every thought to the obedience of Christ. The nations are angry. God's wrath will soon come, and the time that the dead will be judged. Are we ready? Will it be said to us, "Well done?" Do we still love the prayer meeting? Do we love to visit our closet? If we saw the Lord coming to-day, could we say, "This is our God?" When he comes, it will be to receive a spotless church, without wrinkle. "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." We are coming down to the time of trouble. But God will bring us off conquerors through the "blood of the Lamb, and the word of (our) testimony." If we love God, all things shall work for our good; for "they that trust in the Lord shall be as Mount Zion, which cannot be removed."

Danbury, N. H.

From Eld. S. S. Brewer.

Bro. Grant:—Through the mercy of God we are having some very good, hard times out here among the highways and hedges; in many places, for the sparseness of the population, I may say large congregations and certainly very attentive listeners. All the good accomplished by our feeble efforts, assisted by Him who has promised to be with us even unto the end of the world, will be manifest when He shall appear. These are solemn times to me. Universal humanity is forming a character for the judgment with astonishing rapidity. O! how rapid the mental element fluctuates. Convictions are very transitory. The three great classes set forth in the parable of our Lord, namely, the way-side, stony and thorny-ground hearers, are very numerous, and good-ground hearers very few indeed. Satan, with his cohorts of devotees drugged to a state of consummate insensibility by his sugar-coated pills, through the instrumentality of men possessing high-sounding religious titles, defies the truth and glories in unrighteousness.

Yet on, on, the sublime yet awful day hasteth, with its joy and gladness to the "pure in heart," and despair and death to them that obey not God and the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. To all such, death is their fearful retribution. O my soul! what a thought. A being created in the purpose of God to exist in the future state, where every sight shall please, and every sound shall cheer an immortal, redeemed saint, neglecting the offered conditions of life, and choosing death,—to be blotted out of existence, never, never to see or think; dead, dead, no ray of light or sound to break in upon the dark, still, oblivious state! Awake! awake! the sun is setting. A night of gloom is brooding o'er the world. Seek shelter speedily.

West Martinsburgh, N. Y.

From D. Q. Kent.

Bro. Grant:—I wish you could devise some way that we in this lonely corner of Creation might be once permitted to hear something upon the great question of the Advent. I see by the Crisis there are preachers in some parts of Iowa. I think there are many that would like to hear (and that for the first time), and some willing to help pay expense. We have no money, but we have everything else. I can give a colt, or a cow, or a yoke of young steers, or two of them; but money I could not at present. But the truth I want to hear. I cannot reconcile myself to the thought that the harvest should perish while the fields are white for the want of laborers. O! that God would send some earnest watchman that loves the return of the Master.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in Wrentham, Mass., June 4th, of heart complaint, Sister Melancy A. Belcher, wife of Abner Belcher, aged sixty years.

Sister Belcher was one of those women who are a blessing to the world while living, and whose works follow them for good after they are dead. In early life she professed faith in Christ her Savior, and she honored that profession to the day of her death. For several years she was connected with the Congregational church. Early in the history of the late Advent movement she united with those who were looking for the reign of Christ on the earth. While she was diligent in useful employment at home and abroad, with the sick and needy, she was "fervent in spirit, serving the Lord," and ever carried with her a healthy, moral and religious influence. She enjoyed her faith in the soon coming of her Redeemer to raise the dead to life and immortality, and to set up his kingdom on the earth, to fill the earth with his glory, removing from the same all things that offend, and to reign on the throne of his father David forever.

Such was the nature of her disease, that she suffered much in body and mind in the last two years of her life. Now she sleeps in Jesus, and is where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest. She has left a companion and children to feel the loss of one who was a friend indeed. May He who afflicteth not willingly, sanctify the event to them for their good, in this life and in the life to come. Her funeral was attended in the Baptist church, where a discourse was delivered from Col. 1: 23,—"The hope of the gospel." J. S. White.

In the Military Hospital, Savannah, Tenn., April 18th, Andrew Judson Babcock, aged twenty-seven years, four months and fifteen days, after a protracted illness, brought on by exposure and fatigue during the battle of Fort Donelson.

Andrew J. Babcock was the eldest son of Mrs. Euphrasia D. Spaulding, wife of A. Spaulding, Aurora, Ill., formerly of Onondaga Co., N. Y. When about five years of age, he removed with his parents to Ill., but before he completed his tenth year, death deprived him of his father. From childhood, he was always of an earnest, sober and studious disposition, seeking knowledge from every thing that engaged his attention, but always preferring religious, scientific and historical reading to the popular literature of the day. Among his classmates he was universally respected, and his uniform kindness won the good will of all around him.

At the outbreak of the present war he manifested much interest, but his general health being feeble, he did not deem it his duty to leave home until an old friend, a Lieutenant in the company, enlisted the sympathies of his youngest brother to enter the army, when he felt that if one of them must go, he would be the one; that his brother should not be exposed and surrounded by the many temptations incident to a soldier's life. Accordingly, with full realization of hardships he would have to endure, in the month of December he enlisted in the 45th Reg. Ill. Vol. Co. K., and with them he served faithfully his country's call. Enduring cheerfully, without murmur or complaint, the many deprivations they were called upon to undergo, his physical system, already sinking under the unusual fatigue he was so illy prepared to meet, he fought among his comrades the battle of Fort Donelson, after which was entirely unfit for duty, and was placed among the sick in the Hospital. Still uncomplaining, in his letters to his mother he alluded to his illness as only transient indisposition, hoping to recover in a few days. He had, however, applied for a discharge, knowing he could be of no further service in the army. He said, "I have faithfully performed my duty, and all I ask is an honorable discharge, that I may return home where I can rest." But before arrangements were completed for his discharge, death released him from further anxiety. [illegible] gran, with none but his step-father with him, who had gone to bring him home. He died tranquil and composed, trusting in his Redeemer, leaving behind him a large circle of relatives and friends, who deeply lament his untimely end. E. D. B.

Died, at Enfield, Conn., April 27th, Rosanna Griswold, aged seventy-two years.

Sister Griswold was formerly a member of the M. E. church until the joyful news of the coming kingdom reached her ears. After hearing Bro. Chapman seventeen evenings in succession, she decided to identify herself with this truth and that people everywhere spoken against. With true christian courage she defended the faith of the coming and kingdom of Jesus and life eternal only through him. Her place at meeting was almost always filled, till the infirmities of old age prevented her; but even then her influence was not lost in her home circle; those who knew her best testify that she was a "living christian"—"her work all done and well done."

She had told her friends she should leave them when they did not know it. Though not confined to her bed, yet her feebleness was such that the solicitude of her kind children led them to her bedside in the night. The night before her death she retired, expressing an expectation of a good night's rest. Her daughter found her at four in the morning sleeping very sweetly. When the family arose she still slept on, but "the silver cord was loosed" without the change of a muscle, or any indication that she had waked. As we gazed upon her placid features at the funeral, we thought the church had lost one more to pray with and for them—one less to pray for the agency of the Spirit to affect the hearts of unconverted friends and the world. We thought also of the glad surprise—the joyful waking,—instead of being helped to rise by the same hand of affection that smoothed her pillow on retiring, she suddenly springs to life, startled from her long and dreamless sleep by the trumpet's long, loud blast, accompanied by the shouting of attending angels mingling with the triumphant hallelujah of the living though now changed saints. Her astonished eyes are greeted by an escort of dazzling angels, and then the change.

O! glorious change! instead of an infirm old body, now she is clothed in immortal youth and beauty, "like Christ's glorious body," escorted up the bright pathway of the parting heavens to that city of jasper and gold, that sea of dazzling glory, to grasp the thought of which the sun and moon can give only an approximate idea. To awake from that night's repose to such transcendent glory—to gaze on Him whom her faith had often seen, though invisible—the "King in his beauty"—to behold that Jesus who had died to win and save her—to awake to see that Redeemer, to hear his musical voice "like the sound of many waters" saying, "Come, my beloved!" "Come, ye blessed of my Father." To see that "great mysterious Deity," the Ancient of Days—to see that God she had tried to comprehend, and though not seeing she had loved. And yet the waking up amid these untold glories will only be to her as the tick of a watch. No measured lapse of time from her retiring till this glorious waking. Brn. and Srs., if we indeed live on the confines of such glorious scenes, "what manner of persons ought we to be"?

Palmer, Mass. S. G. H.

Died, in Wolcott, Ct., June 17th, of diphtheria, Georgiana, daughter of Bro. George Wiard, aged fifteen years.

She was at work in Meriden when taken sick. She expressed a desire to go home, which was granted. Little did she think she was going home to die, as she was not aware of the danger of her case until a few moments before she expired. After an illness of four days she fell under the hand of the destroyer. May this sudden blow be a warning to the careless, and work out good for the bereaved family, and friends and neighbors who thronged the dwelling of Bro. Wiard, to pay the last tribute of respect to the sleeper in death, and to sympathize with the afflicted. We trust this opportunity was not lost in which to sound the alarm of a coming judgment. We presented a discourse from Heb. 9 : 27, 28. Wm. A. Fenn.

FOREIGN NEWS.

By the arrival of the steamship Scotia, we have foreign news from Liverpool to the 21st ult., Queenstown the 22d.

The Paris Constitutionel regards mediation as a mere question of time. Public opinion is in favor of it, and it gains ground in France and England. It is for the government to seize a favorable opportunity.

In the House of Commons Mr. Lindsay is postponing till July 11th his motion relative to British relations with America, expressed hopes that the government would in the mean time see the necessity for recognizing the South, and of taking the matter out of the hands of private members, as it was perfectly clear that the Confederates were now able to assert their independence.

There is great activity in France for sending reinforcements to Mexico. The number now stated to be sent is 12,000.

Garibaldi was again at Turin. Negotiations are reported to be taking place. The party of action called upon him to declare that he was with them or the government. In consequence he resigned his Presidency of their society.

It is reported that Napoleon has resolved to send sufficient troops to Mexico to force a way to the Capital against all obstacles.

The news from America per Persia created great excitement.

Great Fire in St. Petersburg.—Our foreign files bring us startling news from Russia—including further accounts of the revolutionary schemes in that great empire, and of the incendiary attempts to destroy the capital by fire. Some thirty fires had occurred in the city during two weeks. The city has been placed under martial law, trade and commerce are at a stand-still, and even goods ordered from England to St. Petersburg have been countermanded. An imperial decree has been published declaring that rapine, murder, incendiarism and destruction of crops is to be punishable with death.

This fire has consumed one of the most remarkable features of St. Petersburg—the Louse Market. The old bazaar was destroyed, together with rows and rows of stores, and the great government building. The conflagration continued three days and at the latest dates was not entirely subdued. The loss is estimated at $1,125,000.—New York Post.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

New York, July 2. It is understood that General McClellan's right was attacked with great impetuosity by Stonewall Jackson, whose men successfully charged our artillery, sustaining a loss not less than 5000 men. Our loss was very severe.

It is reported that Jackson was killed, and that one of our Brigadier Generals was taken prisoner together with an entire regiment. Gen. Fitz John Porter was sorely pressed, and crossed the Chickahominy to the western side, the enemy taking the last on his left.

General McClellan with much severe fighting had penetrated and passed through White Oak swamp with 40,000 men and one hundred pieces of artillery, to secure an advantageous position, and subsequently cut through a line of communication with James river.

It is reported that during the two days fighting Gen. McClellan's loss was 10,000.

The most important feature covered by the reports is that Gen. McClellan has succeeded in penetrating White Oak swamp and placing a very large force on the other side of it.

Philadelphia, July 2. A letter from Fortress Monroe states that forage trains sent from White House to Dispatch Station on Saturday, met the rebel pickets and backed down to White House, where the cars were burned, engines blown up, and ambulances and baggage wagons rolled into the river, there being no time to destroy them.

The rebels were not in sight of White House Point on Sunday Morning, when the steamer left. The buildings at White House burned all night, and were completely destroyed.

Gen. McClellan and his staff all agree that the present position of our army is far more advantageous as a base of operations against Richmond than that hitherto occupied.

Our gunboats can now be brought to bear and materially aid in carrying on the work.

The Richmond Dispatch of Monday announced the death of Gen. Stonewall Jackson, and of Gen. Barnwell Rhett, of South Carolina.

New York, July 3. The Times has detailed reports of the battles of Thursday, Friday and Saturday, from which it appears that the right wing of our army, about 20,000 men, was attacked on Friday by a rebel force of not less than 50,000, and after a gallant fight our troops crossed the Chickahominy in order.

On Saturday night and Sunday our whole left wing, under Generals Heintzelman, Keyes and Sumner, fell back along the line of the railroad and Williamsburg road, and marched to James river. The rebels crossed the Chickahominy in great force on Sunday, reaching the railroad; but they made no pursuit, remaining, however, in possession of the ground previously occupied by our troops on both sides of the Chickahominy, including the bridges and earthworks we had erected against their approach. All our stores, &c., were withdrawn in good order, without much loss. Of course there was tremendous fighting during these movements, and heavy loss on both sides.

Our left flank now rests immediately on the bank of James river, while our right is upon the impregnable point won by Heintzelman's force on Wednesday last.

The forces lately required to guard West Point and the White House, and intermediate depots, as well as the thirty-five miles of railroad from West Point to our front, and now no longer necessary in their late positions, thus practically adding much to the acting fighting strength of our army, whose supplies of every description can be landed direct from the transports almost immediately in their camps, under the protection of the navy's gunboats.

We need hardly add that the new position of our army is upon high ground, on which it can operate to far greater advantage than of late, in the swamps of the Chickahominy.

Washington, July 3. Gen. McClellan's dispatch received to-day makes the sympathizers with secession and the croakers rather unhappy.

Officers of the army think that the rebellion has failed in its death struggle, and that the Union force will henceforth be kept strong enough to insure success.

This point (Turkey Bend) on the James river, which is to be the new basis of supplies of Gen. McClellan, is about twenty-five miles from Richmond by the course of the river, and about fifteen in a direct line. It is five or six miles above City Point, where the Appomattox comes in and the railroad from Petersburg terminates.

Washington, July 4. The Richmond Examiner of July 2d, gives the following relating to the battle of Monday:

It says that on Sunday morning Generals Hill and Longstreet with their divisions crossed the Chickahominy, and late Monday afternoon attacked the enemy about five miles northeast of Daileytown on the New Market road.

The conflict was terrible, and at half past eight P. M. the enemy had been driven back a mile and a half. At half past nine, being heavily reinforced, the enemy made another stand.

The loss on our (rebel) side was terrible. The situation being evidently hopeless against such overwhelming forces, Gen. Hill slowly retired.

At this moment, seeing their adversary retire, the most vociferous cheers arose along the whole Yankee line. The fight ended there for the night.

The Examiner says that it thinks the division which went into the fight on Friday—14,000 strong—could only number 6000 men for duty on Tuesday, and that the loss of life exceeds that of any battle or series of battles yet fought.

About 8 o'clock A. M. of Tuesday, Jackson and Huger's divisions attacked McClellan's left flank on the west side of the Chickahominy, seventeen miles from Richmond.

Later in the day Magruder fell upon his right flank. Fighting was going on up to nine o'clock Tuesday night.

Cairo, July 5. The ram Monarch brings news from Vicksburg to the 28th ult. On Thursday Com. Porter's fleet commenced to shell the upper battery, below the town. The shelling was renewed on Friday, and in the afternoon a fire was directed on the town, over which the shells were seen plainly to burst. This continued until 4 o'clock, when the firing ceased. During the bombardment the rebel batteries played feebly. Their firing was inaccurate. Half an hour after the cessation of the bombardment the rebel water battery opened on our mortar fleet, which replied until the battery ceased firing.

At 8 o'clock in the evening, a fire was opened from the entire fleet on the town, and it was continued for an hour. The next morning at 4 o'clock, the bombardment was renewed, during which eight of Com. Farragut's vessels passed the batteries without serious damage. The city must have been damaged greatly, as conflagrations were seen in numerous places in different parts of the city.

Corinth, July 3. The guerrillas tore up the track east of Grand Junction a day or two since, and captured seventy or eighty prisoners.

New York, July 3. The Evening Post says we have the best authority for saying that General Pope's army, some days ago, received rations of that kind which betokened a hasty and forced march. Gen. Pope, we may believe, therefore, is on his way toward Richmond. More troops will be ordered from the West. Some are already on the way, if they have not arrived at points whence they can be quickly dispatched to the peninsula.

The Washington correspondent of the N. Y. Express thus sums up the formidable preparations of the rebels for the defense of their capital:

When the army first advanced from Yorktown it was expected that the gunboats would be able to ascend James river, and command Richmond from that point; but the army of the enemy both of necessity and wisdom withdrew. It fortified Richmond at every point. It planted the heaviest cannon and built the most solid fortifications on the James river, casing them with heavy iron and protecting them by earthworks. It sunk thirty vessels, some of them laden with stone and brick, in three parallel lines across the James river, and filled up the space between with stone and sand. The rebel army has occupied all the highlands and chosen positions of health, strength and convenience, around their own capital. They have sent for Beauregard, Price and Jackson, to co-operate with Jeff. Davis, Johnston, Lee, Huger and Magruder. Many of our old naval officers, and some of the best of the number, are directing and handling the guns on the rebel fortifications.

Corinth, July 6. Col. Sheridan's Michigan Cavalry, with two regiments of 728 men, was attacked at Booneville, Miss., by parts of eight rebel regiments numbering 4700, which he defeated and drove back after seven hours hard fighting. Our loss was 41 killed and wounded and missing. The rebel loss was very great.

Washington, July 6. An officer of high rank who arrived here yesterday from the Peninsula, reports that Gen. McClellan's army is in splendid condition, and much larger than the current reports make it, in view of the late losses. He states also that the army is in a perfectly secure position either for offensive or defensive purposes, and able to work without the aid of gunboats.

Fortress Monroe, July 5. There was a skirmish yesterday morning near our left wing, resulting in the defeat of the rebels. We took 1000 prisoners and three small batteries. Our cavalry then followed the rebels until they passed beyond White Oak Swamp.

For the last two days the rebels have shown little disposition to fight, and yesterday they relinquished their ground and batteries almost without resistance.

New York, July 7. The Tribune's correspondent says that Gen. Hooker's division is reduced to less than 5000 effective men.

The result of Tuesday's fight was distinctly in favor of the Union army. Gen. McClellan came on board the mail boat at Harrison's Landing, Wednesday, and hurriedly passed into the cabin with Gen. Patterson, who came up on the boat. In reply to Gen. Patterson Gen. McClellan said: "We have fought a battle every day for the last week and whipped the rebels every time, though they had three to our one."

An officer of high rank gives the most encouraging account of affairs which has yet been received. He states that our army is much larger than is reported in view of the late losses, and that it is in a perfectly secure position, either for offensive or defensive movements, and this without the aid of the gunboats even.

A distinguished officer of the army of the Potomac, who was in Washington after the seven day's battle, estimates that the rebel loss was at least 75,000, or in other words, quite half their whole army in and about Richmond.

Rebel prisoners put their loss at 30,000, while our loss does not exceed 10,000. The rebels had over 200,000 troops engaged.

☞ The latest accounts from Knoxville, Tenn., represent that the persecution of the Union men continued. The property of all loyal Tennesseeans in the Union army was being sold at auction, including furniture, agricultural implements, &c., no attention being paid to the necessities of their families. A distinguished citizen of Tennessee, who had been arrested and cast into a Southern jail, had died there from the effects of unwholesome food. Union soldiers who are prisoners at the South are dying rapidly in consequence of eating tainted meat and rotten food.

A Second Moses.—A Harrisburg paper states that during the terrible freshet of week before last a cradle was seen coming down the rushing waters near Manadaville, and being suspected of containing something, it was watched by several persons for three or four miles, expecting it would at some part of its journey come so near the shore that it would be safe in venturing after in a boat. At last, at a bend in the swollen stream, the cradle came sufficiently near to be secured, when lo and behold, upon lifting up a light covering, a beautiful babe looked up and smiled!

Locusts in Kansas.—The seven year locusts have made their appearance in hordes in some parts of Kansas. The grass is full of holes from which they have emerged, and their crystal coats are lying around everywhere. The air is vocal with their music, and the bushes are covered with them. In company with the locusts are countless thousands of grasshoppers, and the ravages of the combined armies begins to excite a fear that vegetation along their line of march will be totally destroyed.

Parson Brownlow's Views.—In a recent lecture at Washington, Parson Brownlow is represented as saying:—

"This country is now pursuing a course with this infernal, wicked rebellion, which I do not approve of; unless we pursue a different and a more vigorous one, we shall never end this rebellion in God's world!"

☞ A black insect, very prolific, is badly injuring the trees and shrubs at Hartford. It is hatched out of eggs laid on the under side of leaves, in quantities absolutely enormous, and curls up the foliage and even the stems and small branches, so as almost to ruin the trees.

☞ The drought is becoming very serious in Northern Vermont. Lamoille, Chittenden and Orleans counties have not been visited with a copious rain since last fall. For the past four or five weeks no rain has fallen and the grass is drying up in the pastures.

☞ The rebel cavalry are again burning cotton near Memphis, and arresting parties engaged in buying it up, who are sent South.

Notices, &c.

Ghostology.

The articles which have appeared under this caption, in successive numbers of the Crisis, have been revised by the author, W. Sheldon, and are now ready for delivery in the shape of a neat pamphlet of forty-eight pages. Price in glazed covers 10 cts. Single, $6 per hundred. Without covers 8 cts. $5 per hundred, post paid. Orders with cash may be addressed to Miles Grant, or H. L. Hastings, Boston, Mass, or to W. Sheldon, Merrimac, Sauk Co., Wis.

Campmeeting.

The great interest manifested at our tent meeting in New Preston, Ct., has induced us, with the advice of the brethren in that section, to appoint a campmeeting, to commence Tuesday, Sept. 2d, at 10 A. M. Some eight tents have already been counted up for the occasion, and we hope the number will be much larger. Brethren that want to work for the Lord will find here a new and interesting field.

We desire all who can, to bring provisions and tents for themselves and others. Plain food, and "all things common" is the Bible rule; let us practice it cheerfully. A daily stage from New Milford (Housatonic R. R.) at 12 will bring in all who wish. Distance eight miles. H. Pratt.

Grove Meeting.

The grove meeting in Sauk Co., Wis., July 18th, will be in Sumpter, (formerly Kingston) near the centre of the town. Sumpter joins Baraboo on the South. Brethren coming from a distance will call on Bro. Knapp. G. W. Barnes.

Meeting of the Advent Christian Association.

To the brethren in Christ, and churches of the Lord who "serve the living God," and "wait for his Son from heaven," Greeting:—The Board of Managers, after due consultation, have decided to appoint the third annual meeting of the Advent Christian Association, at Wilbraham, Mass., to commence Tuesday, 4 o'clock, P. M., August 26th, 1862.

Two reasons have led them to decide upon this time in preference to October, as heretofore. First—A larger attendance can be secured; Second—Much expense can be saved. These are weighty considerations. The business to be transacted at the annual meeting of this Association is very important. The interests of every church, and every individual, "looking for the blessed hope," are involved in its proceedings. This Society controls the World's Crisis. It appoints its Editors and Managers. It decides what its character shall be, and marks out its policy, whether it shall give expression to every idea, however fanciful or absurd, which may demand its columns; or whether it shall select such only as are "meat in due season." It becomes necessary, therefore, that every church be represented, that our family paper be sustained in such a manner as to "feed the flock," that we may know whether its Editorship, eminently successful thus far, shall be changed or not.

A full representation, so desirable, can be best secured during campmeeting week. Distant churches in the South, West and East, are usually represented then, while they cannot afford six weeks afterwards to send other representatives so far to attend the Association alone. Having, for these reasons, fixed upon this time for our third annual meeting, it is hoped that we may have a large and profitable one. Lest we be disappointed, let earnest prayer be made to God daily, that whatever shall be done at that time may be done, not in the name of man, self, or party, but "in the name of the Lord Jesus."

Daniel T. Taylor, Chairman.
H. F. Carpenter, Clerk.

June 7th, 1862.

Note. The Board of the Advent Christian Association are requested to meet at Wilbraham on Tuesday, August 26th, at 8 o'clock, A. M. A prompt and punctual attendance desirable.

D. T. Taylor, President.
H. F. Carpenter, Clerk.

Note. Letters are solicited from churches and ministers who cannot possibly be otherwise represented. They may be directed to H. F. Carpenter, Collins Depot, Mass.

All pastors and evangelists, and delegates from churches co-operating with this Society, are members. Each church is allowed one delegate, and one additional delegate, for every fifty members above the number of twenty-five members. None can vote by letter.

Notice.

The Lord willing, there will be a campmeeting at Corinna, Me., (on Mr. Weston Nutter's place) commencing the first Monday in September, and continuing over the following Sabbath. We extend a cordial invitation to all the brethren in this section, and abroad, to come and worship the Lord with us. There will, we hope, be a full delegation of preaching brethren with us from abroad to dispense the word of life. Particulars hereafter.

B. C. Moore, Albert Door, Geo. H. Fisher, } Committee of Arrangements.

Campmeeting at Wilbraham.

It is thought best that our great annual gathering at Wilbraham commence this year Monday, Aug. 25th, and continue one week. Particulars hereafter.

F. H. Berick, Miles Grant, Geo. T. Adams, } Committee of Arrangements.

Information.

To the churches in the vicinity of Plainville, Ct., I would say, having moved to Plainville, I desire to devote my time to the cause of Christ in Plainville and the adjoining towns, as the Lord may seem to direct. I have a standing appointment in Plainville once in four weeks. My next appointment here is July 13th. I hope to hear from the churches in this vicinity soon.

The preaching brethren who wish to visit Plainville to preach, will please confer with Bro. George Morgan, who is corresponding Secretary of the Church. My P. O. address is Plainville, Ct. Wm. A. Fenn.

Special Book Notice.

Grove Meeting Appointments.

7. A grove meeting will be held in Eoclaire, Enclaire Co., Wis., beginning on the 11th of July, as Eld. W. B. Putnam may arrange.

8. A grove meeting will be held in Sauk Co., Wis., where Eld. G. W. Barnes may appoint, to begin July 18th.

The above meetings will begin at 10 1-2 A. M. About a score of meetings are wanted that I have not time to hold, therefore let none feel slighted. Let us have a general rally at these meetings. Several preachers will attend the most of them. Each meeting will hold over Lord's day.

Thessalonica: or, The Model Church. A Sketch of Primitive Christianity. 2d 1000. Paper, 25 cts. Cloth, 40 cts.

A stirring volume—evangelical and scriptural. Amer. Prop. In pungent style—abounding in strong points. Chicago Times. Very interesting—ably treated. Albany Evening Journal. Earnest and ably written. Boston Evening Transcript. Written in a good spirit—in earnest. Puritan Recorder. A strong and vigorous work. Godey's Lady's Book. Many brilliant passages—a vigorous writer. N. Y. Times. I have read it with great interest. C. F. Hudson. Every minister should get a copy. Philad. Christian Chron. Contains a good deal of truth. Boston Atlas. Many good and sound ideas. Boston Congregationalist. Abounds with good, sober truth. Millennial Harbinger. Modern Christians will prize it. Delaware Inquirer.

The Great Controversy Between God and Man: Its Origin, Progress, and End. A Sketch of Man's "Secession and Rebellion." 3d 1000. Paper, 25 cts. Cloth, 40 cts.

A well-meant and well-written book. Banner of the Cross. Touching and impressive. Christian Chronicle. I read it with much satisfaction. Bishop J. H. Hopkins. Great ability—vigorous and spirited. E. Winthrop, M. A. The controversy will close with judgments. Amer. Prop. The most gifted and eloquent of those who, in this country, maintain this view. Prof. C. F. Hudson.

Reasons for my Hope, and the Tokens of its Speedy Realization. 3d 1000. Paper, 25 cts. Cloth, 40 cts.

Containing an exposition of the hope of the Church—abounding in facts pertaining to Prophecy, the signs of the times, the increase of knowledge, spread of the Gospel, Missions, Tracts, Bible translations, Bible societies, &c. The Statistics alone are worth many times the price of the book.

Retribution; or, The Doom of the Ungodly, after the Resurrection of the Dead, Just and Unjust. Paper, 25 cts. Cloth, 40 cts.

A solemn and earnest argument in proof of the resurrection of the dead, just and unjust; the punishment of the ungodly in the lake of fire, the second death; and a refutation of the notion that wicked men have no resurrection, judgment, or conscious punishment after death. Judging from the reception it meets with, it hits the nail on the head!

Pauline Theology; or, The Scripture Doctrine of Future Punishment, as taught in the Epistles of Paul. 12th 1000. Paper, 13 cts.

This work contains the passages on future punishment found in Paul's FOURTEEN EPISTLES. His words are quoted and defined in Greek and in English. Many, upon reading it, have given up their sectarian theology to embrace the theology of Paul. The wide circulation of the work, which has never been refuted, indicates its value and interest.

The Old Paths; or, The Primitive Doctrine of a Future Life. 3d 1000. Paper, 18 cts.

Beginning where Pauline theology closes, this treatise exhibits the teachings of all the Apostolical Fathers, as found in the writings bearing their names, such as Barnabas, Clement, Hermas, Ignatius, and Polycarp, giving large quotations illustrating their opinions upon the questions of Life, Immortality, Future Punishment, and the Kingdom of God.

Tracts on Immortality: containing Pauline Theology, The Old Paths, Milton on the State of the Dead, and other minor tracts. Bound in cloth, 50 cts.

Tracts on Prophecy: containing more than Twenty pointed, stirring, and earnest Tracts on Prophetical and Practical subjects. Bound in cloth, 50 cts.

The Perfect State; or, Forever with the Lord. A Book of Instruction and Consolation. [illegible]

This work contains a statement of the Scripture teachings concerning how men shall come to be forever with the Lord; including lengthy and critical discussions of Paradise, Hades, Sheol, the Intermediate State, and other matters of interest; while it serves to cheer the heart-stricken and sad with the hope of glory when Christ, who is our life, shall appear.

The Voice of the Church on the Coming and Kingdom of the Redeemer; or, a History of the Doctrine of the Reign of Christ on Earth. By D. T. Taylor. Edited and published by H. L. Hastings. 6th edition. 420 pp. 12mo. Price, $1.00.

This is the ablest work extant on this subject. It proves that the common notion of the world's conversion was unknown to the Church of Christ for 1800 years. It quotes the views of some four hundred of the greatest theologians known, giving an account of each, and presenting their statements on other subjects in their own words. Multitudes of commendatory notices from preachers and papers, of all kinds, might be quoted. Read it and be satisfied.

Spiritualism a Satanic Delusion and a Sign of the Times. By William Ramsey, D. D. Edited by H. L. H. Price, cloth, 40 cts. Paper, 25 cts.

A masterly expose of the grand delusion of the age, which has shielded many and recovered some from this snare of Satan. The author, a profound scholar, long conversant with such manifestations among the heathen, while a missionary in India, has shed much light upon the question of this strong delusion.

Wayside Gleanings. By Fannie Parry. The gathered Memorials, in Prose and Verse, of one who fell asleep in early life. Elegant cloth binding, 60 cts.

Prophetical and Practical Tracts.

[illegible]

Practical Gospel Tracts, for Distribution.

gon, with none but his step-father with him, who had gone to bring him home. He died tranquil and composed, trusting in his Redeemer, leaving behind him a large circle of relatives and friends, who deeply lament his untimely end. E. D. B.

Died, at Enfield, Conn., April 27th, Rosanna Griswold, aged seventy-two years.

Sister Griswold was formerly a member of the M. E. church, until the joyful news of the coming kingdom reached her ears. After hearing Bro. Chapman seventeen evenings in succession, she decided to identify herself with this truth and that people everywhere spoken against. With true christian courage she defended the faith of the coming and kingdom of Jesus and life eternal only through him. Her place at meeting was almost always filled, till the infirmities of old age prevented her; but even then her influence was not lost in her home circle; those who knew her best testify that she was a "living christian"—"her work all done and well done."

She had told her friends she should leave them when they did not know it. Though not confined to her bed, yet her feebleness was such that the solicitude of her kind children led them to her bedside in the night. The night before her death she retired, expressing an expectation of a good night's rest. Her daughter found her at four in the morning sleeping very sweetly. When the family arose she still slept on, but "the silver cord was loosed" without the change of a muscle, or any indication that she had waked. As we gazed upon her placid features at the funeral, we thought the church had lost one more to pray with and for them—one less to pray for the agency of the Spirit to affect the hearts of unconverted friends and the world. We thought also of the glad surprise—the joyful waking,—instead of being helped to rise by the same hand of affection that smoothed her pillow on retiring, she suddenly springs to life, startled from her long and dreamless sleep by the trumpet's long, loud blast, accompanied by the shouting of attending angels mingling with the triumphant hallelujah of the living though now changed saints. Her astonished eyes are greeted by an escort of dazzling angels, and then the change.

O! glorious change! instead of an infirm old body, now she is clothed in immortal youth and beauty, "like Christ's glorious body," escorted up the bright pathway of the parting heavens to that city of jasper and gold, that sea of dazzling glory, to grasp the thoughts of which the sun and moon can give only an approximate idea. To awake from that night's repose to such transcendent glory—to gaze on Him whom her faith had often seen, though invisible—the "King in his beauty"—to behold that Jesus who had died to win and save her—to awake to see that Redeemer, to hear his musical voice "like the sound of many waters" saying, "Come, my beloved!" "Come, ye blessed of my Father." To see that "great mysterious Deity," the Ancient of Days—to see that God she had tried to comprehend, and though not seeing she had loved. And yet the wakin up amid these untold glories will only be to her as the tick of a watch. No measured lapse of time from her retiring till this glorious waking. Brn. and Srs., if we indeed live on the confines of such glorious scenes, "what manner of persons ought we to be"?

Palmer, Mass. S. G. H.

Died, in Wolcott, Ct., June 17th, of diphtheria, Georgiana, daughter of Bro. George Wiard, aged fifteen years.

She was at work in Meriden when taken sick. She expressed a desire to go home, which was granted. Little did she think she was going home to die, as she was not aware of the danger of her case until a few moments before she expired. After an illness of four days she fell under the hand of the destroyer. May this sudden blow be a warning to the careless, and work out good for the bereaved family, and friends and neighbors who thronged the dwelling of Bro. Wiard, to pay the last tribute of respect to the sleeper in death, and to sympathize with the afflicted. We trust this opportunity was not lost in which to sound the alarm of a coming judgment. We presented a discourse from Heb. 9 : 27, 28. Wm. A. Fenn.

FOREIGN NEWS.

By the arrival of the steamship Scotia, we have foreign news from Liverpool to the 21st ult., Queenstown the 22d.

The Paris Constitutionel regards mediation as a mere question of time. Public opinion is in favor of it, and it gains ground in France and England. It is for the government to seize a favorable opportunity.

In the House of Commons Mr. Lindsay is postponing till July 11th his motion relative to British relations with America, expressed hopes that the government would in the mean time see the necessity for recognizing the South, and of taking the matter out of the hands of private members, as it was perfectly clear that the Confederates were now able to assert their independence.

There is great activity in France for sending reinforcements to Mexico. The number now stated to be sent is 12,000.

Garibaldi was again at Turin. Negotiations are reported to be taking place. The party of action called upon him to declare that he was with them or the government. In consequence he resigned his Presidency of their society.

It is reported that Napoleon has resolved to send sufficient troops to Mexico to force a way to the Capital against all obstacles.

The news from America per Persia created great excitement.

Great Fire in St. Petersburg.—Our foreign files bring us startling news from Russia—including further accounts of the revolutionary schemes in that great empire, and of the incendiary attempts to destroy the capital by fire. Some thirty fires had occurred in the city during two weeks. The city has been placed under martial law, trade and commerce are at a stand-still, and even goods ordered from England to St. Petersburg have been countermanded. An imperial decree has been published declaring that rapine, murder, incendiarism and destruction of crops is to be punishable with death.

This fire has consumed one of the most remarkable features of St. Petersburg—the Louse Market. The old bazaar was destroyed, together with rows and rows of stores, and the great government building. The conflagration [illegible]

DOMESTIC NEWS.

New York, July 2. It is understood that General McClellan's right was attacked with great impetuosity by Stonewall Jackson, whose men successfully charged our artillery, sustaining a loss not less than 5000 men. Our loss was very severe.

It is reported that Jackson was killed, and that one of our Brigadier Generals was taken prisoner together with an entire regiment. Gen. Fitz John Porter was sorely pressed, and crossed the Chickahominy to the western side, the enemy taking the last on his left.

General McClellan with much severe fighting had penetrated and passed through White Oak swamp with 40,000 men and one hundred pieces of artillery, to secure an advantageous position, and subsequently cut through a line of communication with James river.

It is reported that during the two days fighting Gen. McClellan's loss was 10,000.

The most important feature covered by the reports is that Gen. McClellan has succeeded in penetrating White Oak swamp and placing a very large force on the other side of it.

Philadelphia, July 2. A letter from Fortress Monroe states that forage trains sent from White House to Dispatch Station on Saturday, met the rebel pickets and backed down to White House, where the cars were burned, engines blown up, and ambulances and baggage wagons rolled into the river, there being no time to destroy them.

The rebels were not in sight of White House Point on Sunday Morning, when the steamer left. The buildings at White House burned all night, and were completely destroyed.

Gen. McClellan and his staff all agree that the present position of our army is far more advantageous as a base of operations against Richmond than that hitherto occupied.

Our gunboats can now be brought to bear and materially aid in carrying on the work.

The Richmond Dispatch of Monday announced the death of Gen. Stonewall Jackson, and of Gen. Barnwell Rhett, of South Carolina.

New York, July 3. The Times has detailed reports of the battles of Thursday, Friday and Saturday, from which it appears that the right wing of our army, about 20,000 men, was attacked on Friday by a rebel force of not less than 50,000, and after a gallant fight our troops crossed the Chickahominy in order.

On Saturday night and Sunday our whole left wing, under Generals Heintzelman, Keyes and Sumner, fell back along the line of the railroad and Williamsburg road, and marched to James river. The rebels crossed the Chickahominy in great force on Sunday, reaching the railroad; but they made no pursuit, remaining, however, in possession of the ground previously occupied by our troops on both sides of the Chickahominy, including the bridges and earthworks we had erected against their approach. All our stores, &c., were withdrawn in good order, without much loss. Of course there was tremendous fighting during these movements, and heavy loss on both sides.

Our left flank now rests immediately on the bank of James river, while our right is upon the impregnable point won by Heintzelman's force on Wednesday last.

The forces lately required to guard West Point and the White House, and intermediate depots, as well as the thirty-five miles of railroad from West Point to our front, and now no longer necessary in their late positions, thus practically adding much to the acting fighting strength of our army, whose supplies of every description can be landed direct from the transports almost immediately in their camps, under the protection of the navy's gunboats.

We need hardly add that the new position of our army is upon high ground, on which it can operate to far greater advantage than of late, in the swamps of the Chickahominy.

Washington, July 3. Gen. McClellan's dispatch received to-day makes the sympathizers with secession and the croakers rather unhappy.

Officers of the army think that the rebellion has failed in its death struggle, and that the Union force will henceforth be kept strong enough to insure success.

This point (Turkey Bend) on the James river, which is to be the new basis of supplies of Gen. McClellan, is about twenty-five miles from Richmond by the course of the river, and about fifteen in a direct line. It is five or six miles above City Point, where the Appomattox comes in and the railroad from Petersburg terminates.

Washington, July 4. The Richmond Examiner of July 2d, gives the following relating to the battle of Monday:

It says that on Sunday morning Generals Hill and Longstreet with their divisions crossed the Chickahominy, and late Monday afternoon attacked the enemy about five miles northeast of Daileytown on the New Market road.

The conflict was terrible, and at half past eight P. M. the enemy had been driven back a mile and a half. At half past nine, being heavily reinforced, the enemy made another stand.

The loss on our (rebel) side was terrible. The situation being evidently hopeless against such overwhelming forces, Gen. Hill slowly retired.

At this moment, seeing their adversary retire, the most vociferous cheers arose along the whole Yankee line. The fight ended there for the night.

The Examiner says that it thinks the division which went into the fight on Friday—14,000 strong—could only number 6000 men for duty on Tuesday, and that the loss of life exceeds that of any battle or series of battles yet fought.

About 8 o'clock A. M. of Tuesday, Jackson and Huger's divisions attacked McClellan's left flank on the west side of the Chickahominy, seventeen miles from Richmond.

Later in the day Magruder fell upon his right flank. Fighting was going on up to nine o'clock Tuesday night.

Cairo, July 5. The ram Monarch brings news from Vicksburg to the 28th ult. On Thursday Com. Porter's fleet commenced to shell the upper battery, below the town. The shelling was renewed on Friday, and in the afternoon a fire was directed on the town, over which the shells were seen plainly to burst. This continued until 4 o'clock, when the firing ceased. During the bombardment the rebel batteries played feebly. Their firing was inaccurate. Half an hour after the cessation of the bombardment the rebel water battery opened on our mortar fleet, which replied until the battery ceased firing.

At 8 o'clock in the evening, a fire was opened from the entire fleet on the town, and it was continued for an hour. The next morning at 4 o'clock, the bombardment was renewed, during which eight of Com. Farragut's vessels passed the batteries without serious damage. The city must have been damaged greatly, as conflagrations were seen in numerous places in different parts of the city.

Corinth, July 3. The guerrillas tore up the track east of Grand Junction a day or two since, and captured seventy or eighty prisoners.

New York, July 3. The Evening Post says we have the best authority for saying that General Pope's army, some days ago, received rations of that kind which betokened a hasty and forced march. Gen. Pope, we may believe, therefore, is on his way toward Richmond. More troops will be ordered from the West. Some are already on the way, if they have not arrived at points whence they can be quickly dispatched to the peninsula.

The Washington correspondent of the N. Y. Express thus sums up the formidable preparations of the rebels for the defence of their capital: [illegible] Richmond from that point; but the army of the enemy both of necessity and wisdom withdrew. It fortified Richmond at every point. It planted the heaviest cannon and built the most solid fortifications on the James river, casing them with heavy iron and protecting them by earthworks. It sunk thirty vessels, some of them laden with stone and brick, in three parallel lines across the James river, and filled up the space between with stone and sand. The rebel army has occupied all the highlands and chosen positions of health, strength and convenience, around their own capital. They have sent for Beauregard, Price and Jackson, to co-operate with Jeff. Davis, Johnston, Lee, Huger and Magruder. Many of our old naval officers, and some of the best of the number, are directing and handling the guns on the rebel fortifications.

Corinth, July 6. Col. Sheridan's Michigan Cavalry, with two regiments of 728 men, was attacked at Booneville, Miss., by parts of eight rebel regiments numbering 4700, which he defeated and drove back after seven hours hard fighting. Our loss was 41 killed and wounded and missing. The rebel loss was very great.

Washington, July 6. An officer of high rank who arrived here yesterday from the Peninsula, reports that Gen. McClellan's army is in splendid condition, and much larger than the current reports make it, in view of the late losses. He states also that the army is in a perfectly secure position either for offensive or defensive purposes, and able to work without the aid of gunboats.

Fortress Monroe, July 5. There was a skirmish yesterday morning near our left wing, resulting in the defeat of the rebels. We took 1000 prisoners and three small batteries. Our cavalry then followed the rebels until they passed beyond White Oak Swamp.

For the last two days the rebels have shown little disposition to fight, and yesterday they relinquished their ground and batteries almost without resistance.

New York, July 7. The Tribune's correspondent says that Gen. Hooker's division is reduced to less than 5000 effective men.

The result of Tuesday's fight was distinctly in favor of the Union army. Gen. McClellan came on board the mail boat at Harrison's Landing, Wednesday, and hurriedly passed into the cabin with Gen. Patterson, who came up on the boat. In reply to Gen. Patterson Gen. McClellan said: "We have fought a battle every day for the last week and whipped the rebels every time, though they had three to our one."

An officer of high rank gives the most encouraging account of affairs which has yet been received. He states that our army is much larger than is reported in view of the late losses, and that it is in a perfectly secure position, either for offensive or defensive movements, and this without the aid of the gunboats even.

A distinguished officer of the army of the Potomac, who was in Washington after the seven day's battle, estimates that the rebel loss was at least 75,000, or in other words, quite half their whole army in and about Richmond.

Rebel prisoners put their loss at 30,000, while our loss does not exceed 10,000. The rebels had over 200,000 troops engaged.

☞ The latest accounts from Knoxville, Tenn., represent that the persecution of the Union men continued. The property of all loyal Tennesseeans in the Union army was being sold at auction, including furniture, agricultural implements, &c., no attention being paid to the necessities of their families. A distinguished citizen of Tennessee, who had been arrested and cast into a Southern jail, had died there from the effects of unwholesome food. Union soldiers who are prisoners at the South are dying rapidly in consequence of eating tainted meat and rotten food.

A Second Moses.—A Harrisburg paper states that during the terrible freshet of week before last a cradle was seen coming down the rushing waters near Manadaville, and being suspected of containing something, it was watched by several persons for three or four miles, expecting it would at some part of its journey come so near the shore that it would be safe in venturing after in a boat. At last, at a bend in the swollen stream, the cradle came sufficiently near to be secured, when lo and behold, upon lifting up a light covering, a beautiful babe looked up and smiled!

Locusts in Kansas.—The seven year locusts have made their appearance in hordes in some parts of Kansas. The grass is full of holes from which they have emerged, and their crystal coats are lying around everywhere. The air is vocal with their music, and the bushes are covered with them. In company with the locusts are countless thousands of grasshoppers, and the ravages of the combined armies begins to excite a fear that vegetation along their line of march will be totally destroyed.

Parson Brownlow's Views.—In a recent lecture at Washington, Parson Brownlow is represented as saying:—

"This country is now pursuing a course with this infernal, wicked rebellion, which I do not approve of, unless we pursue a different and a more vigorous one, we shall never end this rebellion in God's world!"

☞ A black insect, very prolific, is badly injuring the trees and shrubs at Hartford. It is hatched out of eggs laid on the under side of leaves, in quantities absolutely enormous, and curls up the foliage and even the stems and small branches, so as almost to ruin the trees.

☞ The drought is becoming very serious in Northern Vermont. Lamoille, Chittenden and Orleans counties have not been visited with a copious rain since last fall. For the past four or five weeks no rain has fallen and the grass is drying up in the pastures.

☞ The rebel cavalry are again burning cotton near Memphis, and arresting parties engaged in buying it up, who are sent South.

Notices, &c.

Ghostology.

The articles which have appeared under this caption, in successive numbers of the Crisis, have been revised by the author, W. Sheldon, and are now ready for delivery in the shape of a neat pamphlet of forty-eight pages. Price in glazed covers 10 cts. Single, $6 per hundred. Without covers 8 cts. $5 per hundred, post paid. Orders with cash may be addressed to Miles Grant, or H. L. Hastings, Boston, Mass., or to W. Sheldon, Merrimac, Sauk Co., Wis.

Campmeeting.

The great interest manifested at our tent meeting in New Preston, Ct., has induced us, with the advice of the brethren in that section, to appoint a campmeeting, to commence Tuesday, Sept. 2d, at 10 A. M. Some eight tents have already been counted up for the occasion, and we hope the number will be much larger. Brethren that want to work for the Lord will find here a new and interesting field.

We desire all who can, to bring provisions and tents for themselves and others. Plain food, and "all things common" is the Bible rule; let us practice it cheerfully. A daily stage from New Milford (Housatonic R. R.) at 12 will bring in all who wish. Distance eight miles. H. Pratt.

Grove Meeting.

The grove meeting in Sauk Co., Wis., July 18th, will be in Sumpter, (formerly Kingston) near the centre of the town. Sumpter joins Baraboo on the South. Brethren coming from a distance will call on Bro. Knapp. G. W. Barnes.

Meeting of the Advent Christian Association.

To the brethren in Christ, and churches of the Lord who "serve the living God," and "wait for his Son from heaven," Greeting:—The Board of Managers, after due consultation, have decided to appoint the third annual meeting of the Advent Christian Association, at Wilbraham, Mass., to commence Tuesday, 4 o'clock, P. M., August 26th, 1862.

Two reasons have led them to decide upon this time in preference to October, as heretofore. First—A larger attendance can be secured; Second—Much expense can be saved. These are weighty considerations. The business to be transacted at the annual meeting of this Association is very important. The interests of every church, and every individual, "looking for the blessed hope," are involved in its proceedings. This Society controls the World's Crisis. It appoints its Editors and Managers. It decides what its character shall be, and marks out its policy, whether it shall give expression to every idea, however fanciful or absurd, which may demand its columns; or whether it shall select such only as are "meat in due season." It becomes necessary, therefore, that every church be represented, that our family paper be sustained in such a manner as to "feed the flock," that we may know whether its Editorship, eminently successful thus far, shall be changed or not.

A full representation, so desirable, can be best secured during campmeeting week. Distant churches in the South, West and East, are usually represented then, while they cannot afford six weeks afterwards to send other representatives so far to attend the Association alone. Having, for these reasons, fixed upon this time for our third annual meeting, it is hoped that we may have a large and profitable one. Lest we be disappointed, let earnest prayer be made to God daily, that whatever shall be done at that time may be done, not in the name of man, self, or party, but "in the name of the Lord Jesus."

Daniel T. Taylor, Chairman.
H. F. Carpenter, Clerk.

June 7th, 1862.

Note. The Board of the Advent Christian Association are requested to meet at Wilbraham on Tuesday, August 26th, at 8 o'clock, A. M. A prompt and punctual attendance desirable.

D. T. Taylor, President.
H. F. Carpenter, Clerk.

Note. Letters are solicited from churches and ministers who cannot possibly be otherwise represented. They may be directed to H. F. Carpenter, Collins Depot, Mass.

All pastors and evangelists, and delegates from churches co-operating with this Society, are members. Each church is allowed one delegate, and one additional delegate, for every fifty members above the number of twenty-five members. None can vote by letter.

Notice.

The Lord willing, there will be a campmeeting at Corinna, Me., (on Mr. Weston Nutter's place) commencing the first Monday in September, and continuing over the following Sabbath. We extend a cordial invitation to all the brethren in this section, and abroad, to come and worship the Lord with us. There will, we hope, be a full delegation of preaching brethren with us from abroad to dispense the word of life. Particulars hereafter.

B. C. Moore, Albert Door, Geo. H. Fisher, } Committee of Arrangements.

Campmeeting at Wilbraham.

It is thought best that our great annual gathering at Wilbraham commence this year Monday, Aug. 25th, and continue one week. Particulars hereafter.

F. H. Berick, Miles Grant, Geo. T. Adams. } Committee of Arrangements.

Information.

To the churches in the vicinity of Plainville, Ct., I would say, having moved to Plainville, I desire to devote my time to the cause of Christ in Plainville and the adjoining towns, as the Lord may seem to direct. I have a standing appointment in Plainville once in four weeks. My next appointment here is July 13th. I hope to hear from the churches in this vicinity soon.

The preaching brethren who wish to visit Plainville to preach, will please confer with Bro. George Morgan, who is corresponding Secretary of the Church. My P. O. address is Plainville, Ct. Wm. A. Fenn.

Special Book Notice.

In fulfillment of a long cherished purpose, I am happy to present my friends with a list of my books, at reduced prices, as follows, till further notice:—

Reasons for my Hope, and the Tokens of its Speedy Realization. 3d 1000. Paper, [illegible] cts. Cloth, [illegible] cts.

Containing an exposition of the hope of the Church—abounding in facts pertaining to Prophecy, the signs of the times, the increase of knowledge, spread of the Gospel, Missions, Tracts, Bible translations, Bible societies, &c. The Statistics alone are worth many times the price of the book.

Retribution; or, The Doom of the Ungodly, after the Resurrection of the Dead, Just and Unjust. Paper, [illegible] cts. Cloth, [illegible] cts.

A solemn and earnest argument in proof of the resurrection of the dead, just and unjust; the punishment of the ungodly in the lake of fire, the second death; and a refutation of the notion that wicked men have no resurrection, judgment, or conscious punishment after death. Judging from the reception it meets with, it hits the nail on the head!

Pauline Theology; or, The Scripture Doctrine of Future Punishment, as taught in the Epistles of Paul. [illegible] Paper, 13 cts.

This work contains the passages on future punishment found in Paul's FOURTEEN EPISTLES. His words are quoted and defined in Greek and in English. Many, upon reading it, have given up their sectarian theology to embrace the theology of Paul. The wide circulation of the work, which has never been refuted, indicates its value and interest.

The Old Paths; or, The Primitive Doctrine of a Future Life. 3d 1000. Paper, 18 cts.

Beginning where Pauline theology closes, this treatise exhibits the teachings of all the Apostolical Fathers, as found in the writings bearing their names, such as Barnabas, Clement, Hermas, Ignatius, and Polycarp, giving large quotations illustrating their opinions upon the questions of Life, Immortality, Future Punishment, and the Kingdom of God.

Tracts on Immortality: containing Pauline Theology, The Old Paths, Milton on the State of the Dead, and other minor tracts. Bound in cloth, 50 cts.

Tracts on Prophecy: containing more than Twenty pointed, stirring, and earnest Tracts on Prophetical and Practical subjects. Bound in cloth, 50 cts.

The Perfect State; or, Forever with the Lord. A Book of Instruction and Consolation. [illegible]

This work contains a statement of the Scripture teachings concerning how men shall come to be forever with the Lord, including lengthy and critical discussions of Paradise, Hades, Sheol, the Intermediate State, and other matters of interest, while it serves to cheer the heart-stricken and aid with the hope of glory when Christ, who is our life, shall appear.

The Voice of the Church on the Coming and Kingdom of the Redeemer: or, a History of the Doctrine of the Reign of Christ on Earth. By D. T. Taylor. Edited and prefaced by H. L. Hastings. [illegible] edition. 420 pp. 12mo. Price, [illegible]

This is the ablest work extant on this subject. It proves that the common notion of the world's conversion was unknown to the Church of Christ for 1800 years. It quotes the views of some four hundred of the greatest theologians known, giving an account of each, and presenting their statements on this subject in their own words. Multitudes of commendatory notices from preachers and papers, of all kinds, might be quoted. Read it and be satisfied.

Spiritualism a Satanic Delusion and a Sign of the Times. By William Ramsey, D. D. Edited by H. L. H. Price, cloth, [illegible] cts. Paper, 25 cts.

A masterly expose of the grand delusion of the day, which has shielded many and recovered some from this snare of Satan. The author, a profound scholar, long conversant with pagan superstitions among the heathen, while a missionary in India, has thrown much light upon the question of this strong delusion.

Wayside Gleanings. By Fannie Parry. The gathered Memorials, in Prose and Verse, of one who fell asleep in early life. Elegant cloth binding, 60 cts.

Messiah's Advent.

He's coming! he's coming! our Savior, our King,
In the bright clouds of heaven, on swift speeding wing;
From the throne of his Father, where for sinners he plead,
To ransom his saints from the land of the dead.

The angels! the angels! bright seraphs attend,
And gird him about as to earth they descend;
The myriads of heaven majestic displayed,
The King in his beauty and glory arrayed.

The trumpet! the trumpet! its tones rend the sky,
'Tis Gabriel himself with his voice lifted high;
The charnels of earth by that voice are all stirred,
And the sleepers march forth at the sound of his word.

The judgment! the judgment! the thrones are all set,
And arrayed at his feet stand the small and the great,
To hear from his lips the word of their doom,—
"The righteous to glory, the wicked to gloom."

The city! the city! behold it descend,
Prepared as a bride adorned for her friend;
With gems, and with pearls, and streets of pure gold,
Surpassing in splendor the fables of old.

The marriage! the marriage! the bridegroom comes forth;
See the grace of his nod, hear the words of his mouth;
His vestments shed fragrance and gladness around,
Like the roses of Sharon with dew-drops encrowned.

The music! the music! he speaks,—'t is the King;
"My sister, my spouse, for gladness now sing;
The sorrows of earth forever are past,
The bride and the bridegroom united at last."

The glory! the glory! the earth is made new;
The heavens are changed to etherial blue;
The saints, made immortal, reach their home with the Lord,
'T is glory forever, 't is glory to God!

A Glance at our World.—No. 6.

Has an increase of Bibles and tracts worked a reform in society? No. Does not vice stalk abroad openly, not merely confined to our large cities, but back among the rural districts? Morality and vice are strangely thrown together. Things which forty and fifty years ago would have received the most severe denouncement, are now secretly winked at by men who stand high as models of piety. Men and women move along in the highest walks of life who are given to lewdness. We think this will be the prevailing sin of the last days. Let us glance at any of the papers of the day devoted to the exposure of city crimes and vices, and what a sad picture is presented to the mind's eye. Right beneath the shadows of those stately churches which ring with vocal melody; where men of enlarged views, in strains of noble eloquence, tell forth the mighty strides the gospel is making among the poor heathen in Africa, and other parts of Christendom,—alas! are practised vices which would make a semi barbarian blush. Yet this is the last half of the nineteenth century—so near the world's expected millennium! O! how can men of expanded intellect, who make the Bible their study, still affirm in strains of defiance that the millennium is just at the door!—when wicked men and seducers are waxing worse and worse.

O, how unlike the present world
Will be the one to come!

This is a world of shadows: that will be a world of realities. This is a world of strife: that will be a world of peace—perfect peace—no corroding cares. This is a world of death: that will be a deathless world. No green grassy grave-yards, with monumental slabs telling the sad tale of woe, of family ties severed forever, of loving hearts broken with grief at the loss of kind parents, or a loved son or daughter snatched away when just budding into manhood or womanhood. But so it is. The curse lies heavy on poor fallen man. The worm is rioting in the bud. In that world to come, those who are so unspeakably happy as to attain it will find a world of joy, will gaze upon their Savior—their friend, and will cast their crowns at his feet and cry, "Worthy is the Lamb!"

As we glance abroad we can but exclaim, Is there to be no change in this direful scene of blood and slaughter? Shall brotherly love and cordial affection never become universal, and peace wave her white banner throughout the earth? Is there no durable institution founded in virtue and permanent as the eternal rules of justice? Is there no firm ground of hope? Yes, O yes! there is a kingdom; its foundations were laid of old; its king is the God of heaven; its law is perfect love; its dominion will embrace the whole earth. Earthly kingdoms shall vanish like a shadow or a dream, but this shall continue forever. There is nothing permanent now. Those mighty nations which once enjoyed universal empire, are now silent in the dust. Look at Rome. Look at Persia. Look at Grecia,—gone—gone,—their mighty cities, in which the hum of industry was heard, whose influence was felt in all the then known world,—where are they now? Nineveh exhumed tells a mournful tale of pride and utter destruction. How forcibly it speaks of the truth of Holy Writ! And Babylon, where has it gone? A few broken columns mark what was once the queen of cities. On Euphrates' conquered tide they remain mute, but oh! how eloquent in behalf of God's word.

Everything in nature seems to shadow forth the closing up of this present dispensation to a Gentile world; and we are of the opinion it will close up as fearfully as did the Jewish dispensation. All the nations are waking up, and at the present time we are not listening to the gentle rustle of foreign foliage and beholding a zephyr breeze on the face of the placid sea of the people; but we are hearing the hollow, sullen moan of an approaching hurricane, and beholding the deep regular heavings of the great sea about to be broken by the last dreadful storm. The heavens are gathering blackness, and the atmosphere seems growing murky and bronze, while each fluttering cloud, quick to the tide of unseen impulse, seems agitated and restless, like an uneasy steed before an onset. Yes, our own country is bathed in blood—brother against brother; and how long before Europe will be in a blaze of revolution? Time will determine. The powers of darkness now triumph; but amid all these scenes of worldly ambition we are pointed to a land—

"Where saints with Christ shall reign."

Notes by the Way.

At Walsingham I found a few whose hearts were in sympathy with the truth; but, like sheep upon the mountains, without a shepherd. I remained here until I gave fourteen sermons to attentive congregations. Two of them were given to the shanty-men among the tall pines of Canada West. Sold quite a quantity of books. Organized a church of five members. Two of the number have been preachers among the Wesleyan Methodists and Baptists. One of the number had been an editor. Others will be among them soon.

Feb. 12th, I reluctantly bid adieu to my beloved Bro. and Sr. Bezzo of Forestville, and started for Norwichville, having been invited to N. by my good Bro. H. Stephens, who has labored in this vicinity with good success. In Springford, a body has come out under Bro. S.'s labors into gospel order. I defined my first discourse in N. on the evening of the 12th from Jude 3; subject, the ancient faith, or gospel. The congregation was large, and a deep feeling seemed to pervade the minds of all. Meetings continued to increase in interest, and on the 19th, after opening the ice, which was frozen twenty-two inches thick, we retired to the water, where I had the privilege of immersing four mortal souls into the Christ for the remission of sins. On Sunday, the 23d, after the close of the afternoon service, we again retired to the water, where I had the honor, in the presence of a large congregation, of inducting three mortal souls into the Christ by a burial in water for the remission of sins. Glory be to God for such seasons, for they are like an oasis to the weary traveler crossing a barren desert. I gave one discourse to an attentive congregation in Springford. Gave two discourses in Sweaburg, and found a good company here who are in love with Jesus.

Monday, the 24th, having given sixteen discourses in this vicinity, I immersed seven. I scattered some $25 worth of books, and received $12 as a donation, for which I am grateful to the donors. I bade adieu to the loved ones of N. and started for the Queen's Bush, a distance of some eighty miles, being conveyed on runners. By the blessing of my heavenly Father, I reached the village of Listowell on the evening of Feb. 25th. Found a little company of the loved ones of earth, whose intelligence and christian character is second to none in the State. There was a full house to listen to the truth. Gave in L. and the township Elma eleven discourses. Truth took effect in Elma. After opening the ice, which was frozen two feet thick, I had the honor of retiring to the water three times, where I inducted fourteen mortal souls into the Christ by a burial in water for the remission of all past sins. Among them was one household baptism; a mother aged sixty-seven years, and her son and daughter. Bro. Morrison and wife were among the number. Bro. M. was born in the lowlands of Scotland, and had been a preacher for some thirty years in the Reformed Presbyterian church. One of the number was the clerk of the township of Elma. His wife was with him. The pure Scotch blood coursed in the veins of all. They came into gospel order, taking the name of the church of God at Elma.

Whilst in E., I held a public discussion with a learned man of the Church of England, on the destiny of the wicked. A very large congregation was in attendance. I covered him all over with Bible, and left him to perish in his own corruption! At L. I formed an agreeable acquaintance with Bro. Hay, who was formerly a preacher in the Congregationalist church; also Bro. Hasking, an excellent scholar, as well as a christian. I scattered some $20 worth of books, or tracts. Gave five discourses in Hawksville to good congregations. Immersed one into the Christ for the remission of sins; organized a church; formed an agreeable acquaintance with Bro. Sim, who was formerly a Baptist preacher of high standing, but is now an able defender of the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of his anointed; also Bro. J. Evans, who is an able advocate of the truth.

March 18th, bid adieu to the loved ones in the Queen's Bush, and started for South Gower. After a long and tedious journey reached the place of my destination.—Preached twice, and on the 19th of March bid adieu to C. for a few weeks, and started for Southbridge, Mass. Reached S., my native town, on the evening of the 21st, found my relatives well and glad to see me. March 23d spent with Dr. Huntington's people. The Dr. preached in the morning an excellent discourse. In the afternoon I gave them a discourse predicated upon Rev. 14: 13. Had a good time. On the first Sunday in April I attended the funeral of my uncle, Moses Lyon, Esq., who died March 27th, at the advanced age of eighty-one years and five months. The preacher put him into his orthodox heaven; but he did not stay long, for I saw him in the coffin after he was through, and we waded through snow and water to put him into sheol, a gloomy looking place to one who has no hope of getting out of it. Squire Lyon was a member of the Congregational church, but upon reading my tracts, he became satisfied that Jesus would come and take the throne of David, etc., and that the end of the wicked would be death. Though in his eighty-second year, he had all the energy and firmness of youth and middle age.

Whilst in the East, I preached a number of times in Abington to large congregations; also a number of times at the Axe Factory. Had a good time with all the friends of truth and morality. Spent one First day in Springfield, Mass. Had a good time in presenting the truth. Visited Providence, R. I., also Worcester, Mass. Attended to some worldly matters, then bid adieu to my friends in the East, and with a sad heart started for C. Stopped at Chateaugay, N. Y., and spent two First days, with pleasure to myself and the loved ones in C. May the 6th reached Canada. Spent a number of days in visiting the brethren in Spencerville and the surrounding country. Preached a number of times. Sunday the 11th was a great day. From every quarter they flocked to listen to what I had to say. Gave them two discourses predicated upon Eph. 2: 12; Rom. 5: 18.

May the 16th, amid falling tears, bade adieu to the loved ones in that part of C. and started for Onondaga Co., N. Y., where I have spent a few weeks. Have given ten discourses in the city of Syracuse. Have formed a happy acquaintance with the church in S. Have preached a number of times in the surrounding country. June the 8th I had the honor of inducting six mortal souls into the Christ by a burial in water for the remission of sins. To-morrow I start for Canada, to attend our Annual Conference, which is to be held in Darlington. My P. O. address is Whitby, C. W. R. V. LYON.

Liverpool, N. Y., June 23d, '62.

Correspondence.

From Moses Merrill.

BRO. GRANT:—We have a good work going on in Vernon, under the labors of Bro. Champlin. Over twenty backsliders have been reclaimed, and sinners converted. Five have been baptized. The church hitherto divided and distracted has become a unit, and as the heart of one man labor together. Love that passeth all understanding abounds. It is blessed, sweet, heavenly, glorious! Hallelujah! God is. it seems to me, marshalling his hosts for translation. I never in my forty-two years experience felt such heavenly joy, such sweet communion with God as now. My measure is full, pressed down, shaken together, running over. Such heavenly meetings as are here! such transcendent joy manifested! The world and the best it can do or give recedes. The heavens hold out a better treasure soon to be given. Yours looking for the blessed hope.

West Northfield, Mass., Mar., '62.

From Bro. Benja. Spaulding.

DEAR BRETHREN:—I doubt not but many have inquired with anxiety, What has become of Bro. Spaulding? Some may think he is dead, others that he has backslidden from God and the faith. No, praised be God. I am alive, and not sensible of backsliding. I have been suffering from weakness of the nervous system, occasioned no doubt by having the nerves strained up to a high pitch for a length of time, too much for my system to bear; and at length reaction has taken place, and I have suffered with depression of spirits for more than a year past. Satan, that arch enemy of man, takes advantage of this weakness to throw in doubts about my acceptance with God, and that my life is of no use to myself nor to anybody else, and had better be out of the way. I have tried to say, "Get thee behind me, Satan," for thou hast been a liar from the beginning. I remember how thou didst tempt my blessed Jesus to cast himself down from thence, misapplying scripture to show that it would be right. Still he is loth to give me up; foiled in one form, he takes another, to cheat my soul to death. Blessed be the Lord! Praised be his Name forever! he has not yet conquered me. I yet live to praise him, to be of some use to my fellow men. I am a wonder of mercy, and I trust this trial will not be wholly lost on me, but that it will better prepare me to sympathize with those who are passing through the same.

I am firm in the faith once delivered,—the faith I have tried to establish and build up,—the doctrines of the Bible in relation to Jesus' personal appearing and literal kingdom, immortality through Christ only and at his coming, and the destruction of the wicked, and the restitution of the earth. I am now at the sea shore, trying the effect of the sea air, and visiting among the people. I feel somewhat revived. I feel the praying spirit again, the spirit of exhortation, and a willingness to spend and be spent in God's cause. My nerves are yet weak and trembling, but I have resolved to do a little, and as my strength increases, do still more. I think I am willing to be anything God wants of me, no matter how humble the work, no matter how self-denying. I rejoice in the lowest place in God's vineyard. If any can assist in providing tracts for me, I will see that they are faithfully distributed, and put right into the hands of those who need them, and will add a word of exhortation to every tract. Anything for that purpose may be left at the World's Crisis Office.

From A. J. Dow.

BRO. GRANT:—As we are without Advent preaching, and have been for a long time, and as my earnest desire is that the truth might spread, I would solicit your prayers, and also those of the brethren, that God would pour out his Spirit among us. This has been my prayer for many years, and I am determined, through divine grace assisting, not to give it up. I believe in the prayers of christians. I had some tracts awhile since, and think they did good. If you have any for distribution, please send me a few more.

Lines

TO THE MOTHER OF LITTLE CARRIE.

Friend and sister, once I'll call thee,
Though on earth we meet no more;
Yet I trust one day to greet thee
Where sad partings all are o'er.

Though our meeting was but transient,
And acquaintance was but brief,
Still I'm thinking of thee often,
In thy sad and lonely grief.

Though thy heart hath wept in sorrow
O'er the loved, but early gone,
Weep no more, asleep in Jesus,
She awaits the rising morn!

Yet a little while thy Carrie
Shall by death's cold chain be bound,
Ere the trump of the archangel
Shall awake the sleep profound.

There amid the radiant beauty
Of that fair and promised land,
She'll be clad in dazzling splendor,
Robes prepared by Christ's own hand.

There with harps of gold celestial,
Music filling all the air,
Soon will Carrie join those anthems,—
Say, oh! will you meet her there?

We are passing, swift the moments
Speed us toward that solemn day,
When the earth shall shake with terror,
And the heavens shall pass away.

Conference Report.

Maine Central Quarterly Conference met agreeable to appointment, June 12th, at the Baptist meeting-house, Rockwood's Corner, Belgrade. The following ministers were present: L. L. Howard, D. M. Hanscome, H. D. Reed, O. R. Fassett, H. B. Sevey, R. R. York, S. K. Partridge, J. Dudley, I. Wight, and a good representation of brethren within and beyond the limits of the conference. Prayer meeting at 6 o'clock, Thursday evening. Friday morning, met at 8 o'clock for social worship. At half past ten, sermon by S. K. Partridge from 1 Pet. 1: 12. Afternoon, preaching by Bro. Reed, from Rom. 5: 14. Prayer meeting in the evening.

Saturday morning, met for business, Bro. Sevey in the chair; by whom a letter was presented to the conference from Bro. I. C. Wellcome, stating that in consequence of his having removed beyond the limits of the conference, he could no longer act as Secretary. Hence it was necessary to choose some one to fill the vacancy. H. G. Smiley, of North Sidney, was chosen. But as he was not then present, the meeting adjourned to the close of the afternoon services, at which time he was expected. Social meeting at 9 o'clock—well attended—good interest. At the usual hour sermon by L. L. Howard, from 1 John 2: 18, showing some of the distinctive features of God's family, also that the covenant we are now living under is a perfect one, having rules by which we may be regulated in every department of life.

In the afternoon an exposition of the 18th chapter of Isaiah, by O. R. Fassett. Bro. Fassett holds that the United States are there represented by "the land shadowing with wings"; that there we have the future of this country and of the down-trodden Africans, or that portion of them who are believers. Sermon in the evening by R. R. York. from John 6th, latter part of 9th verse. Sunday morning, prayer meeting. Sermon at the usual hour by H. D. Hanscome, from Rom. 1: 16; Gal. 2: 20. Sermon in the afternoon by O. R. Fassett, from 1 John 1–3; at the close of which Bro. I. Wight, of Augusta, was set apart for the work of the ministry. May he be a successful laborer in God's vineyard.

The conference was a profitable one, and we hope much good may result from it.

H. B. SEVEY, Chairman.
H. G. SMILEY, Secretary.

Unasked Watching.

"Where have you been in this rain?" said Mrs. Walker to her husband, as he came in with his garments thoroughly drenched.

"I have been watching Thurston's mill."

"What need was there of that?"

"It was in great danger of being carried away by the flood; it would have gone if I had not got the waste gate open when I did."

"Was Thurston there?"

"No."

"I don't think it was your duty to be out in such a rain attending to his affairs."

"Why not?"

"Because he ought to attend to his own affairs; and besides, he is no friend of yours."

"The facts are as you state them, but the inference is unsound. I should say he is no friend of mine, therefore I should strive to do him good: that is gospel reasoning, is it not?"

"I suppose it is."

Mr. Walker was one who really believed that it was necessary for a christian to love his enemies, and do good to those that hate him; hence though unasked, and without any expectation of being thanked for it, he watched his enemy's mill, and saved it from destruction.

God does a great deal of unasked watching for us, He has held us up many a time, when we would have fallen. He has watched over our property, our health, our lives, and the condition of our souls. We speak of having accomplished this object, of having escaped that danger, of having sustained ourselves in such and such positions; and yet, without God's watchful care and assistance, we could have done no one of those things. Did we ask him to watch over us and help us? Or was all that watchful care and assistance unasked? Shall we pass the remainder of our days in the same atheistic manner?—Presbyterian.

A Smile.

She comes with a smile, a sweet, modest, lovely, angelic smile! That's the way, friends, when we meet a stranger at the door, by the way-side—anywhere—instead of a frown, a cold, frigid, disdainful, magisterial reserve, put on a smile, a sweet, sociable, affable, heavenly smile; a smile of benevolence, complacency and good-will. A smile is a cheap thing, it costs but little, very little, far less than a frown, a grim, surly look, sour, severe, expressive of displeasure. It is wonderful that persons, seemingly of good common sense in some things, do not learn this art of smiling, instead of knitting the brow, manifesting a morose, austere, rough, grum appearance, enough to freeze a hot summer's day, chill the life blood of good feeling.

"A word, a look, has crushed to earth
Full many a budding flower,
Which had a smile but owned its birth,
Would bless life's darkest hour."

Beloved, why not smile, acquire the habit of smiling, lay down smiling, rise up smiling? Begin the day smiling, keep on smiling all the time, going out, coming in. In all your associations and business transactions, wear a pleasant, cheerful, social smile. Some persons when refusing a reasonable request, instead of doing it pleasantly, with a kind, cheerful smile, sweetly, gently, do it with a vengeance, as having teeth like spears and arrows, and a tongue like a sharp sword.

Husbands and wives, parents and children, brothers and sisters, friends and neighbors, should smile, acquire the habit of smiling, smile perpetually, get the heart full of smiles. "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." Away with your grumness, your stiffness, your surly looks, your sour crout and vinegar barrels, away with them. No one ever gained anything valuable or good by being stiff, stern, formal, sour, surly, impolite or unsociable; but a smiling, heavenly countenance gains the good will of everybody.

"A smile—who will refuse a smile,
The sorrowing breast to cheer?
And turn to love the heart of guile,
And check the falling tear?
A pleasant smile for every face,
O 'tis a blessed thing!
It will the lines of care erase,
And spots of beauty bring."

CONDENSATION.—Give the pith, the cream, the marrow, the essence, the fire. Press your thoughts, pack them, bring everything to a burning, scorching focus. Avoid prefaces, circumlocutions; rush right into your subject at once. Begin before you think of it, and keep dashing on with all your might until you are done.

A tremendous thought may be packed into small compass—made as solid as a cannon ball, and, like that projectile, cut down all before it. Short articles are generally more effective, find more readers, and are more widely copied than long ones. Pack your thoughts close together, and though your article be brief, it will have more weight and will be more likely to make an impression.—Ex.

☞ If an editor omits anything, he is lazy. If he speaks of things as they are, people are mad. If he glosses over, smooths down the rough points, he is bribed. If he calls things by their proper names, he is unfit for the position of an editor. If he does not furnish his readers with jokes, he is a mullet. If he does, he is a rattle-head, lacking stability. If he condemns the wrong, he is a good fellow, but lacks discretion. If he lets wrong and injuries go unmentioned, he is a coward. If he upholds a public man, he does it to gratify spite—is a tool of a clique, or belongs to the "outs." If he indulges in personalities, he is a blackguard; if he does not, his paper is dull and insipid.—Ex.

BACKBITING.—The pious John Newton says: "I was once in a large company where very severe things were said of Mr. W——, when one person seasonably observed, that though the Lord was pleased to effect conversions and edification by a variety of means, he had never known anybody convinced of error by what was said of him behind his back. This was about thirteen years ago, and it has been on my mind as a useful hint ever since."

Cure for Throat Disease.

As I am quite extensively known in the New England States, and as there are thousands who know how seriously I have been afflicted with a throat difficulty and cough, I wish to state a few facts in regard to its origin and cure.

Fifteen years ago, when I first began to lecture, I took a severe cold, which brought on a cough; this was aggravated by continual speaking. During the warm season, I took but little notice of it; but when the cold weather approached, my cough increased in violence, and held on till spring. What discouraged me most was, that every year it grew worse; it seemed to be more on my lungs. During the last summer, I was not free at all, and I began to think that my days were numbered, as I could get nothing to help me.

Last autumn, I was requested to gargle my throat with strong salt water. This mode of treatment I commenced about the middle of last October, and in three months was entirely well. It is my opinion that, if every diseased throat could be gargled four times a day with salt water, a permanent cure would be effected in a few month's time. I suppose that, if the medicine cost a dollar a bottle, more would be inclined to give it a trial. A word to the wise is sufficient. W. L. CAMP.

Canker.

BRO. GRANT:—A request was made not long since, in the Crisis, for any one who knew any thing useful for the health department, to forward it. I know what has proved a sure remedy for canker in every case where it has been tried. Take the bark of a pussy willow from the trunk or root; and make a tea, and drink it.

Woburn, Mass. W. L. CARROLL.

Scalds and Burns.

On the instant of the accident, plunge the part under cold water. This relieves the pain in a second, and all hands too become composed. If the part cannot be kept under water, cover it over with dry flour, an inch deep or more. In both cases pain ceases because the air is excluded. In many instances nothing more is needed after the flour: simply let it remain until it falls off, when a new skin will be found under. In severer cases, while the part injured is under water, summer a leek or two in an earthen vessel, with half their bulk of hog's lard, until the leeks are soft, then strain through a muslin rag. This makes a greenish colored ointment, which, when cool, spread thickly on a linen cloth and apply it to the injured part. If there are blisters, let out the water. When the part becomes feverish and uncomfortable, renew the ointment, and a rapid, painless cure will be the result, if the patient, in the mean while, lives exclusively on fruits, coarse bread, and other light, loosening food.

If the scald or burn is not very severe—that is, if it not deeper than the outer skin—an ointment made of sulphur, with lard enough to make it spread stiffly on a linen rag, will be effectual. The leek-ointment is most needed when there is ulceration from neglectd burns, or when the injury is deeper than the surface. As this ointment is very healing and soothing in the troublesome excoriations of children, and also in foul, indolent ulcers, and is said to be efficacious in modifying, preventing altogether, the pitting of small-pox, it would answer a good purpose if families were to keep it on hand for emergencies—the sulphur-ointment for moderate cases, and the leek-ointment in those of greater severity, or of a deeper nature. Hall's Journal of Health.

Talks about Health.

Seclusion from sunshine is one of the misfortunes of our civilized life. The same cause which makes potato vines white and sickly when grown in dark cellars, operates to produce the pale sickly girls that are reared in our parlors. Expose either to the direct rays of the sun, and they begin to show color, health, and strength.

When in London, some years ago, I visited an establishment which had acquired a wide reputation for the cure of those maladies in which prostration and nervous derangements were prominent features. I found in the use made of sunshine the secret of success. The slate roof had been removed and a glass one substituted. The upper story had been divided into sixteen small rooms, each one provided with a lounge, washing apparatus, etc. The patient, on entering each his little apartment, removed all his clothing, and exposed himself to the direct rays of the sun. Lying on the lounge, and turning over from time to time, each and every part of the body was thus exposed to the life-giving rays of the sun. Several London physicians candidly confessed to me that many cases which seemed waiting only for the shroud, were galvanized into life and health by this baptism in the blessed sunshine.

Many years ago a clergyman who had for years been a victim of dyspepsia, and who had prayed for death as the only door of escape, came at length, through the advice of a mutual friend, to consult with me. I advised the disuse of all medicines, the generous use of cracked wheat and good beef, and much exposure to sunshine. To secure the last mentioned influence, I directed him to build a close fence, covering a space twenty feet square, in his garden, and plant the earth within with something to occupy his mind. Then when the weather was warm, shutting himself in, he was to busy himself quite nude with the cultivation of his vegetables, from ten to sixty minutes a day, always indulging in a thorough bath and vigorous friction before leaving. He was radically cured!

I was practicing my profession in Buffalo, New York, during '49 and '51, those memorable cholera seasons. I saw at least five cases of cholera on the shady side of the street to one on the sunny side. One eminent physician in New Orleans reports from his own practice eight cases of yellow fever on the shady side of the street to one on the sunny side.

Who has not read Florence Nightingale's observations in the Crimea as between the shady and sunny side of the hospitals? In St. Petersburg the shady side of the hospitals was so notoriously unfavorable to the sick soldier, that the Czar decreed it into disuse.

The shade-trees about our dwellings have done much to make our wives and daughters pale, feeble, and neuralgic. Trees ought never to stand near enough to our dwellings to cast a shade upon them; and if the blinds were removed, and nothing but a curtain within, with which to lessen on the hottest days the intensity of the heat, it would add greatly to the tone of our nerves and to our general vigor. The piazzas which project over the lower story, always make that less healthy than the upper story, especially for sleeping purposes. I am sure I have cured a great many cases of rheumatism by advising patients to leave bedrooms shaded by trees or piazzas, and sleep in a room and bed which were constantly dried and purified by the direct rays of the sun.—D. Lewis, M. D.

Our Teeth.

They decay. Hence, unseemly mouths, bad breath, imperfect mastication. Everybody regrets it. What is the cause? I reply, want of cleanliness. A clean tooth never decays. The mouth is a warm place—98 degrees. Particles of meat between the teeth soon decompose. Gums and teeth must suffer.

Perfect cleanliness will preserve the teeth to old age. How shall it be secured? Use a quill pick, and rinse the mouth after eating. Brush and Castile soap every morning; the brush with simple water on going to bed. Bestow this trifling care upon your precious teeth, you will keep them and ruin dentists. Neglect it, and you will be sorry all your lives. Children forget. Watch them. The first teeth determine the character of the second set. Give them equal care.

Sugar, acids, saleratus, and hot things are nothing when compared with food decomposing between the teeth. Mercurialization may loosen the teeth, long use may wear them out, but keep them clean and they will never decay. This advice is worth more than thousands of dollars to every boy and girl.

Books have been written on this subject. This brief article contains all that is essential.—Sel.

Use of Tobacco.

It has been carefully estimated by physicians that in the United States, 20,000 persons die annually from the use of tobacco. In Germany physicians have calculated that, of all the deaths which occur between the ages of eighteen and twenty-six, one half originate in the waste of the constitution by smoking. Tobacco exhausts and deranges the nervous powers, and produces a long train of nervous and other diseases, to which the stomach is liable, and especially those forms that go under the name of dyspepsia. It also exerts a disastrous influence on the mind. I am personally acquainted with several individuals now at Lunatic Asylums, whose mind first became impaired by the use of tobacco.

☞ Those who are not in the neighborhood of bakers and cannot procure the fermentation called yeast, may make a better substitute as follows:—Boil one pound of flour, a quarter of a pound of brown sugar and a little salt, in two gallons of water for an hour. When milk-warm bottle and cork it close, and it will be ready for use in twenty-four hours.—Scientific American,

☞ A writer in the St. Louis Republican furnishes a cure for hiccup, a remedy which he says he has never known to fail during an experience of twenty years. He says that it can be cured immediately by the mere placing of the palm of the hand of any person upon the pit of the stomach of the one afflicted, and a persistent stare of the eye of the sufferer into that of the one who undertakes the cure,

Coming Struggle.

Tune.—Annie Lyle.

Lift thine eyes, refrain from weeping,
Children of the Lord;
Watchful while the world is sleeping,
Trusting in his word.
Raise your heads, redemption's dawning,
Hear the watchmen cry;
See the rosy gleam of morning,
Hail! our King is nigh.

CHORUS.
Sing anthems, pilgrim strangers,
Let your praises ring.
Heavenly music let us waken
To our coming King.

Soon will close our night of weeping,
Let us watch and pray;
Spotless now our garments keeping,
Looking for the day,—
When in glory bright descending,
Jesus shall come down,
With angelic hosts attending,
Saints receive their crown.

Then beside life's crystal river,
In an endless day,
The spotless bride shall live forever,
Where the sunbeams play.
Ever mid pure Eden's bowers
Blooms the lily fair,
Sharon's rose and fragrant flowers
Scent the balmy air.

CHORUS.
Where saints and angels singing,
Golden sunbeams shine,
Melody is ever ringing
In that happy clime.

Hark! the sweet angelic chorus,—
Ever with the Lord,
Rising, swelling, rolling o'er us,—
Ever with the Lord.
Peal on peal the harps are ringing—
O the melting strains!
All creation joins in singing—
The Messiah reigns!

Literal Resurrection of the Dead.

BISHOP NEWTON ON THE COMING AGE.

Revelations 20: 4–6. The first resurrection. The great question here to be considered is, whether this resurrection should be literally or figuratively understood. We shall endeavor to state the argument on both sides with brevity and candor. In favor of a literal interpretation we shall quote Bishop Newton, who remarks in the general that "there shall be such a happy period as the millennium; that 'the kingdom, and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High' (Dan. 7: 27); that Christ 'shall have the heathen for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for (his) possession' (Ps. 2: 8); that 'the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea' (Isa. 11: 9); that the 'fulness of the Gentiles shall come in,' and that 'all Israel shall be saved' (Rom. 11: 25, 26); in a word, that the kingdom of heaven shall be established upon the earth, is the plain and express doctrine of Daniel and all the prophets, as well as of St. John; and we daily pray for the accomplishment of it in praying, 'Thy kingdom come!' But of all the prophets John is the only one who hath declared particularly and in express terms, that the martyrs shall rise to partake of the felicities of this kingdom, and that it shall continue upon earth a thousand years; and the Jewish church before him, and the Christian church after him, have further believed and taught that these thousand years will be the seventh Millenary of the world."

The learned prelate here cites several passages from the Rabbis and the early christian fathers, to the same general effect; and in particular from Justin Martyr, who in the second century certainly maintained that this resurrection of the martyrs was to be literally understood, and that Jesus Christ would descend from heaven and reign with his saints personally in Jerusalem: and that at the end of this thousand years should follow the general resurrection and the final judgment. It is granted that these opinions were afterwards carried to a pitch of extravagance, which sank them into disrepute; but they were again purified and revived, and among the moderns have been ably and strenuously defended by Mr. Jos. Mede, Dr. Thos. Burnett, Dr. Jno. Gill, Mr. Faber, Mr. Frere, Dr. Hales, and others, on the same principles as Bishop Newton already cited.

The Bishop lays considerable stress on the fifth verse, which asserts that "the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished," or after the resurrection of the saints. Both passages he contends must be understood in the same manner. If the martyrs rise only in a spiritual sense, then the rest of the dead rise only in a spiritual sense; but if the "rest of the dead" really rise, then the martyrs rise in the same manner. So argues this great man, and with great force.

Now we will examine the ground for the opposition to these views. On the other hand it must be admitted, says our informant, that this doctrine of a literal resurrection and the personal reign of Christ on the earth, met with early opposition, particularly from Origen, and Dionysius of Alexandria. It never was received as the universal opinion of the Christian church, and the most eminent expositors of modern times lean decidedly the other way; that is, to the figurative, or, as they say, spiritual interpretation of this "mysterious" passage. Among the number who thus interpret this passage are the following: Dr. Whitby, Prof. Witseus, Pres. Edwards, Mr. Lowman, Dr. Guise, Dr. Hopkins, Dr. Johnson, Mr. Fuller, Mr. T. Scott, Dr. Bogue, and Dr. Boothroyd. Dr. Doddridge and Archdeacon Woodhouse hesitate. The ground on which these reason is the same old lie of the Devil, namely, the immortality of the soul. But we will give their own statements. 1st. This resurrection must not be literally explained, they argue, because the removal of saints and martyrs from heaven to earth for a thousand years would, so far from being a reward for their fidelity, prove a deterioration to their happiness; especially while the world is subject to sin and sorrow, which must evidently be the case till after the defeat of Gog and Magog. They cannot suppose the saints in heaven will be gratified to leave their celestial thrones for earthly ones below, much less to fight with infidels.

The idea (say they) of our Lord himself leaving his seat upon the Father's throne in glory to occupy one on earth seems still more unscriptural and absurd. He has told us repeatedly and emphatically that his "kingdom is not of this world," and shall he, after all the glories of this exaltation, stoop to wield an earthly sceptre? And is he personally again to recommence his warfare with the devil? Every way in which this subject can be viewed, either with respect to himself or the saints, it seems utterly inconsistent, both with Scripture and common sense.

Let us compare the above language with a few scriptures on this subject: Acts 2: 30; Rev. 3: 21; Matt. 19: 28; Dan. 7: 27. We might examine still further, and show how inconsistent good and wise men have been and still are, by believing the old dogma of the devil—the immortality of the soul. On the great subjects of the coming kingdom, and the resurrection of the dead, they are blind guides. They make void the truth of God by "teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." The further we follow these spiritualizers of the word, the further we get into the fog, and the less likely to get out. The Lord help us to "hold fast the form of sound words." J. M. Muhlig.

Vain Philosophy.

The advocates of the seven-year-change theory inform us, that the man who is seventy years old has had ten different bodies, and then inquire which one of the ten is to be raised and rewarded? Granting, for a moment, that the premises of this "vain philosophy" are correct, we find its supporters involved in a more serious dilemma than they had intended to plunge us into. If this theory is true, the body is never over seven years old; therefore the man who is seventy years old should have been a gray-headed man ten times. The last one of his ten bodies is not a day older than the first one. Then why was not the first one as infirm and decrepit as the last one? Why did not his hair turn as white at the age of seven years, as at the age of seventy? Why is not the face as really covered with wrinkles at the age of seven years, as at seventy? And why is the first seven-body frequently only four feet high, while the second one is six? If the second seven-year body can vary so much from the first one of the same age, why cannot each succeeding one vary in the same proportion? And why may not the third body be eight feet, and the fourth be ten feet high? Or, since bodies of the same age—seven years each—vary so much in stature, why may not the fifth body chance to be two feet shorter than its predecessor?

Certainly if this seven-year change theory is correct, the first body, being just as old as the last one, should be mature, full grown, (for if the first one cannot get its growth in seven years, how can the others?) and gray headed, with a wrinkled face, and infirm appearance!!! It surely will not be claimed that the increasing age of the soul which dwells in these bodies produces these results, causing one body, at the age of seven years, to be blooming with youth and vigor, and causing another, of the same age, to be infirm and gray. Is it not folly to cling to a theory which is alike condemned by facts and revelation?

I'm a Pilgrim and a Stranger.

Bro. Grant:—I am striving, amid temptations and cares, to gain that pleasant land which the fathers looked for—that land of pure delights. I feel sometimes that I am indeed a stranger and alone here; no one to speak an encouraging word, no tears of sympathy to strengthen me to carry the ponderous load. But I will by grace bear manfully the trials of life, and, by and by, rest.

There is a rest, a little in the future, for the pilgrim who has labored patiently for his Master. O yes, pilgrim, cheer thee; toiling will soon cease. Soon, if faithful, we shall see Jesus, that long absent friend, coming to claim his waiting bride. Soon, the marriage supper will be spread, and they that have been poor and cast off by the rich and fashionable of earth will have a seat with the Lord at the table.

O, joyful day! when that favored throng will hear the Great Shepherd of the sheep say to his angels, "Go forth, ye heralds, with speed, like the lightning, and gather my jewels,—gather them from distant lands; gather them from their graves. Go to Machpelah's cave, and bring my servants Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and Joseph; don't forget Sarah and Rebekah my handmaids. Haste to yonder cemeteries, and select my chosen; rend those tombs of marble, and say, Children, come home. Fly to yonder distant seashore, and bring him that sleeps in that lone grave; call, in thy flight, to the deep, and say, Give up your dead!"

Blessed!—O, how highly favored will the saints be on that illustrious morning! Endure trials a little longer, and then exchange the painful scenes of mortality for a country where pain will not be known; where the venemous tongue of slander will cease to afflict; where tears will no more be shed, nor hearts be sad.

Then toil, faithful pilgrim,
Be patient and pure;
You'll stand, by and by,
In Eden secure.

Yours in hope. R. K. Shaw.

The End at hand.

The signs of the times show unmistakably that the end is at hand; that the kingdom of God is near even at the doors, and that time cannot last for another nation to rise and fall after this. The generation that witnessed the signs in the sun, moon and stars, says the Savior, shall not pass away till all be fulfilled. We see here and there one left, and it appears that this nation will have drank from the cup of God's fury to the uttermost before they are passed away.

The war of the Revolution was not the cup of God's fury from which this nation was to drink. That war resulted in the declaration of independence, and commenced her existence as a nation. For upwards of eighty years, she has enjoyed an unparalleled degree of prosperity, and has risen to a position among the nations, envied by them all. She has grown proud and haughty. Slavery has cursed her soil; iniquity abounds in every department to a fearful extent, and her cup is full. The sword is doing its work, and the bitter cup is being drank to the dregs. The rulers have set apart days to implore the Almighty to avert the storm of wrath, but the sure word declares "Ye shall certainly drink." It would seem that the example of nations in the past might have been a warning to this one; but with the great light which she has had, she has grown more and more corrupt, and vengeance cannot longer be delayed. She must drink.

We see on every hand evidence to show that the whole world is being gathered to the battle of the great day of God Almighty. It will be a day of gloom, a day of clouds and thick darkness, and "the mighty man shall cry there bitterly."—Zeph. 1: 14. Who does not wish for a change, for a ruler who "shall be King over all the earth"?—Zech. 14: 9. Be glad, brethren, for the time is not far distant when Jesus Christ shall rule in righteousness. While fear is in the hearts of those who live not by faith, who have no hope, and are without God in the world, the christian can truly rejoice, for he knows that his redemption is near. The history of the nations shows that all have failed to devise a perfect form of government, and this nation, with the example of all the nations before her, and with all the enlightenment of the nineteenth century, has also failed. With the mercy and goodness of God shown her continually, she has done despite to the Spirit of grace, and God has left her to her doom. We look abroad and we see the harvest of the earth is nearly ripe; soon the sickle will be thrust in to gather the grapes. The clouds that hang over the earth are daily increasing, and the storm of wrath, the day of vengeance will soon burst in all its fury upon the wicked and ungodly. The Lord will "utter his voice from his holy habitation," and "give a shout as they that tread the grapes against all the inhabitants of the earth." The christian will escape, and be crowned with eternal life through Jesus Christ. He will be made like his Savior to die no more. Watch, brethren; be careful in everything,—in word and deed,—"for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh." Hold fast that thou hast, that no man take thy crown.

"Believing and Confessing."—No. 1.

FROM DR. L. L. HAMLIN.

Bro. Grant:—I found the following truthful and interesting sentiments in a sermon by Dr. L. L. Hamblin, on "Believing and confessing." M. D. W.

"2. As to the matter of confession, the context seems to limit it to Christ's resurrection: 'If thou shalt confess . . . and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead.' To understand this, we must regard the spirit of it. Certain acts, in given circumstances, prove sincere piety, when in different circumstances they prove nothing at all. Look at Daniel. Kneeling for prayer by his window, displayed, in the circumstances, heroic zeal for God; but take away the king's decree and den of lions, and suppose his prayers offered up in the city of Jerusalem, where the most profane Jew observed the custom, and this act of Daniel's loses all its force. Another example is the conduct of the three 'Hebrew Worthies.' Not to worship idols on Mount Zion was common to all classes, whether pious or profane. But in Babylon, where nations bowed down in submission to royal edicts, enforced by the terrors of a burning fiery furnace, for three captive strangers to resist, and hurl defiance at the monarch in the name of Israel's God, was perilling every earthly interest, and afforded the strongest reproof of sanctity and zeal.

In the light of these examples, how evident it is that confessing one offensive feature of christianity may involve a full confession of the system. What that feature is must be determined by the state of public sentiment. In one age or region it may depend on caste; in another on the practice of polygamy; and in a third, on false histories or 'traditions' which cherish natural vanity or profane superstitions, and are in conflict with the doctrines or chronologies of Scripture.

In Paul's day the resurrection was peculiarly offensive, and concentrated on itself the sum total of the odium which fell upon christianity. Christ was slain as a deceiver. Except by his disciples he was abhorred above mankind. His resurrection would not only draw after it his God-head, but would infer upon his crucifiers unexampled guilt. It was therefore the question of the times—the point of desperate conflict between Christ's friends and foes. When persecution raged, it was directed to that point, and met by the specific testimony of the unresisting martyrs, a testimony cheerfully sealed in their own blood. Surely this was a plenary confession, involving faith in Christ's God-head, atonement, and offices—in the inward work of the Spirit—in every doctrine of his word, and in his promises, even to that 'exceeding precious' one, 'He that loveth his life for my sake shall find it.'

Thus the brief form of confession in the context was made all comprehensive by those existing circumstances which, whenever they return, will stamp that form with its original force and meaning. But to confess Christ's resurrection in the midst of present Christendom, would scarcely pledge a man to decent orthodoxy, and might leave him suspected of the grossest infidelity. Of course true confession must be made more explicit. When popular sentiment moves man not to deny but acknowledge Christ as the true God and risen Savior, if the disciple would bear the cross of true confession, he must go some steps beyond that offensive summary to those features which now come under the ban of public prejudice.

Maintaining these with the firmness of a martyr, he will show that he is not ashamed of Christ, or of his word; for religion still has unwelcome features, and always will have to unsanctified minds. Moreover, she will be subject to that milder persecution, which, when it does not bind and burn, will turn its victim over to contempt and ridicule. * * * What doctrinal test can now separate the true christian from an orthodox, guilty world? The unity of God was a badge to the Jew, but none to Christ's disciple, for all Jewry held it; and to Christ's very crucifiers it might have been said, Ye believe 'there is no God; . . . the devils also believe.' The resurrection was, in turn, a badge to the apostles, but it can be none to us; for now to the worst blasphemer it may be said, 'Thou believest Christ is risen,—devils also believe.' These ancient tests are obsolete in Christendom, unless arrayed against a haggard infidelity which lingers here or there in low and vulgar haunts."

Prayer.

How good to plead with God in prayer,
When he indites the thought—
To ask for blessings rich and rare
Upon a christian's heart!

To feel the witness deep within,
That God is reigning there;
That 't is his mission to indite,
As well as answer prayer.

How sweet to feel when thus engaged,
There's power in prayer for good;
Feel peace pervading all our frame,
Feel swallowed up in God!

When he indites the heart grows warm,
And with his love dilates;
If 't is for christians that we pray,
What joy the effort meets.

There seems a bleeding heart with heart,
Although we're far away,
And joy comes welling, gushing up,
When thus in faith we pray.

Or, if for sinners cold and dead,
We lift our voice in prayer,
And God indites, oh how we pray,
"O God, in mercy spare!"

We plead and plead, and plead again,
In earnest, fervent strains,
And feel we cannot be denied
Till God unloose their chains.

O brother, sister, do you know
What power there is in prayer,
What peace, what joy, what glory too,
And yet refuse a share?

O God of grace, enlarge our hearts,
And fear dispel, we pray;
Let thy bright glories enter in,
Like an unclouded day.

"By their fruits ye shall know them."

So said the great Head of the church, in speaking of men. He would have his followers be careful how they judge, lest they should do so unjustly. Still he would not leave them without a rule by which they might know with whom they were associating. By their fruits, then, shall ye know them. "A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit."

This is true of men, but will this rule not work equally as well when applied to other things? The illustration of the tree given by our Savior is proof that it will, and hence there can be no serious objection to our making an application of the same rule to doctrines.

Every doctrine in the world, when fully embraced, produces its own effect. This can be seen in the history of heathenism, Mohammedanism, Romanism, Protestantism, and its various sub-divisions. Now the principles of these systems in their action upon the minds of men produce entirely different effects, no two of them the same; consequently their fruits as seen in the habits of those who endorse their doctrines or principles are just as distinguishable as are the fruits of a good tree from that of a bad one. A peach, an apple, a lemon, an orange, or bitter and sweet, cannot be more easily distinguished from each other than are the effects of the above named systems.

This being true, it is evident that the real worth and good of any doctrine or system of teaching may be determined by the effect that it works for good or evil in the daily walk of those who endorse it. If then I see a man who embraces a doctrine, the principles of which when fully adopted have a tendency to make the man purer at heart and better in character than he formerly was, I conclude that there must to say the least be some truth in the doctrine. For truth always produces the same effect. Truth never makes one man act one way and another man a different way. The gospel never makes a heathen a Jew, but a Christian; and whether it be among Jews, Greeks, or barbarians that the gospel is preached, it always if believed produces the same effect. So likewise it is with doctrines: each and every one of them produce their own legitimate fruits. Hence when I see men embracing a doctrine that makes them contentious, self-conceited, loose in their morals, and irregular in their habits, I conclude at once that they do not believe the truth, or else they most shamefully belie their profession. If it is the former, then certain it is we may know the doctrine by its fruit. If the latter, then such should on no wise be tolerated or regarded as christians; so that, in either case, the true believer need not be deceived.

The gospel "is the power of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth"; that is, the means by which God will make man a fit subject for salvation. That the gospel can do this is evident from what it already has done, as can be seen in the history of Apostolic times. Then the gospel converted men—not their heads only, but their hearts also. It completely changed, purified and renovated man as a moral and intellectual being, making him a new creature in Christ Jesus. It caused him to break off his sins by righteousness, and to be sober and temperate in all things. Then the gospel not only enlightened the mind, but restored him to the favor of his God, inspiring him with the Holy Spirit, and shedding abroad in his heart the love of God; in fact, it made him a new man. These are some of the fruits of the gospel as seen in the lives of those who believed it in all its purity. Then the church could live together in union, rejoicing in hope and in the communion of the Holy Spirit. Then they could love and forbear with each other in patience.

Taking the gospel then as a standard, there is no difficulty in judging and knowing other doctrines or systems by their fruits. By their fruits, then, know the nature of doctrines as well as of men.

One Error begets another.

"Minutes are but drops in the great ocean of eternity."

Let us take a common sense view of the above declaration. Can minutes form any portion of eternity? No. Eternity has no measurement. It cannot be bounded up nor down, hither nor thither. It is beyond the power of any finite mind to comprehend its extent, and by itself it has no bounds. Let us suppose a man placed here on earth, and it was made known to him that he would eternally live here. Do you suppose that man could comprehend the end of that eternal life? Nay. Minutes can form no portion of time unless it is limited time. Minutes form a portion of an hour or day, month or year, or a century; for here is limitation, and the passing of minutes closes up the time to its end. But in unlimited time by the eternal passing of minutes the end never can be reached. Consequently, from reason and the nature of things, I am led to believe that a minute forms no portion of eternity. Upon this hypothesis I am still further led to believe that it is wrong to teach a theory to the world that has no foundation in truth.

Reader, do you believe in endless misery? If so, read God's word with a view to understanding it rightly, and I can but believe you will denounce the doctrine as absurd as the above declaration at the commencement of this article.

The Brotherhood of Saints.

THE ELEVENTH COMMANDMENT.

"A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another."—John 13: 34.

In Lev. 19: 18, the fiat of Jehovah commands us to love our neighbor as ourselves. But are there not many who profess to know God, and do not keep the most important commands of sacred writ? A man or a woman may as well pretend to have power to dethrone Deity, as to be in the possession of the humble and quiet religion of the dear Savior, and at the same time despise a brother or sister, because such are poor. Now I wish to bring to view that spiritual relationship and friendship that must exist and manifest itself among the true and faithful followers of the Lamb.

"Who are my brethren?" Matt. 12: 48. This question was asked by our dear Savior, and was also answered by Him in Matt. 12: 49, 50. The divine teacher plainly shows us that our kindred were of very small consequence, in comparison to that spiritual connection brought about by the renovating power of the Holy Ghost; by which we are brought nigh to God, and into union and communion with our dear Lord, and into fellowship with his saints. What are the fruits of the Spirit? Coldness, or hatred, or to feel above a brother or sister because they are poor, or not in quite so high standing in the world as ourselves? No indeed! Such is not the fruit of the lovely spirit of Jesus, that being who is the "chiefest among ten thousand" and "altogether lovely." But the fruit of this spirit is love, joy, peace, gentleness and kindness.

I do not wish to cast any reflections on any person, or wound any one's feelings; but in kindness would ask the candid reader, if the number is not very small who live up to the rules of the gospel, and are governed by the holy principle of divine love?

In Rom. 13: 10, we are informed, that "love worketh no ill to his neighbor; therefore love is the fulfilling of the law." In Gal. 5: 14, it is declared, that "all the law is fulfilled in one word, even in this; Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." And in 1 Pet. 3: 8, we have many particular points brought to view, as follows: "Finally, be ye all of one mind, having compassion one of another; love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous." Dear reader, do you think that you and I will ever get into the kingdom, unless those christian graces are prominent in our daily walk and dealings with our brethren in the Lord? If we do think so, we are doomed to disappointment; and I am afraid there are many among our Advent brethren, who pray long and loud, and still are far from coming up to the plain yet positive requirements of the gospel.

In 1 John 3: 14, we have the word of inspiration, that gives us the rule by which we know whether we are the true heirs of life; that is, if we "love the brethren;" and, "he that loveth not his brother, abideth in death," or the sentence of eternal death will remain against him. Every true and humble child of God should read the whole chapter (1 John 3) through each day, till he has it all by heart, and is fully governed by the rules therein contained.

In 2 Pet. 1: 5, the Apostle brings to view the different christian graces that must be added to faith. When he comes to brotherly kindness, charity must be added, or joined with it, which, I suppose, means love. I remember of hearing a preacher refer to this subject in a sermon twenty years ago; and when he came to these words, "brotherly kindness," he made a pause for a few moments, and said: "When I was a little boy, I can remember that christians loved one another so fervently, and were so kind to each other, that when they were about to meet in the road, and when they were in sight of each other, they would begin to walk faster to get hold of each other's hand; and when they were some way apart, they would reach out the hand towards each other, and would shake hands as though they felt it in their very hearts. This, my dear brethren, would look like brotherly love!" "But," said the preacher, "we can see brethren and sisters passing by each other in the streets, at the present time, without noticing each other." And we may say at this period of time, the pride and fashion of this evil world leads some so far astray, they do not notice their poor brethren and sisters, forgetting that God has "chosen the poor of this world rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he has promised to them that love him."

Brethren and sisters, let us be the humble children of our heavenly Father, and ready to go into the kingdom when Christ comes. B. Perham.

Souls of Men.

The following passage occurs in the course of a letter: "A clergyman of undoubted veracity told me, not long since, that that are pastors in Virginia sustained by investments arising from the sale of negroes. It is done after this manner: The pious master is about to die, and bequeaths his slaves, or a portion of them, to the church of which he is a member. The church offers the poor unfortunates to the highest bidder, and the price of flesh and blood is thrown into the Lord's(?) treasury for the support of the minister. In the 18th of Revelation, predictive of the overthrow of Babylon, where the merchants are represented as weeping and mourning because no man buyeth their merchandise any more, what is meant by the mention of 'slaves and the souls of men,' as among that merchandise?"—M. Harbinger.

How to Disarm an Enemy.

It is said that bees and wasps will not sting a person whose skin is imbued with honey. Hence those who are much exposed to the venom of these little creatures, when they have occasion to hive bees, or to take a nest of wasps, smear their faces and hands with honey, which is found to be the best preservative. When we are annoyed with insults, persecution, and opposition from perverse and malignant men, the defence against their venom is to have our spirit bathed in honey. Let every part be saturated with meekness, gentleness, forbearance, and patience; and the most spiteful enemy will be disappointed in his endeavors to inflict a sting. We shall remain uninjured while his venom returns to corrode his own malignant bosom; or, what is far better, the honey with which he comes into contact will neutralize his gall; the coals of forgiving love will dissolve his hatred, and the good rendered for evil, will overcome evil with good.—Golden Rule.

Our Influence.

Is it right to give our influence in support of that which is based upon error, although it may have the appearance of being good or that good will result from it? is a question with some that seems to be hard to decide upon; perhaps upon the principle that God will bring good out of evil; or that we may do evil that good may come,—which of the two is the incentive to action, I am unable to decide. God can and does often bring good out of evil; but because of this fact shall we encourage evil? shall we give our time, our money and support to that system or institution which is decidedly opposed to the great truths which we love and advocate, and which use the same means to the uttermost to tear down, uproot and overthrow the most precious truths of God's word? There is nothing plainer than the fact that two systems so diametrically opposed to each other as modern theology, and Bible theology, do not belong to the same great author. Then it follows that modern theology is not based upon God's truth. Then is it right in the sight of God to give our influence in support of that error in any form or manner? Are we not really operating against the truth when we do?

That arch demon has been nearly six thousand years advocating his untruth, and in his wily way of preparing things to look like truth—of giving them the appearance of being good. He has duped multitudes, and is no less crafty to-day than he has ever been. He will stamp the name of christian, benevolent, charitable, etc., upon them when the proceeds of such institutions are used to advance the truth.

I fear that we as christians who are looking for the soon coming of our Judge, when we must give an account of every action as well as for the use of the talent he may have entrusted to our care, are not careful enough of exerting our influence, however small it may be, in the right direction. Let us ever remember that when we are not gathering for Christ we are scattering abroad. We "cannot serve two masters," neither can we gather for Christ and his enemy at the same time; neither can we hold the world and its pleasures in one hand, and Christ in the other. Did we not when we were baptized into Christ's death die to the world, rise to newness of life, that we should walk no more with the world? Have we continued to walk in the same way? Do we love the precious truth as we then did, and make as great sacrifices for it? We then came out from among those who opposed it. Where are we now? If it was right for us to come out, it is right for us to keep out. If it was right for us to embrace the truth, it is right to retain it. If it is worth anything, it is worth everything, or any sacrifice we may be called to make for it. I do not mean by this that we should condemn everybody else that may differ with us, or be unsociable and unfriendly. We can use them with christian kindness, and yet stand firm upon the rock of truth, making no compromises with that which is opposed to it.

We have got the truth; let us keep it. "Buy the truth and sell it not," said one of old. It is worth buying at any sacrifice, even our good reputation, or friends, honor, riches, worldly pleasure, or life itself if need be, and yet get a bargain. Did not Christ suffer all these for us, and shall the servant be above his master? O how few there are that love to suffer for Christ! How much we like the good things of this life—wealth, honor, riches—forgetting that the reproach of Christ is greater riches than this world can give. O! let us seek the true riches, and the honor that cometh from above,—the wealth of that fair city of gold, and a name that shall be written in the Lamb's book of life, that we may have part in the first resurrection, on whom the second death can have no power. Let us see to it that there is no mark of the beast nor a trace of his image left upon us. Let us take our influence from him wholly, and give it to Christ. We shall then be upon the right side; for Christ shall conquer, and we may through him come off more than conquerors and reign with him forever. Amen. S. K. Gibson.

Tremont Campmeeting.

The Tremont campmeeting was near the ruins of the Tremont Iron works, West Wareham, Mass., on the Cape Cod R. R., about fifty miles from Boston. It commenced Tuesday evening, and continued over the Lord's day. The following preaching brethren were present: H. L. Hastings, H. F. Carpenter, F. H. Burbank, Geo. Waugh, E. W. Barrows, Benj. Batchelor, Wm. Faunce. The meeting was held in a pleasant grove, about half a mile east of the depot. An excellent meeting was held at the same place last year. Brethren and sisters came in from New Bedford, Fairhaven, Plymouth, Boston, and various other towns, to help praise the God of heaven, whose Son, our Savior, we expect to return soon to introduce order upon this distracted planet.

We did not arrive at the ground till Thursday evening. Friday morning, July 4th, was spent very pleasantly and profitably in an excellent social meeting in the New Bedford tent. It was a season of refreshing from the Lord. Many spoke of their joys in him, and were thankful for their "blessed hope." We all felt like contrasting our heavenly situation in the quiet grove, with the noisy scenes of the day where the world seek their amusement. At times, we could hear the distant roar of cannon, commemorating deeds of blood, and felt thankful that we had no desire to be any nearer than we were. We were cheered with the thought that in a little while, we shall be eternally away from the sound of war, and everything of that nature. Wives and mothers were present whose loved ones are now on the battle-field, or filling a soldier's grave. Tears would often fill their eyes, as they spoke of their happy Eden home. These were caused by fears that their warrior sons and husbands would fail to meet them in the kingdom. In the hour of temptation, they had laid by the christian armor and taken carnal weapons. Instead of standing up for Jesus, as "peace-makers," and loving their enemies, they are seeking their heart's blood. Instead of gathering with the Lord, they have been gathered by the spirits of demons to the slaughter field. These were saddening thoughts, and cast a gloom over our joyous scene. Notwithstanding all this, we heard many say they never before spent a fourth of July so pleasantly. We were all glad we were there, and had no desire to mingle in the popular crowd. If our nation thought best to make so much ado over political freedom, and the event which separated them from a foreign power; we felt it right to meet and rejoice "in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free" from the bondage of sin, the separation from the army of Satan, and union with the army of the Lord. We all felt the most perfect confidence in our Captain, and sure of victory, unless we took up "carnal weapons."

Several who had put off a part of the christian armor, were fully equipped again for the war, resolved never more to retreat, nor be found again in the enemy's ranks, clothed in rebel armor. Faint-hearted ones gained courage, weak souls were made strong, and sinners trembled at the voice of their testimony. Young converts from Plymouth came in to cheer our hearts, and stimulate the weary to press on for new victories. The day will be joyfully remembered by many who were present; and we trust that some will secure eternal life in consequence of this meeting; which is more than we would venture to say of the combined moral influence of all the popular 4th of July celebrations in our land. They cause many to backslide, but we never heard of one who was led to love Jesus more, and live a better life because he attended the amusements created by fireworks, balloon ascensions, excursions, regattas, picnics, strawberry festivals, circuses, horse races, fairs, surprise parties, etc., etc., where the world and a backslidden church seek their ephemeral joys, that vanish like the pleasures of a dream. All who seek gratification in such scenes, either never had, have lost, or are losing it in Christ. The pure heart has no desire for such poor substitutes for christian joys. Having tried and found them wanting, the child of God does not wish to feed on husks any longer. Christ becomes all in all to him;—the only fountain affording peace without alloy. Such was the experience of many whose testimonies we heard during the meeting on the Fourth.

Saturday, July 5th, was another good day with us. Many resolved to be more like Jesus, and separate themselves more fully from the world, and all bad habits. As a result of this decision, between ten and twenty abandoned the filthy and unhealthy habit of using tobacco. It was a scene of very lively interest, when they gave up their idols. The first one, who decided to leave off this unhealthy stimulant, was a young convert, who had used it for many years. At the close of the sermon, in which a few of the effects of this noxious weed were pointed out, he came up to the preachers' stand, and deposited in our keeping a large "plug of tobacco." Others, seeing the worthy deed of this young convert, though past the meridian of life in years, at once came forward and imitated his noble example; some giving up their "plugs," others their pipes and snuff boxes, which made quite a bundle. We took the disgusting package home, that we might preserve these witnesses to testify against them, if they ever, like the dog, turn to "their own vomit again." But we trust they will never be conquered again by tobacco. We were forcibly reminded of the time in the days of the apostles, when "many that believed came, and confessed, and showed their deeds," and "brought their books together, and burned them before all men."

Our evening meeting in the tent was a blessed one, when many were greatly comforted, especially those who had just resolved to leave off their bad habits. Thus closed the week, and we could truly say the Lord had been our "helper."

Lord's day, July 6th. This was a very warm day. At 8 1-2 o'clock we gathered for a love-feast and had an excellent one. We heard over a hundred testimonies in seventy minutes. We expect to enjoy but a few more such scenes before the coming of Christ. It was a heavenly season for the lovers of Jesus.

At the hour of preaching, some three hundred came in from New Bedford, and hundreds flocked together from the surrounding country. The large audience behaved well and gave good attention to the preaching. Many seemed anxious to know the truth of the doctrine we preach, and some became fully satisfied, who came full of doubts.

The baptism, by Bro. Carpenter, was witnessed by a crowd of interested spectators. The candidates came out shouting the praises of the Lord, being greatly comforted.

In the evening, we sat down to a long table, spread under the trees, to commemorate the dying love of our Savior. Many eyes were wet with tears at the sight, while the peace and love of God filled our hearts. We shall long remember that scene.

Thus closed our excellent campmeeting. We think it has accomplished much good. Many have been quickened in divine life, backsliders reclaimed, and sinners awakened. We trust some of the seed sown will spring up unto "everlasting life."—G.

Exposition of 1 Cor. 3: 13--15.

Bro. Grant:—Will you please give an explanation through the Crisis of 1 Cor. 3: 13–15? G. F. Whitney.

The text reads as follows:—"Every man's work shall be made manifest; for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is. If any man's work abide which he hath built thereupon, he shall receive a reward. If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss; but he himself shall be saved, yet so as by fire."

In order to get the entire subject before the mind of the reader, it may be necessary to look at the context:—

"Now he that planteth and he that watereth are one: and every man shall receive his own reward according to his own labor. For we are laborers together with God: ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building. According to the grace of God which is given unto me, as a wise masterbuilder, I have laid the foundation, and another buildeth thereon. But let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon. For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ. Now if any man build upon this foundation gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble; every man's work shall be made manifest: for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire: and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is. If any man's work abide which he hath built thereupon, he shall receive a reward. If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss: but he himself shall be saved; yet so as by fire. Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are."

It will be seen at a glance that the "laborers," or workmen, are the ministers of the gospel, and hence this scripture is not of universal application. Paul says, "We are laborers together with God." What is the "work" of these preachers or laborers? The answer is obvious,—to persuade men to be christians. Suppose Paul, or any other one, with earnest labor night and day, succeeds in leading several men to repent, and follow Christ; and after a time those same men go back to the world and trample upon the truth of God, and are finally burnt up. In this example, the preacher's work does not "abide," and he has lost all his labor. To illustrate: suppose a man builds a house, and soon after he moves into it, the flames burn it to the ground, and he barely escapes with his life. In this case his work "is burned,"—it does not "abide"; consequently, he suffers "loss, but he himself" is "saved; yet so as by fire." So it is with the "laborers" in the vineyard of the Lord. Much of their work is ruined by Satan. All such is lost labor. They have toiled, watched, fasted and prayed in vain. Like "wood, hay, stubble," it is only fit to be burned at last. The "laborers" have wrought to no profit.

On the other hand, when those they persuade to be christians continue faithful, they "receive a reward,"—they will rejoice with them in the coming kingdom; or as Daniel expresses it, "They that turn many to righteousness" "shall shine" "as the stars for ever and ever." Paul expresses the same fact, when he says:—"For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming? For ye are our glory and joy."—1 Thess. 2: 19, 20. Had these Thessalonian brethren departed from the Lord, and at last been found "worthy of death," then Paul's labor would have been lost; because his work did not "adide."—G.

Concord.

The church in Concord is doing well. Their social meetings are very refreshing seasons. Three more have been baptized, making thirty-four in all. They are making earnest efforts to be ready for the coming of the Son of Man. It is really a blessing to hear their hearty testimonies, expressing their ardent desires to see Jesus. They are evidently among those who "love his appearing," and consequently have a good hope.

The "Try Company" is doing nobly. They see the importance of the little word TRY. Through the blessing of the Lord, it has already accomplished wonders for them; and they feel resolved to keep trying to be good, and to be ready to meet the Savior at his appearing. They love the school of Christ, and he loves to teach them. It is very pleasant to hear their prayers and testimonies in our meetings. They have begun well. May the Lord enable them to continue faithful to the end, and obtain the prize of eternal life.—G.

At Home Again.

After an absence of nearly two months, I find myself again in Boston, much recruited by my recent tour, and fresh for renewed labor. Have been among old friends in Vermont and New York. After leaving Waterbury, where my last communication was dated, I went to Addison, where I spent the most of my time. In this place I took my first charge as pastor of a church, and tarried with that people about five years. I was glad at this time to find them in an apparently prosperous condition—this is certainly so if large and attentive congregations are a criterion by which we may judge. Eld. D. T. Ross continues his earnest labors with them as their pastor. Bro. Munger spent several days with us in Addison, much to the acceptance of the brethren. God grant that after these many years of praying and laboring, suffering and hoping, we may be found ready for the blessed and speedy coming of our Lord.—M.

Emphatic Diaglott.

Bro. C. G. Carre, Blackstone, Mass., wishes a description of the Emphatic Diaglott, published by Benjamin Wilson, Geneva, Ill.

It is an "interlineary translation;" that is, it contains a line of Griesbach's Greek text, and directly under it, a word for word translation in English. Besides this, a marginal column, about one third the width of the page, contains the new translation properly arranged, with several variations from the "word for word translation." At the bottom of the page are important foot notes and references. This is a valuable translation for the mere English scholar; and for all Bible students. The translators are believers in the Bible doctrine that the dead are unconscious, and are dependent on a resurrection for future life. We have between twenty and thirty translations, and we consider this the most reliable one among them all, so far as giving a faithful rendering of the original is concerned. We are very glad it has come out at this time. It was needed. The New Testament is now published as far as Galatians. Judging from the past issues, we think it will be completed by next spring. The price is $4.00 for the entire work; and we consider it richly worth the money. Those who wish it should send their orders to Benj. Wilson, Geneva, Ill.—G.

☞ We have just received a supply of the "Saint's Inheritance," by Wm. Shepherd. It is a new edition in improved style. Price 8 cents single, postage one cent; 1-4th off per dozen. Send in your orders, and set them to preaching.—G.

A new Tract.—"Witchcraft Unveiled; or the voice of God against Spiritualism." This is a good tract by Bro. H. V. Reed, of Harvard, Ill. Price 5 cents single, postage one cent. For sale at this office.—G.

Ghostology; or the existence of immaterial men in earth, heaven, and hell. By Eld. Wm. Sheldon. Every body should have a copy. Price 10 cents single, postage one cent; 1-4th off per dozen; $6.00 per one hundred.—G.

Pauline Theology.—A Doctor of Divinity in the Methodist Episcopal church, standing at the head of an important literary institution in New England, after having a copy of Pauline Theology presented to him, remarked, "I think that view of the punishment of the wicked as likely to be the true one as any I know of."

Plans of Napoleon.

It is very evident that Napoleon III. is anxious to have the controlling influence in the United States, and that he will improve every favorable opportunity to accomplish such a result. It is being advocated in France that there is even now a just cause for the Emperor to interfere as mediator in our national affairs. He knows full well how to keep upon the top of the popular wave; and we expect to see him rise to the highest pinnacle of worldly fame, before his final fall "into perdition." A French Protectorate over Louisiana is already intimated. A Paris correspondent of the Courrier des Etats Unis, a French paper published in New York, says:—

"The pecuniary aid which Mr. Lincoln has offered to Juarez would certainly justify more than an offer of mediation between the North and South on our part. He who furnishes our enemy with money, furnishes him with arms. The Emperor would therefore have the right to intervene, in his turn, in the American conflict. The right is incontestable. I still hope that the Senate will remove these reasons of just complaint, and refuse to ratify the treaty concluded by Mr. Corwin with Juarez, until the war with the latter and ourselves will be ended. To act otherwise would be a veritable provocation, and its authors would alone be responsible for the consequences.

If the United States furnish France with just reason for revenge, by giving assistance to her enemies, they will place with their own hands, Louisiana and all the Southern Confederacy under a French protectorate, as England and Spain have placed Mexico under it, and we shall perhaps see, under Napoleon III., the resurrection of the 'New France' of our fathers, the dismemberment of which commenced under Louis XV., and was completed under Napoleon."

A distinguished gentleman, when writing from Europe says:—

"The policy of Napoleon is tortuous and mysterious, and is not to be trusted. He has set himself up as the arbiter of Europe, and his ambition would lead him to play the same rule in America. There are many signs which authorize the belief that he would like to mediate in our domestic question, or, failing in that, to intervene. The movements of his Minister, M. Mercier, have been any thing but satisfactory, and I have it from pretty good authority that since his visit to Richmond he regards the restoration of the Union as impracticable."

"France has no interests in the American Continent of her own, and no question with Mexico which required the extraordinary course that has recently been adopted. Consequently, in breaking the terms to which those powers agreed at London, some special object must be contemplated. It is easy to understand that with the beverage of Mexico, Louis Napoleon might, if so disposed, threaten us with an alliance of that country to the Cotton States, unless we adopted its counsel and accepted terms of separation. He is quite capable of that or any other policy by which the interest or glory of his dynasty could be augmented. And you may rely upon it that there is some such object in view."

It is evident that events are rapidly approaching a grand crisis, that will make all hearts quail that are not centered in Christ. The popular religion of the day will be found insufficient to sustain its fashionable votaries, when the storm-cloud bursts upon this wicked world. Only "the pure in heart" will be ready. We have but a little time left to prepare for "the marriage supper of the Lamb."—G.

Aristocratic Christianity.

It is enough to make one almost disgusted with the word "chistianity," when we see how its professors are living in these "last days." We do not wonder that sensible men say, when referring to cases like the following account from the New York Tribune, "If this is christianity, I am well enough off without it."

TROUBLE IN AN UP-TOWN CHURCH.

"Some time since a gentleman in good standing in the community, who is a member of an up-town Baptist church, purchased a fashionably located pew, for which he paid the munificent sum of $1,000. In the course of a little time he met with reverses, and among other effects at the mercy of his creditors was his pew in the church. This fell to the lot of a practical working mechanic, who decided that he would worship his God in this edifice, and with his family would, on the Sabbath, occupy the $1,000 pew for that purpose. Accordingly, he and his family attended regularly and respectably the services of the sanctuary, but his social status became known to the 'ladies and gentlemen' who occupied pews adjacent to his, in the middle aisle, and they presumed to criticise every and the minutest act of the new-comers. The mode of shutting their eyes during prayer, their unusual attention and apparent devotion during the services, their uniform vulgar practice of remaining till the close of service, their going to church in stormy weather without using a carriage, and other extremely ill-bred peculiarities, all were criticised. As the mechanic and his family retired from the church, the grown boys of the congregation, together with some of the younger misses, would crowd in the vestibule and converse loudly about 'tallow,' 'grease,' 'shoddy coats,' 'calico,' 'leather gloves,' and other kindred subjects, with which the strangers were supposed to be familiar. It appears that the humble but frugal mechanic bore this contumely with creditable christian forbearance, not yielding his rights in any degree, but continuing his attendance upon religious ordinances as usual. The stoicism of the iron pew-holder was an outrage to the devotees of fashion; they appealed to the trustees, the trustees appealed to the mechanic, the mechanic offered to sell out at cost price; the trustees hesitated, and the mechanic retained the pew, attending the church as usual. Being somewhat democratic in his notions of society, and a firm believer in the doctrine of human equality, he introduced to his softly cushioned pew, two colored brethren. This last act was the feather that broke the camel's back. So grave an outrage demanded redress at the hands of the law as a 'disturber of public worship'—an act of annoyance of God's people 'under their own vine and fig tree.'

The mechanic continues his devotions, is passionately fond of music, and elects to look toward the choir while praise is being offered from that locality. Meanwhile the trustees have preferred a charge against him before a police justice for 'disturbing public worship,' on which Mr. Mechanic had to find bail, and the Grand Jury have found a bill against him. His case will be tried soon in the Court of General Sessions. The trustees allege that the reputation of the church demands that they prosecute the case. They contemplate forcing him to sell the pew at a sacrifice, which he considers would not be an equitable financial transaction."

The Horrors of War.

It is said by those who have been on the battle field, that we can form but a very faint idea of its horrors till we become eye-witnesses. They must be seen to be known. The most vivid pen pictures come far short of the reality. The following extract from a correspondent of the Philadelphia Press, dated July 5th, will give us a glimpse at "the horrors of war." It is a description of the retreat of McClellan's army from before Richmond.—G.

"Thousands of dollars worth of property were destroyed because it could not be carried; but the rear guard kept behind the last wagon, not allowing a single team to fall into the enemy's possession. Food was burned, ammunition blown up, whiskey and molasses barrels broached, wagons, with horses dead by the wayside from sheer fatigue, were burned or had every spoke and axle broken. Soldiers threw away their knapsacks, but attentive fatigue parties piled them in vast heaps, and their ashes mocked the rebels, whose utmost exertions were too feeble to secure them. Muskets lying in ditches were bent or broken. Not a single article of all thrown away by that grand army on its grand retreat could be useful to the rebels. Fire and water, the knife and the ax, did their work and did it well.

Still the enemy pressed us, and through all the night the jaded army, with its baggage, had to be urged on. A vast herd of cattle passed me early Monday morning, and, just after it, a drove of a thousand rebel prisoners. I started early, and again witnessed Sunday's fearful scenes.

Wounded and sick limped along many a one, lying down to sleep his last sleep under the grateful shade of the roadside woods. The same confusion of wagons, and soldiers, and cannon, and the paraphernalia of war, blocked the passage; and, in addition to the rebels thundering behind us, and the long, weary, dusty way before, hunger and thirst began to stare us in the face. Thousands had thrown away their haversacks, containing all their food, and not a bite could they procure. Not a stream or a spring could be found anywhere to quench the thirst of the poor soldiers. They lay on the ground drinking from ditches filled with mud and filth. Wells dug with their hands, sometimes furnished a scant supply.

But it was not one-tenth enough for the army; horses died from thirst, and were left lying where they fell. Everywhere could be heard the cry for water, water, though above it sounded loudly the voices of the officers, who urged every one forward. Monday was far more terrible than Sunday. Hunger and thirst came to the aid of secession, in the infliction of deep and painful wounds upon the Union army."

Words of Encouragement.

We would say to the many who send us kind words to cheer us in our editorial duties, that they make our burdens much lighter than they would be if these words of sympathy were withheld. We do not often venture to publish them, but hope to be excused for the following extracts.—G.

Bro. J. C. Libby, Biddeford, Me., writes: "The Crisis is sweet to our taste. We love to pay for such a paper, and invite others to take it. May the Lord bless you with every needed grace, is our prayer."

Dr. Baringer, Mt. Hope, O., writes:—"Of all the papers I receive, I consider the Crisis the best."

Bro. O. G. Trundy, Dover South Mills, Me., writes:—"I like the paper very much. It is a welcome messenger to us. It cheers me while reading the stirring letters from the children, who are looking for the return of the Master.

Bro. W. Brewster, Baraboo, Wis., writes: "I like the Crisis the best of any paper I have ever seen. I place it next to the Bible, and hope it may be supported while time lasts."

Bro. J. W. Sharick, Clarence, writes:—"I like the Crisis much. My father-in-law thinks it is one of the best papers that is printed on religion, though he does not believe in the sleep of the dead."

Sr. E. A. Prescott, New Sharon, Me., writes:—"I can't help noticing how carefully the Crisis is scrutinized by its opposing scoffers. But thank God, every word will bear an examination. I have no fears when I see the most devoted christian, or most lawless infidel perusing its pages. I never before so fully realized the responsibility of an editor."

Retribution.—Dr. K—— writes from Indiana:—

"Retribution is just the thing to circulate where ——'s works are read. Its arguments are unanswerable, and I do hope the book may have a wide circulation."

Obituary Notices.

Died, at Kingsbury, Ind., June 25th, Sarah Atkins, aged nineteen years.

She had been sick a number of weeks of typhoid fever, when her health began to improve, but taking a severe cold, she relapsed into the fever which soon ended her days.

She never made any public profession of religion, but was, nevertheless, a very upright, kind-hearted, and virtuous girl. Her agreeableness of deportment endeared her to a large circle of friends. In her they have lost a pleasant companion. About two weeks before she died, she was impressed with the fact that she should not live. She then manifested some anxiety as to her real condition, and requested that prayer should be offered in her behalf. She remarked that she had not been guilty of making light of religion, but had passed it by carelessly. She remarked, "If I had my life to live over again, I would do quite differently." She warned her companions not to do as she had done—not to put off repentance until they were brought to a sick bed. Before dying, she gave evidence of a change, and then fell asleep, without a struggle or a groan, in hope of a glorious resurrection at the advent of the Redeemer.

Thus has passed away one who was esteemed very highly by companions and neighbors, but more than all, beloved by a father and mother, upon whom this stroke of affliction has fallen, producing almost unconsolable grief. May God's blessing rest upon these bereaved parents and friends who are called to mourn the loss of an affectionate daughter and a sister beloved. F. H. Berick.

Died, in Sandisfield, June 24th, 1862, Louisa, daughter of Theron and Cynthia Wolcott, aged sixteen years.

In the death of Louisa a gentle and obedient daughter is lost, a kind and affectionate sister, and a true and faithful servant in the church. She was one of a family of eight interesting children, the father of whom has not been heard from since a short time after the fall of Fort Sumter. This family, with many others, has felt severely the wickedness of the present great rebellion. Mr. Wolcott was a man whose hands provided for his family, and he went south for the advantage in wages in D. C. When last heard from by his family, he was in Georgia. Louisa loved her father, and said if she could see him again, she could die without one sigh.

Oh! when will strife and tumult cease, and friends of peace be at rest? We had the pleasure of burying Louisa and her two older sisters in the likeness of Christ's death, by baptism, and we hope to meet them all in the glorious resurrection, with several others in Sandisfield, whom we also buried in water, thus illustrating our faith. We find our affections very closely entwined around those whom we have aided in spiritual things. We hope those who shared with Louisa in the baptism, will profit by this sad event; especially may God sanctify it to the good of Sister Mary, who has been a constant companion to Louisa, sharing in her joys and sorrows, since they were baptized together.

During our two years sojourn in Sandisfield, our hearts have often been made glad by the presence of these two at our prayer meetings, when the inclemency of the weather forbade others venturing out. We have not unfrequently claimed the promise,—"Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them,"—and received a rich blessing. May these past blessings assure us of God's willingness to help us, when we trust in him.

May God's blessings and grace comfort the bereaved family, and lead them all to Christ, who is soon coming to wipe all tears of grief from the faces of the faithful, that when Louisa lives again they may live with her, where there will be no more death. The funeral services were conducted by the Congregational preacher from Colebrook. Text, 1 Pet. 1: 24, and first clause in verse 25th. Wm. A. Fenn.

Died, in Bristol, Ct., June 13th, of scarlet fever, Julia, daughter of Bro. Geo. White, aged seven years.

Little Julia was an unusually bright and active child, notwithstanding she had suffered nearly unto death at intervals during her short life. Last November her parents thought they should have to lay her away, with typhoid fever. On the first day of June scarlet fever laid its unrelenting grasp on her, which tore her from the little family circle of our dear Bro. and Sr. White, which was composed of three children. Alas! she sleeps; but in her case there is hope. She loved the appearing of Jesus, and used often to ask questions about his coming and raising the dead. Although her youthful mind could not fathom the way God could raise the dead, yet she said she believed it would be done, for the Bible said it. Could we give a better reason for our faith? A funeral discourse was preached at the house of Bro. White, June 14th. A goodly number of the citizens of Bristol were present, to sympathize with the bereaved, and hear of our hope, which we endeavored to present from Jer. 31: 15, 16. May the Lord sanctify the occasion to the good of all present. Wm. A. Fenn.

Died, at the residence of her brother, Joseph Whitcomb, in Compton, C. E., Sally N. Whitcomb, youngest daughter of Elias and Betsey Whitcomb, aged twenty-six years, eleven months and six days.

She has been a subject of disease and suffering from a youth. She took a violent cold, which terminated in the quick consumption. For the last eighteen months, she has been very much given up to the service of the Lord, being very strong in the faith of soon seeing the coming King in his beauty, to reign on the renewed earth. She was willing to sleep a little while till the archangel's trump shall sound and awaken the dead, and change the living, that they with us may have immortality and eternal life at the appearing of Christ.

She leaves a father, mother, brothers and sister, to mourn her loss, with a large circle of other relatives and friends; but we mourn not as those that have no hope, for we believe that Sally will come forth at the first

For the Crisis.

Our Influence.

Is it right to give our influence in support of that which is based upon error, although it may have the appearance of being good or that good will result from it? is a question with some that seems to be hard to decide upon; perhaps upon the principle that God will bring good out of evil; or that we may do evil that good may come,—which of the two is the incentive to action, I am unable to decide. God can and does often bring good out of evil; but because of this fact shall we encourage evil? shall we give our time, our money and support to that system or institution which is decidedly opposed to the great truths which we love and advocate, and which use the same means to the uttermost to tear down, uproot and overthrow the most precious truths of God's word? There is nothing plainer than the fact that two systems so diametrically opposed to each other as modern theology, and Bible theology, do not belong to the same great author. Then it follows that modern theology is not based upon God's truth. Then is it right in the sight of God to give our influence in support of that error in any form or manner? Are we not really operating against the truth when we do?

That arch demon has been nearly six thousand years advocating his untruth, and in his wily way of preparing things to look like truth—of giving them the appearance of being good. He has duped multitudes, and is no less crafty to-day than he has ever been. He will stamp the name of christian, benevolent, charitable, etc., upon them when the proceeds of such institutions are used to advance the truth.

I fear that we as christians who are looking for the soon coming of our Judge, when we must give an account of every action as well as for the use of the talent he may have entrusted to our care, are not careful enough of exerting our influence, however small it may be, in the right direction. Let us ever remember that when we are not gathering for Christ we are scattering abroad. We "cannot serve two masters," neither can we gather for Christ and his enemy at the same time; neither can we hold the world and its pleasures in one hand, and Christ in the other. Did we not when we were baptized into Christ's death die to the world, rise to newness or life, that we should walk no more with the world? Have we continued to walk in the same way? Do we love the precious truth as we then did, and make as great sacrifices for it? We then came out from among those who opposed it. Where are we now? If it was right for us to come out, it is right for us to keep out. If it was right for us to embrace the truth, it is right to retain it. If it is worth anything, it is worth everything, or any sacrifice we may be called to make for it. I do not mean by this that we should condemn everybody else that may differ with us, or be unsociable and unfriendly. We can use them with christian kindness, and yet stand firm upon the rock of truth, making no compromises with that which is opposed to it.

We have got the truth; let us keep it. "Buy the truth and sell it not," said one of old. It is worth buying at any sacrifice, even our good reputation, or friends, honor, riches, worldly pleasure, or life itself if need be, and yet get a bargain. Did not Christ suffer all these for us, and shall the servant be above his master? O how few there are that love to suffer for Christ! How much we like the good things of this life—wealth, honor, riches—forgetting that the reproach of Christ is greater riches than this world can give. O! let us seek the true riches, and the honor that cometh from above,—the wealth of that fair city of gold, and a name that shall be written in the Lamb's book of life, that we may have part in the first resurrection, on whom the second death can have no power. Let us see to it that there is no mark of the beast nor a trace of his image left upon us. Let us take our influence from him wholly, and give it to Christ. We shall then be upon the right side; for Christ shall conquer, and we may through him come off more than conquerors and reign with him forever. Amen. S. K. Gibson.

Plain Truths.—To this old and widely circulated tract I have added several pages of valuable extracts on the nearness of the Advent, making it now a tract of 36 pp., well calculated for general circulation. Price $2 per one hundred, or by mail thirty-six copies for $1.00. Few tracts contain so much in little as this. Send in the orders for it. H. L. H.

A Good Newspaper Article.—An article, to be printed, should absolutely have something in it. If professed argument, it should be conclusive; if pathetic, it should moisten the eyes; if an anecdote, it should have a sharp point; if philosophy, it should go to the primitive rock; if practical, it should go like an arrow to its work; if spiritual, it should awe the soul that reads it.

Tremont Campmeeting.

The Tremont campmeeting was near the ruins of the Tremont Iron works, West Wareham, Mass., on the Cape Cod R. R., about fifty miles from Boston. It commenced Tuesday evening, and continued over the Lord's day. The following preaching brethren were present: H. L. Hastings, H. F. Carpenter, F. H. Burbank, Geo. Waugh, E. W. Barrows, Benj. Batchelor, Wm. Faunce. The meeting was held in a pleasant grove, about half a mile east of the depot. An excellent meeting was held at the same place last year. Brethren and sisters came in from New Bedford, Fairhaven, Plymouth, Boston, and various other towns, to help praise the God of heaven, whose Son, our Savior, we expect to return soon to introduce order upon this distracted planet.

We did not arrive at the ground till Thursday evening. Friday morning, July 4th, was spent very pleasantly and profitably in an excellent social meeting in the New Bedford tent. It was a season of refreshing from the Lord. Many spoke of their joys in him, and were thankful for their "blessed hope." We all felt like contrasting our heavenly situation in the quiet grove, with the noisy scenes of the day where the world seek their amusement. At times, we could hear the distant roar of cannon, commemorating deeds of blood, and felt thankful that we had no desire to be any nearer than we were. We were cheered with the thought that in a little while, we shall be eternally away from the sound of war, and everything of that nature. Wives and mothers were present whose loved ones are now on the battle-field, or filling a soldier's grave. Tears would often fill their eyes, as they spoke of their happy Eden home. These were caused by fears that their warrior sons and husbands would fail to meet them in the kingdom. In the hour of temptation, they had laid by the christian armor and taken carnal weapons. Instead of standing up for Jesus, as "peace-makers," and loving their enemies, they are seeking their heart's blood. Instead of gathering with the Lord, they have been gathered by the spirits of demons to the slaughter field. These were saddening thoughts, and cast a gloom over our joyous scene. Notwithstanding all this, we heard many say they never before spent a fourth of July so pleasantly. We were all glad we were there, and had no desire to mingle in the popular crowd. If our nation thought best to make so much ado over political freedom, and the event which separated them from a foreign power; we felt it right to meet and rejoice "in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free" from the bondage of sin, the separation from the army of Satan, and union with the army of the Lord. We all felt the most perfect confidence in our Captain, and sure of victory, unless we took up "carnal weapons."

Several who had put off a part of the christian armor, were fully equipped again for the war, resolved never more to retreat, nor be found again in the enemy's ranks, clothed in rebel armor. Faint-hearted ones gained courage, weak souls were made strong, and sinners trembled at the voice of their testimony. Young converts from Plymouth came in to cheer our hearts, and stimulate the weary to press on for new victories. The day will be joyfully remembered by many who were present; and we trust that some will secure eternal life in consequence of this meeting; which is more than we would venture to say of the combined moral influence of all the popular 4th of July celebrations in our land. They cause many to backslide, but we never heard of one who was led to love Jesus more, and live a better life because he attended the amusements created by fireworks, balloon ascensions, excursions, regattas, picnics, strawberry festivals, circuses, horse races, fairs, surprise parties, etc., etc., where the world and a backslidden church seek their ephemeral joys, that vanish like the pleasures of a dream. All who seek gratification in such scenes, either never had, have lost, or are losing it in Christ. The pure heart has no desire for such poor substitutes for christian joys. Having tried and found them wanting, the child of God does not wish to feed on husks any longer. Christ becomes all in all to him;—the only fountain affording peace without alloy. Such was the experience of many whose testimonies we heard during the meeting on the Fourth.

Saturday, July 5th, was another good day with us. Many resolved to be more like Jesus, and separate themselves more fully from the world, and all bad habits. As a result of this decision, between ten and twenty abandoned the filthy and unhealthy habit of using tobacco. It was a scene of very lively interest, when they gave up their idols. The first one, who decided to leave off this unhealthy stimulant, was a young convert, who had used it for many years. At the close of the sermon, in which a few of the effects of this noxious weed were pointed out, he came up to the preachers' stand, and deposited in our keeping a large "plug of tobacco." Others, seeing the worthy deed of this young convert, though past the meridian of life in years, at once came forward and imitated his noble example; some giving up their "plugs," others their pipes and snuff boxes, which made quite a bundle. We took the disgusting package home, that we might preserve these witnesses to testify against them, if they ever, like the dog, turn to "their own vomit again." But we trust they will never be conquered again by tobacco. We were forcibly reminded of the time in the days of the apostles, when "many that believed came, and confessed, and showed their deeds," and "brought their books together, and burned them before all men."

Our evening meeting in the tent was a blessed one, when many were greatly comforted, especially those who had just resolved to leave off their bad habits. Thus closed the week, and we could truly say the Lord had been our "helper."

Lord's day, July 6th. This was a very warm day. At 8 1-2 o'clock we gathered for a love-feast and had an excellent one. We heard over a hundred testimonies in seventy minutes. We expect to enjoy but a few more such scenes before the coming of Christ. It was a heavenly season for the lovers of Jesus.

At the hour of preaching, some three hundred came in from New Bedford, and hundreds flocked together from the surrounding country. The large audience behaved well and gave good attention to the preaching. Many seemed anxious to know the truth of the doctrine we preach, and some became fully satisfied, who came full of doubts.

The baptism, by Bro. Carpenter, was witnessed by a crowd of interested spectators. The candidates came out shouting the praises of the Lord, being greatly comforted.

In the evening, we sat down to a long table, spread under the trees, to commemorate the dying love of our Savior. Many eyes were wet with tears at the sight, while the peace and love of God filled our hearts. We shall long remember that scene.

Thus closed our excellent campmeeting. We think it has accomplished much good. Many have been quickened in divine life, backsliders reclaimed, and sinners awakened. We trust some of the seed sown will spring up unto "everlasting life."—G.

Exposition of 1 Cor. 3: 13--15.

Bro. Grant:—Will you please give an explanation through the Crisis of 1 Cor. 3: 13–15? G. F. Whitney.

The text reads as follows:—"Every man's work shall be made manifest; for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is. If any man's work abide which he hath built thereupon, he shall receive a reward. If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss; but he himself shall be saved; yet so as by fire."

In order to get the entire subject before the mind of the reader, it may be necessary to look at the context:—

"Now he that planteth and he that watereth are one: and every man shall receive his own reward according to his own labor. For we are laborers together with God: ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building. According to the grace of God which is given unto me, as a wise masterbuilder, I have laid the foundation, and another buildeth thereon. But let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon. For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ. Now if any man build upon this foundation gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble; every man's work shall be made manifest: for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire: and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is. If any man's work abide which he hath built thereupon, he shall receive a reward. If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss: but he himself shall be saved; yet so as by fire. Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are."

It will be seen at a glance that the "laborers," or workmen, are the ministers of the gospel, and hence this scripture is not of universal application. Paul says, "We are laborers together with God." What is the "work" of these preachers or laborers? The answer is obvious,—to persuade men to be christians. Suppose Paul, or any other one, with earnest labor night and day, succeeds in leading several men to repent, and follow Christ; and after a time those same men go back to the world and trample upon the truth of God, and are finally burnt up. In this example, the preacher's work does not "abide," and he has lost all his labor. To illustrate: suppose a man builds a house, and soon after he moves into it, the flames burn it to the ground, and he barely escapes with his life. In this case his work "is burned,"—it does not "abide"; consequently, he suffers "loss, but he himself" is "saved; yet so as by fire." So it is with the "laborers" in the vineyard of the Lord. Much of their work is ruined by Satan. All such is lost labor. They have toiled, watched, fasted and prayed in vain. Like "wood, hay, stubble," it is only fit to be burned at last. The "laborers" have wrought to no profit.

On the other hand, when those they persuade to be christians continue faithful, they "receive a reward,"—they will rejoice with them in the coming kingdom; or as Daniel expresses it, "They that turn many to righteousness" "shall shine" "as the stars for ever and ever." Paul expresses the same fact, when he says:—"For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming? For ye are our glory and joy."—1 Thess. 2: 19, 20. Had these Thessalonian brethren departed from the Lord, and at last been found "worthy of death," then Paul's labor would have been lost; because his work did not "adide."—G.

Concord.

The church in Concord is doing well. Their social meetings are very refreshing seasons. Three more have been baptized, making thirty-four in all. They are making earnest efforts to be ready for the coming of the Son of Man. It is really a blessing to hear their hearty testimonies, expressing their ardent desires to see Jesus. They are evidently among those who "love his appearing," and consequently have a good hope.

The "Try Company" is doing nobly. They see the importance of the little word TRY. Through the blessing of the Lord, it has already accomplished wonders for them; and they feel resolved to keep trying to be good, and to be ready to meet the Savior at his appearing. They love the school of Christ, and he loves to teach them. It is very pleasant to hear their prayers and testimonies in our meetings. They have begun well. May the Lord enable them to continue faithful to the end, and obtain the prize of eternal life.—G.

At Home Again.

After an absence of nearly two months, I find myself again in Boston, much recruited by my recent tour, and fresh for renewed labor. Have been among old friends in Vermont and New York. After leaving Waterbury, where my last communication was dated, I went to Addison, where I spent the most of my time. In this place I took my first charge as pastor of a church, and tarried with that people about five years. I was glad at this time to find them in an apparently prosperous condition—this is certainly so if large and attentive congregations are a criterion by which we may judge. Eld. D. T. Ross continues his earnest labors with them as their pastor. Bro. Munger spent several days with us in Addison, much to the acceptance of the brethren. God grant that after these many years of praying and laboring, suffering and hoping, we may be found ready for the blessed and speedy coming of our Lord.—M.

Emphatic Diaglott.

Bro. C. G. Carre, Blackstone, Mass., wishes a description of the Emphatic Diaglott, published by Benjamin Wilson, Geneva, Ill.

It is an "interlineary translation;" that is, it contains a line of Griesbach's Greek text, and directly under it, a word for word translation in English. Besides this, a marginal column, about one third the width of the page, contains the new translation properly arranged, with several variations from the "word for word translation." At the bottom of the page are important foot notes and references. This is a valuable translation for the mere English scholar; and for all Bible students. The translators are believers in the Bible doctrine that the dead are unconscious, and are dependent on a resurrection for future life. We have between twenty and thirty translations, and we consider this the most reliable one among them all, so far as giving a faithful rendering of the original is concerned. We are very glad it has come out at this time. It was needed. The New Testament is now published as far as Galatians. Judging from the past issues, we think it will be completed by next spring. The price is $4.00 for the entire work; and we consider it richly worth the money. Those who wish it should send their orders to Benj. Wilson, Geneva, Ill.—G.

☞ We have just received a supply of the "Saint's Inheritance," by Wm. Shepherd. It is a new edition in improved style. Price 8 cents single, postage one cent; 1-4th off per dozen. Send in your orders, and set them to preaching.—G.

A new Tract.—"Witchcraft Unveiled; or the voice of God against Spiritualism." This is a good tract by Bro. H. V. Reed, of Harvard, Ill. Price 5 cents single, postage one cent. For sale at this office.—G.

Ghostology; or the existence of immaterial men in earth, heaven, and hell. By Eld. Wm. Sheldon. Every body should have a copy. Price 10 cents single, postage one cent; 1-4th off per dozen; $6.00 per one hundred.—G.

Pauline Theology.—A Doctor of Divinity in the Methodist Episcopal church, standing at the head of an important literary institution in New England, after having a copy of Pauline Theology presented to him, remarked, "I think that view of the punishment of the wicked as likely to be the true one as any I know of."

Plans of Napoleon.

It is very evident that Napoleon III. is anxious to have the controlling influence in the United States, and that he will improve every favorable opportunity to accomplish such a result. It is being advocated in France that there is even now a just cause for the Emperor to interfere as mediator in our national affairs. He knows full well how to keep upon the top of the popular wave; and we expect to see him rise to the highest pinnacle of worldly fame, before his final fall "into perdition." A French Protectorate over Louisiana is already intimated. A Paris correspondent of the Courrier des Etats Unis, a French paper published in New York, says:—

"The pecuniary aid which Mr. Lincoln has offered to Juarez would certainly justify more than an offer of mediation between the North and South on our part. He who furnishes our enemy with money, furnishes him with arms. The Emperor would therefore have the right to intervene, in his turn, in the American conflict. The right is incontestable. I still hope that the Senate will remove these reasons of just complaint, and refuse to ratify the treaty concluded by Mr. Corwin with Juarez, until the war with the latter and ourselves will be ended. To act otherwise would be a veritable provocation, and its authors would alone be responsible for the consequences.

If the United States furnish France with just reason for revenge, by giving assistance to her enemies, they will place with their own hands, Louisiana and all the Southern Confederacy under a French protectorate, as England and Spain have placed Mexico under it, and we shall perhaps see, under Napoleon III., the resurrection of the 'New France' of our fathers, the dismemberment of which commenced under Louis XV., and was completed under Napoleon."

A distinguished gentleman, when writing from Europe says:—

"The policy of Napoleon is tortuous and mysterious, and is not to be trusted. He has set himself up as the arbiter of Europe, and his ambition would lead him to play the same rule in America. There are many signs which authorize the belief that he would like to mediate in our domestic question, or, failing in that, to intervene. The movements of his Minister, M. Mercier, have been any thing but satisfactory, and I have it from pretty good authority that since his visit to Richmond he regards the restoration of the Union as impracticable."

"France has no interests in the American Continent of her own, and no question with Mexico which required the extraordinary course that has recently been adopted. Consequently, in breaking the terms to which those powers agreed at London, some special object must be contemplated. It is easy to understand that with the beverage of Mexico, Louis Napoleon might, if so disposed, threaten us with an alliance of that country to the Cotton States, unless we adopted his counsel and accepted terms of separation. He is quite capable of that or any other policy by which the interest or glory of his dynasty could be augmented. And you may rely upon it that there is some such object in view."

It is evident that events are rapidly approaching a grand crisis, that will make all hearts quail that are not centered in Christ. The popular religion of the day will be found insufficient to sustain its fashionable votaries, when the storm-cloud bursts upon this wicked world. Only "the pure in heart" will be ready. We have but a little time left to prepare for "the marriage supper of the Lamb."—G.

Aristocratic Christianity.

It is enough to make one almost disgusted with the word "chistianity," when we see how its professors are living in these "last days." We do not wonder that sensible men say, when referring to cases like the following account from the New York Tribune, "If this is christianity, I am well enough off without it."

TROUBLE IN AN UP-TOWN CHURCH.

"Some time since a gentleman in good standing in the community, who is a member of an up-town Baptist church, purchased a fashionably located pew, for which he paid the munificent sum of $1,000. In the course of a little time he met with reverses, and among other effects at the mercy of his creditors was his pew in the church. This fell to the lot of a practical working mechanic, who decided that he would worship his God in this edifice, and with his family would, on the Sabbath, occupy the $1,000 pew for that purpose. Accordingly, he and his family attended regularly and respectably the services of the sanctuary, but his social status became known to the 'ladies and gentlemen' who occupied pews adjacent to his, in the middle aisle, and they presumed to criticise every and the minutest act of the new-comers. The mode of shutting their eyes during prayer, their unusual attention and apparent devotion during the services, their uniform vulgar practice of remaining till the close of service, their going to church in stormy weather without using a carriage, and other extremely ill-bred peculiarities, all were criticised. As the mechanic and his family retired from the church, the grown boys of the congregation, together with some of the younger misses, would crowd in the vestibule and converse loudly about 'tallow,' 'grease,' 'shoddy coats,' 'calico,' 'leather gloves,' and other kindred subjects, with which the strangers were supposed to be familiar. It appears that the humble but frugal mechanic bore this contumely with creditable christian forbearance, not yielding his rights in any degree, but continuing his attendance upon religious ordinances as usual. The stoicism of the iron pew-holder was an outrage to the devotees of fashion; they appealed to the trustees, the trustees appealed to the mechanic, the mechanic offered to sell out at cost price; the trustees hesitated, and the mechanic retained the pew, attending the church as usual. Being somewhat democratic in his notions of society, and a firm believer in the doctrine of human equality, he introduced to his softly cushioned pew, two colored brethren. This last act was the feather that broke the camel's back. So grave an outrage demanded redress at the hands of the law as a 'disturber of public worship'—an act of annoyance of God's people 'under their own vine and fig tree.'

The mechanic continues his devotions, is passionately fond of music, and elects to look toward the choir while praise is being offered from that locality. Meanwhile the trustees have preferred a charge against him before a police justice for 'disturbing public worship,' on which Mr. Mechanic had to find bail, and the Grand Jury have found a bill against him. His case will be tried soon in the Court of General Sessions. The trustees allege that the reputation of the church demands that they prosecute the case. They contemplate forcing him to sell the pew at a sacrifice, which he considers would not be an equitable financial transaction."

The Horrors of War.

It is said by those who have been on the battle field, that we can form but a very faint idea of its horrors till we become eye-witnesses. They must be seen to be known. The most vivid pen pictures come far short of the reality. The following extract from a correspondent of the Philadelphia Press, dated July 5th, will give us a glimpse at "the horrors of war." It is a description of the retreat of McClellan's army from before Richmond.—G.

"Thousands of dollars worth of property were destroyed because it could not be carried; but the rear guard kept behind the last wagon, not allowing a single team to fall into the enemy's possession. Food was burned, ammunition blown up, whiskey and molasses barrels broached, wagons, with horses dead by the wayside from sheer fatigue, were burned or had every spoke and axle broken. Soldiers threw away their knapsacks, but attentive fatigue parties piled them in vast heaps, and their ashes mocked the rebels, whose utmost exertions were too feeble to secure them. Muskets lying in ditches were bent or broken. Not a single article of all thrown away by that grand army on its grand retreat could be useful to the rebels. Fire and water, the knife and the ax, did their work and did it well.

Still the enemy pressed us, and through all the night the jaded army, with its baggage, had to be urged on. A vast herd of cattle passed me early Monday morning, and, just after it, a drove of a thousand rebel prisoners. I started early, and again witnessed Sunday's fearful scenes.

Wounded and sick limped along many a one, lying down to sleep his last sleep under the grateful shade of the roadside woods. The same confusion of wagons, and soldiers, and cannon, and the paraphernalia of war, blocked the passage; and, in addition to the rebels thundering behind us, and the long, weary, dusty way before, hunger and thirst began to stare us in the face. Thousands had thrown away their haversacks, containing all their food, and not a bite could they procure. Not a stream or a spring could be found anywhere to quench the thirst of the poor soldiers. They lay on the ground drinking from ditches filled with mud and filth. Wells dug with their hands, sometimes furnished a scant supply.

But it was not one-tenth enough for the army; horses died from thirst, and were left lying where they fell. Everywhere could be heard the cry for water, water, though above it sounded loudly the voices of the officers, who urged every one forward. Monday was far more terrible than Sunday. Hunger and thirst came to the aid of secession, in the infliction of deep and painful wounds upon the Union army.'

Words of Encouragement.

We would say to the many who send us kind words to cheer us in our editorial duties, that they make our burdens much lighter than they would be if these words of sympathy were withheld. We do not often venture to publish them, but hope to be excused for the following extracts.—G.

Bro. J. C. Libby, Biddeford, Me., writes: "The Crisis is sweet to our taste. We love to pay for such a paper, and invite others to take it. May the Lord bless you with every needed grace, is our prayer."

Dr. Baringer, Mt. Hope, O., writes:—"Of all the papers I receive, I consider the Crisis the best."

Bro. O. G. Trundy, Dover South Mills, Me., writes:—"I like the paper very much. It is a welcome messenger to us. It cheers me while reading the stirring letters from the children, who are looking for the return of the Master.

Bro. W. Brewster, Baraboo, Wis., writes: "I like the Crisis the best of any paper I have ever seen. I place it next to the Bible, and hope it may be supported while time lasts."

Bro. J. W. Sharick, Clarence, writes:—"I like the Crisis much. My father-in-law thinks it is one of the best papers that is printed on religion, though he does not believe in the sleep of the dead."

Sr. E. A. Prescott, New Sharon, Me., writes:—"I can't help noticing how carefully the Crisis is scrutinized by its opposing scoffers. But thank God, every word will bear an examination. I have no fears when I see the most devoted christian, or most lawless infidel perusing its pages. I never before so fully realized the responsibility of an editor."

Retribution.—Dr. K—— writes from Indiana:—

"Retribution is just the thing to circulate where ——'s works are read. Its arguments are unanswerable, and I do hope the book may have a wide circulation."

Price 18 cts. For sale at this office, and by H. L. Hastings, Boston, Mass.

Goodness.—If good people would but make goodness agreeable, and smile instead of frowning in their virtue, how many would they win to the good cause!

Obituary Notices.

Died, at Kingsbury, Ind., June 25th, Sarah Atkins, aged nineteen years.

She had been sick a number of weeks of typhoid fever, when her health began to improve, but taking a severe cold, she relapsed into the fever which soon ended her days.

She never made any public profession of religion, but was, nevertheless, a very upright, kind-hearted, and virtuous girl. Her agreeableness of deportment endeared her to a large circle of friends. In her they have lost a pleasant companion. About two weeks before she died, she was impressed with the fact that she should not live. She then manifested some anxiety as to her real condition, and requested that prayer should be offered in her behalf. She remarked that she had not been guilty of making light of religion, but had passed it by carelessly. She remarked, "If I had my life to live over again, I would do quite differently." She warned her companions not to do as she had done—not to put off repentance until they were brought to a sick bed. Before dying, she gave evidence of a change, and then fell asleep, without a struggle or a groan, in hope of a glorious resurrection at the advent of the Redeemer.

Thus has passed away one who was esteemed very highly by companions and neighbors, but more than all, beloved by a father and mother, upon whom this stroke of affliction has fallen, producing almost unconsolable grief. May God's blessing rest upon these bereaved parents and friends who are called to mourn the loss of an affectionate daughter and a sister beloved. F. H. Berick.

Died, in Sandisfield, June 24th, 1862, Louisa, daughter of Theron and Cynthia Wolcott, aged sixteen years.

In the death of Louisa a gentle and obedient daughter is lost, a kind and affectionate sister, and a true and faithful servant in the church. She was one of a family of eight interesting children, the father of whom has not been heard from since a short time after the fall of Fort Sumter. This family, with many others, has felt severely the wickedness of the present great rebellion. Mr. Wolcott was a man whose hands provided for his family, and he went south for the advantage in wages in D. C. When last heard from by his family, he was in Georgia. Louisa loved her father, and said if she could see him again, she could die without one sigh.

Oh! when will strife and tumult cease, and friends of peace be at rest? We had the pleasure of burying Louisa and her two older sisters in the likeness of Christ's death, by baptism, and we hope to meet them all in the glorious resurrection, with several others in Sandisfield, whom we also buried in water, thus illustrating our faith. We find our affections very closely entwined around those whom we have aided in spiritual things. We hope those who shared with Louisa in the baptism, will profit by this sad event; especially may God sanctify it to the good of Sister Mary, who has been a constant companion to Louisa, sharing in her joys and sorrows, since they were baptized together.

During our two years sojourn in Sandisfield, our hearts have often been made glad by the presence of these two at our prayer meetings, when the inclemency of the weather forbade others venturing out. We have not unfrequently claimed the promise,—"Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them,"—and received a rich blessing. May these past blessings assure us of God's willingness to help us, when we trust in him.

May God's blessings and grace comfort the bereaved family, and lead them all to Christ, who is soon coming to wipe all tears of grief from the faces of the faithful, that when Louisa lives again they may live with her, where there will be no more death. The funeral services were conducted by the Congregational preacher from Colebrook. Text, 1 Pet. 1: 24, and first clause in verse 25th. Wm. A. Fenn.

Died, in Bristol, Ct., June 13th, of scarlet fever, Julia, daughter of Bro. Geo. White, aged seven years.

Little Julia was an unusually bright and active child, notwithstanding she had suffered nearly unto death at intervals during her short life. Last November her parents thought they should have to lay her away, with typhoid fever. On the first day of June scarlet fever laid its unrelenting grasp on her, which tore her from the little family circle of our dear Bro. and Sr. White, which was composed of three children. Alas! she sleeps; but in her case there is hope. She loved the appearing of Jesus, and used often to ask questions about his coming and raising the dead. Although her youthful mind could not fathom the way God could raise the dead, yet she said she believed it would be done, for the Bible said it. Could we give a better reason for our faith? A funeral discourse was preached at the house of Bro. White, June 14th. A goodly number of the citizens of Bristol were present, to sympathize with the bereaved, and hear of our hope, which we endeavored to present from Jer. 31: 15, 16. May the Lord sanctify the occasion to the good of all present. Wm. A. Fenn.

Died, at the residence of her brother, Joseph Whitcomb, in Compton, C. E., Sally N. Whitcomb, youngest daughter of Elias and Betsey Whitcomb, aged twenty-six years, eleven months and six days.

She has been a subject of disease and suffering from a youth. She took a violent cold, which terminated in the quick consumption. For the last eighteen months, she has been very much given up to the service of the Lord, being very strong in the faith of soon seeing the coming King in his beauty, to reign on the renewed earth. She was willing to sleep a little while till the archangel's trump shall sound and awaken the dead, and change the living, that they with us may have immortality and eternal life at the appearing of Christ.

She leaves a father, mother, brothers and sister, to mourn her loss, with a large circle of other relatives and friends; but we mourn not as those that have no hope, for we believe that Sally will come forth at the first resurrection, blooming with immortality and eternal life.

Funeral service by Eld. Samuel Thurber, in the Methodist chapel, Hatley. Text, Isa. 26 : 19. He spoke words very comforting to believers and instructive to all present.

Yours in hope, JOHN H. WHITCOMB.

Died, in Casco, Me., June 5th, 1862, MARIAM, wife of Bro. Jesse Gay, aged twenty-nine years, ten months, nine days.

Sister Gay lived in Casco as Mariam March until more than twenty years of age, when she embraced Christ by faith as the great and only Life-Giver, and, with many of her young associates, was led to look for and love his appearing. Among these was Bro. Jesse Gay, with whom she soon after united in marriage, and they came to reside in this place (West Poland.) While here for a term of years, by a virtuous life and tender regard for all around her, she won seemingly the affection of all, and in her departure from us has left many friends. Her disease was consumption. It has seemed to be preying upon her constitution quite a number of years, but did not truly develop itself until some ten months previous to her death. She clung to life quite tenaciously during most of her sickness, on account of her family and friends, but at the same time was laboring to resign all into the hands of God. A few weeks before her death she was removed to Casco, to the house of a dear sister (Bro. Gay having disposed of his Poland home), where she continued to sink until she calmly fell asleep in Jesus. I visited her three days before her death, and as I left, her last words were, "Good bye! Albert, we'll meet in the kingdom." She has left Bro. Gay in loneliness, with two little ones to care for, and also brothers and sisters, and many friends, to mourn and say—

Farewell, Mariam, now we miss thee,
Miss thy presence everywhere,
And our hearts are filled with sadness,
While thy voice no more we hear;
But our sorrow is not hopeless,
For thou dost in Jesus sleep,
And the white-robed angel watchers
Round thy grave their vigils keep.
Now we wait the promised morning
When our King shall come to reign,
When the strong man's chains are sundered,
And the captives live again;
Then with joyful hearts we'll greet thee,
Where no grief shall ever come;
Where the ransomed all are gathered
In a fair eternal home.

Remarks were made at the funeral by the writer from 1 Cor. 15 : 35.

JAS. A. LIBBY.

Fell asleep in Jesus, on the 24th of June, at Westminster, Mass., JANE W., wife of Bro. John G. T. Cruse, after a severe illness.

She had been a firm believer in the second coming of Christ from 1843 to the time of her death. A few days before she died she said a cord was severed from this earth, such as she never felt before, and that Christ was "all in all" to her, and with her feeble voice she sang—

"Weary pilgrim, why this sadness?
Why mid sorrow's scenes decline?
The trial strange brings joy and gladness,
For all things shall yet be thine!"

and,

"I'm a lonely trav'ler here."

Her last words were, while she had her reason, "Time is short!" The funeral was attended by Bro. Samuel Heath of Lunenburg, Mass., who delivered a faithful and comforting discourse from 1 Thess. 4: 14. Thus in the short space of two years and eight months I have committed three dear ones to the silent grave; but I "sorrow not, even as others which have no hope." J. G. T. CRUSE.

FOREIGN NEWS.

By the arrival of the Steamship Great Eastern, we have news from Liverpool July 1st, and Queenstown 2nd.

News unimportant.

Lord Brougham explained that in his speech in the House of Lords on the American question, that he merely wished, as a fellow christian, to remonstrate with the Americans on their course in the civil war. Gloss it over as they might, the war threatened fatal results to the American people.

The Daily News city article regards the latest news as portending an almost indefinite postponement of peace in America.

LATER.

The Steamer City of New York brings news from Liverpool July 2nd, Queenstown 3d.

RUSSIA.

Incendiarism still prevails, not only at St. Petersburg but in other cities of Russia. Advices from Odessa state that on the nights between the 6th and 8th of June various large conflagrations took place. Storehouses of grain and other produce were destroyed, and great consternation prevailed. These fires are attributed to political motives, and supposed to be caused by the secret societies who do not think the Imperial Government is advancing rapidly enough in the path of reform. The measures taken by the Government tend to confirm the suspicion. The governors of provinces are authorized to declare martial law against incendiaries, and sentence them without appeal to the Emperor. A special decree empowers them to punish with sentence of death any person or persons found guilty of murder, pillage, or attempt to destroy the crops.

The Imperial Library at Paris is about to open a reading-room much larger than the celebrated one at the British Museum. The Imperial Library, the largest in the whole world, is said to contain 1,800,000 volumes, on seventeen miles of shelves.

POLISH CENSUS. From the latest returns it appears that the kingdom of Poland contains 5,850,000 inhabitants. Of that number 600,000 are Jews. Warsaw has 165,000 inhabitants, 45,000 of whom are Jews. At the census of 1846, Poland contained only 213,000 Jews.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

Fortress Monroe, July 6. Gen. McClellan has advanced about seven miles up the river, but no fighting has been heard of for the last two days.

BOMBARDMENT OF VICKSBURG.

Cairo, July 8. The steamer Sunshine has arrived. The bombardment was continued. The town was deserted except by the military.

Philadelphia, July 8. The Press has a dispatch from Newbern 2d, stating that Gen. Burnside's entire army is in motion against Richmond.

New York, July 8. The Tribune Fortress Monroe letter of the 6th says: Yesterday our pickets advanced from four to five miles from the river and saw no enemy, who seem to have mysteriously retired. General McClellan has advanced his lines down to the Chickahominy and no fears are entertained of a flank movement in that direction. By noon to-day General McClellan expected to have his position so fortified as to be able to bid defiance to the enemy in any shape they might choose to come.

New York, July 9. An army letter states that a rebel captain, who was taken prisoner, confessed that the rebel loss on Friday at Gaine's Hill was 24,000, and that their total losses in the week's fighting were from 60, to 70,000.

Another letter says a number of our wounded have come in, having been ordered by the rebels to seek their own camps. Our loss, now, says this letter, is reduced to less than 10,000 men.

New York, July 10. The World has a statement from a Union man who has just reached this city from Atlanta, Georgia, respecting the position of affairs at the South. From his accounts it appears that had the recent contest before Richmond terminated in a Confederate defeat the rebellion would have been ended, as the spirit of the South is almost utterly broken by the long series of rebel defeats; that the rebel army at Richmond previous to the late battles was undoubtedly over 200,000 strong.

The Herald's Washington dispatch says it is not unlikely that the President will issue a proclamation at an early day announcing a change in the policy of the Administration, to wit: a more vigorous prosecution of the war.

The Times' Washington dispatch announces that a discovery has been made by the Government of a great rebel conspiracy, which was to have burst upon the country simultaneously with the great battles before Richmond. The rising was expected to take place in Tennessee, Kentucky and Maryland, and Jeff. Davis was, in the confusion, to march on Washington. The first part of the plan, the defeat of Gen. McClellan, failed, however, and consequently the rest was not attempted.

The Herald's Washington dispatch says the the President is satisfied that affairs on the Peninsula are in much better condition than has been represented. He gives great credit to Gen. McClellan for having in no way exaggerated facts. He has seen the necessity of reinforcing the army, and returns with the conviction that Gen. McClellan is in his proper position, that the army is devoted to him, and full of confidence in his ability, and that all he requires should and shall be done without delay.

Nashville, July 13. Between 3000 and 4000 Georgians, Texans and guerrillas, under Col. Forest, attacked the 11th Michigan and 3d Minnesota regiments in Murfreesboro' at an early hour this morning. There was desperate fighting, but at three P. M., the Michigan troops had surrendered. The Minnesotians were strongly intrenched and cut the enemy to pieces terribly with Hewett's Kentucky Battery, repulsing them with great slaughter in three charges.

Flags of truce were sent in by Colonel Forest, demanding their surrender. Colonel Leslie replied that he could hold his position a week.

The railroad track was torn up, but was replaced. An attack on Nashville is not improbable. Col. Leslie is reported falling back on Nashville.

Memphis, July 11. Arkansas refugees report that Gen. Curtis attacked and cut to pieces 500 Confederates under Col. McNeill, 30 miles east of Batesville, on the 4th.

Memphis, July 13. A Vicksburg dispatch of the 4th states that the bombardment is tremendous and increasing. It is estimated that the Federals have fired 32,000 shot and shell. The inhabitants have taken refuge in the woods.

A foraging party of 1000 of Gen. Curtis' men have been attacked and nearly all killed. But few were captured alive.

Nashville, Tenn., July 14. Three of Hewitt's battery who escaped from Murfreesboro report that their battery and the 3d Minnesota had surrendered. Col. Duffield was mortally wounded.

An escaped prisoner reports the 1st, 2d and 4th Georgia regiments, the 1st Kentucky regiment, and Texas Rangers, and 1700 mounted infantry, under command of Forest and Warner—6000 in all—advancing on Nashville.

Gen. Buell's force, estimated at 30,000 strong, have all crossed the Tennessee river. It is supposed they are making a feint movement on Chattanooga to cover movements on Rome, Georgia.

Cincinnati, July 14. The Gazette's special dispatch says that General Ward assumed command last night. The city is under martial law. No man is to appear without his musket under penalty of being shot down.

Kinderhook, N. Y. Ex-President Martin Van Buren is very low to-day, from his sufferings under throat affection. His physicians say that he cannot long survive. He is insensible, and unable to recognize friends and relatives.

ROME AND SARDINIA.—In one of his speeches at Naples the Robber King announced that the French Emperor and himself were in perfect accord about the Roman question, and that within a year Rome would be the capital of the Italian Kingdom. Within a year! Let the date be well marked and the words of the Robber King to be well remembered; and let a year hence tell where he and perhaps his Imperial patron will then be. Will either then wear a crown? The Church at all events can afford to wait the issue in perfect serenity and confidence.—London Register.

☞ The Mormons have had a small rebellion of their own. A fellow named Morris, who set up for the prophet Moses just returned to earth, got up a crowd of followers, established a settlement, repudiated the regular Government, and began plundering for a living. Militia were called out, a siege and fight ensued, the new Moses was whipped, and 174 of his foolish followers were sent to prison. Some lives were lost, among them that of the new prophet.

ANNEXATION OF CANADA. A Canadian paper published at Red River, is out in favor of annexation to the United States. It says that Great Britain shows a perfect indifference to the settlement, and it enjoys none of the commercial or governmental advantages it has a right to expect; and that, on the other hand, American influence of every kind is operating upon it.

Notices of Eld. J. V. Himes.

Sabbath, July 20th, Boston, Mass., at the re-opening of the chapel.

Sabbath, July 27th, Lowell St. Chapel.

Wednesday, July 30th, conference and lectures in Palmer, or Three Rivers, Mass., and continue over the Sabbath. Afternoon and evening each day, and Sabbath all day, as Bro. Powell shall appoint.

Friday, Aug. 17th, commence a campmeeting at Perry's Mills, N. Y., to continue from the 8th to the 24th.

Tuesday, Aug. 26th, will be at the Wilbraham campmeeting, to continue through the week.

Friends who wrote me from Conn. will please write me without delay as to their wishes and plans for my labors there, after the campmeeting.

Ghostology.

The articles which have appeared under this caption, in successive numbers of the Crisis, have been revised by the author, W. Sheldon, and are now ready for delivery in the shape of a neat pamphlet of forty-eight pages. Price in glazed covers 10 cts. Single, $6 per hundred. Without covers 8 cts. $5 per hundred, post paid. Orders with cash may be addressed to Miles Grant, or H. L. Hastings, Boston, Mass., or to W. Sheldon, Merrimac, Sauk Co., Wis.

Campmeeting Notice.

According to previous appointment, there will be a campmeeting in the town of Grand Blanc, Genesee Co., Mich., on the farm of Bro. John Arable, commencing Aug. 27th, 1862. This meeting is appointed for the express purpose of calling together all such as love the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ in this State; and if brethren from other States, or from Canada, wish to attend, of course there will be no objection. Come, then, dear brethren and sisters; come with your tents and provisions; come well furnished with materials to take care of yourselves and others; come with warm hearts in the fear of God to labor for the salvation of souls, and be sure that you come at the commencement of the meeting. Our meeting last year was a blessed one, and we anticipate a more glorious one this year. Bro. and Sr. Mansfield will be there to aid in the proclamation of the gospel.

P. S. Brethren coming on the cars, from the East or West, will stop at Holly. The meeting is to be some twelve miles north of Holly. Stages run within three miles of the meeting. In behalf of the church,

A. N. SEYMOUR.

General Meeting.

The brethren in New Hampshire, believing in gospel order, and the gifts as given to a New Testament church, feeling that in this day of unbelief and apostasy they should meet together, exhort one another, and contend earnestly "for the faith which was once delivered to the saints," that they may be able to stand against those in these last days who "resist the truth" like Jannes and Jambres, and "come behind in no gift; waiting for the coming of our Lord," that we may be found "blameless in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ;" and while we may regret any confusion (as God is not the author of confusion) or fanaticism, in this or other countries, that may have been connected with the exercise of the gifts; still we would not turn away from these, God's own appointed channels of communicating strength, comfort and blessings to his church in this day of trial, as well as the past; and, while we have our solemn conviction that, although we may hold many of the glorious truths of the gospel as very sacred and essential, still if we are destitute of its power, we shall be found with a lamp, but destitute of oil in the day of God: have concluded to commence a meeting on New Durham Ridge August 21st, and hold it over the following Sunday, for the investigation of the word, and to seek the divine blessing. Bro. J. Billings and others will be present to preach the word. All are invited. In behalf of the brethren,

J. G. SMITH.

Advent Campmeeting.

A general campmeeting for Northern New York, Vermont and Canada East, will be holden in Perry's Mills, N. Y., near the depot of the Ogdensburg Railroad in that place, six miles from Rouse's Point, N. Y.

The Adventists in the entire region, with all classes and persuasions of christians, are most cordially invited to attend, and take an earnest and active part in the objects of the meeting. All who have tents will bring them. And friends in the vicinity are invited to put up cheap lumber tents, or others, for themselves and strangers. Board and lodging will be provided on reasonable terms, also pasture for horses. Every thing will be done by the brethren and friends in the vicinity to make the people comfortable. Our tried and faithful brethren, Dr. E. M. Loomis of Perry's Mills, N. Y., and Alvah Loomis of Champlain, N. Y., may be addressed by any who wish accommodation, or any further information about the meeting. The exact location of the grounds will be given in season. The meeting will commence on Friday, August 17th, at 4 o'clock, P. M., and be continued every day over two Sabbaths, to the 24th.

Ministers of God, brethren, sisters, friends, one and all, come up to the feast. There never was a time when the door was opened so wide and effectual as now, for the Adventists to speak and work for God and a doomed world. Many too among us have left their first love, and have need of help. Many in our families are out of the ark of safety, and shall we not do something to rescue them before the storm of vengeance falls? Can we endure to see the destruction of our kindred? The community too are looking to us for light on the coming kingdom. Shall we not give it? Can we withhold and be innocent in the day of the Lord? We have light on the time, and the signs of the Advent of the King of kings. Shall we not give it? Why hesitate to give the trump a certain sound? Rome is falling, the False Prophet is tottering, and Armageddon, with its strife and slaughter, is just upon us!

Come, then, ye veterans of the Advent faith; come, ye young with the old soldiers, let us shake off the dust of sloth and indolence, and gird on the armor of God. Let us seek and possess full redemption, and do what we can to multiply the number who shall stand with us on Mount Zion in the day of the Lord. JOSHUA V. HIMES.

Boston, July 14, 1862.

Maine Conference.

The Maine Annual Advent Conference will convene Sept. 10th, at 7 P. M., and continue over the following Sunday. It is hoped that all Advent ministers in the State, who can work together in union and fellowship, in the promotion of the objects of our conferences, will be present, and as many other brethren and sisters as can well attend this yearly gathering, to work together for the spread of this gospel of the kingdom of God, that sinners may be saved, and the church strengthened and fitted for the soon coming of the Lord from heaven.

The place of the conference is not yet decided upon, but will be soon, and given.

O. R. FASSETT, President.
I. C. WELLCOME, Scribe.

Notice.

The Lord willing, there will be a campmeeting at Corinna, Me., (on Mr. Weston Nutter's place) commencing the first Monday in September, and continuing over the following Sabbath. We extend a cordial invitation to all the brethren in this section, and abroad, to come and worship the Lord with us. There will, we hope, be a full delegation of preaching brethren with us from abroad to dispense the word of life. Particulars hereafter.

B. C. MOORE, ALBERT DOOR, GEO. H. FISHER, } Committee of Arrangements.

Special Book Notice.

In fulfillment of a long cherished purpose, I am happy to present my friends with a list of my books, at reduced prices, as follows, till further notice:—

The Voice of the Church, 75 cts.

Great Controversy, paper 25 cts; cloth (small edition) 30 cts.

Thessalonica, or The Model Church, paper 25 cts.

Spiritualism, by Ramsey, 15 cts. paper, 25 cts. cloth.

Pauline Theology, 10 cts.

Reasons for my Hope, paper, 18 cts., (ready in a few week.)

Retribution, or the Doom of the Ungodly, 18 cts., and free to all who deny the resurrection of the unjust, provided they will read it through.

Tracts from my list, 1800 pages for $1 00. A full supply nearly ready. Tracts by mail, 1200 pages for $1.00. Free to the poor. Several German tracts at 8 cents each.

The Publication Society will sell the above works from the Crisis office, at the same rates; and I intend, (D.V.) after a month or so, to keep a full assortment constantly on hand.

Let orders come in, and they shall be attended to, if the Lord will. A still further discount from these prices will be made to those who order quantities, and send the money with their order, directed to MILES GRANT, or H. L. HASTINGS, Boston, Mass.

Meeting of the Advent Christian Association.

To the brethren in Christ, and churches of the Lord who "serve the living God," and "wait for his Son from heaven," Greeting:—The Board of Managers, after due consultation, have decided to appoint the third annual meeting of the Advent Christian Association, at Wilbraham, Mass., to commence Tuesday, 4 o'clock, P. M., August 26th, 1862.

Two reasons have led them to decide upon this time in preference to October, as heretofore. First—A larger attendance can be secured; Second—Much expense can be saved. These are weighty considerations. The business to be transacted at the annual meeting of this Association is very important. The interests of every church, and every individual, "looking for the blessed hope," are involved in its proceedings. This Society controls the World's Crisis. It appoints its Editors and Managers. It decides what its character shall be, and marks out its policy, whether it shall give expression to every idea, however fanciful or absurd, which may demand its columns; or whether it shall select such only as are "meat in due season." It becomes necessary, therefore, that every church be represented, that our family paper be sustained in such a manner as to "feed the flock," that we may know whether its Editorship, eminently successful thus far, shall be changed or not.

A full representation, so desirable, can be best secured during campmeeting week. Distant churches in the South, West and East, are usually represented then, while they cannot afford six weeks afterwards to send other representatives so far to attend the Association alone. Having, for these reasons, fixed upon this time for our third annual meeting, it is hoped that we may have a large and profitable one. Lest we be disappointed, let earnest prayer be made to God daily, that whatever shall be done at that time may be done, not in the name of man, self, or party, but "in the name of the Lord Jesus."

DANIEL T. TAYLOR, Chairman.
H. F. CARPENTER, Clerk.

June 7th, 1862.

NOTE. The Board of the Advent Christian Association are requested to meet at Wilbraham on Tuesday, August 26th, at 8 o'clock, A. M. A prompt and punctual attendance desirable.

D. T. TAYLOR, President.
H. F. CARPENTER, Clerk.

NOTE. Letters are solicited from churches and ministers who cannot possibly be otherwise represented. They may be directed to H. F. Carpenter, Collins Depot, Mass.

All pastors and evangelists, and delegates from churches co-operating with this Society, are members. Each church is allowed one delegate, and one additional delegate, for every fifty members above the number of twenty-five members. None can vote by letter.

Conference Notice.

The Illinois conference of Adventists will hold their quarterly meeting with the church near New Rutland, Lasalle Co., commencing Tuesday, Sept. 2d, at 2 o'clock, and continue over the Sabbath. Those coming from the East or West will take the Burlington and Quincy R. R., connecting with the Central at Menetata, or the Rock Island R R. connecting with the Central at Lasalle, stopping at New Rutland, on the Central R. R., where conveyances will be provided to the place of meeting. Preaching brethren in the conference are expected to be there. It will be held in the New England Mission Tent.

H. G. MCCULLOCK, Sec. of Conf.

Campmeeting.

The great interest manifested at our tent meeting in New Preston, Ct., has induced us, with the advice of the brethren in that section, to appoint a campmeeting, to commence Tuesday, Sept. 2d, at 10 A. M. Some eight tents have already been counted up for the occasion, and we hope the number will be much larger. Brethren that want to work for the Lord will find here a new and interesting field.

We desire all who can, to bring provisions and tents for themselves and others. Plain food, and "all things common" is the Bible rule; let us practice it cheerfully. A daily stage from New Milford (Housatonic R. R.) at 12 will bring in all who wish. Distance eight miles. H. PRATT.

Thessalonica: or, The Model Church. A Sketch of Primitive Christianity. 2d 1000. Paper, 25 cts. Cloth, 60 cts.

A stirring volume—evangelical and scriptural. Amer. Presb. In pungent style—abounding in strong points. Chicago Times. Very interesting—ably treated. Albany Evening Journal. Earnest and ably written. Boston Evening Transcript. Written in a good spirit—in earnest. Portland Recorder. A strong and vigorous work. Godey's Lady's Book. Many brilliant passages—a vigorous writer. S. S. Times. I have read it with great interest. C. F. Hudson. Every minister should get a copy. Philad. Christian Chron. Contains a good deal of truth. Boston Atlas. Many good and sound ideas. Boston Congregationalist. Abounds with good, sober truth. Millennial Harbinger. Modern Christians will prize it. Delaware Inquirer.

The Great Controversy Between God and Man: Its Origin, Progress, and End. A Sketch of Man's "Seventeen [illegible] Rebellion." 3d 1000. Paper, 25 cts. Cloth, 60 cts.

A well-meant and well-written book. Banner of the Cross. Touching and impressive. Christian Chronicle. I read it with much satisfaction. Bishop J. H. Hopkins. Great ability—vigorous and spirited. E. Winthrop, M. A. The controversy will close with judgments. Amer. Presb. The most gifted and eloquent of those who, in this country, maintain this view. Prof. C. F. Hudson.

Reasons for my Hope, and the Tokens of its Speedy Realization. 2d 1000. Paper, 25 cts. Cloth, 60 cts.

Containing an exposition of the hope of the Church—abounding in facts pertaining to Prophecy, the signs of the times, the increase of knowledge, spread of the Gospel, Missions, Tracts, Bible translations, Bible societies, &c. The Statistics alone are worth many times the price of the book.

Retribution; or, The Doom of the Ungodly, after the Resurrection of the Dead, Just and Unjust. Paper, 25 cts. Cloth, 60 cts.

A solemn and earnest argument in proof of the resurrection of the dead, just and unjust; the punishment of the ungodly in the lake of fire, the second death; and a refutation of the notion that wicked men have no resurrection, judgment, or conscious punishment after death. Judging from the reception it meets with, it hits the nail on the head!

Pauline Theology; or, The Scripture Doctrine of Future Punishment, as taught in the Epistles of Paul. 12th 1000. Paper, 15 cts.

This work contains the passages on future punishment found in Paul's FOURTEEN EPISTLES. His words are quoted and defined in Greek and in English. Many, upon reading it, have given up their sectarian theology to embrace the theology of Paul. The wide circulation of the work, which has never been refuted, indicates its value and interest.

The Old Paths; or, The Primitive Doctrine of a Future Life. 3d 1000. Paper, 10 cts.

Beginning where Pauline theology closes, this treatise exhibits the teachings of all the Apostolical Fathers, as found in the writings bearing their names, such as Barnabas, Clement, Hermas, Ignatius, and Polycarp, giving large quotations illustrating their opinions upon the questions of Life, Immortality, Future Punishment, and the Kingdom of God.

Tracts on Immortality: containing Pauline Theology, The Old Paths, Milton on the State of the Dead, and other minor tracts. Bound in cloth, 30 cts.

Tracts on Prophecy: containing more than Twenty pointed, stirring, and earnest Tracts on Prophetical and Practical subjects. Bound in cloth, 30 cts.

The Perfect State; or, Forever with the Lord: A Book of Instruction and Consolation. PREPARING. $1.00.

This work contains a statement of the Scripture teachings concerning how men shall come to be forever "with the Lord," including lengthy and critical discussions of Paradise, Hades, Sheol, the Intermediate State, and other matters of interest; while it serves to cheer the heart-stricken and with the hope of glory when Christ, who is our life, shall appear.

The Voice of the Church on the Coming and Kingdom of the Redeemer; or, a History of the Doctrine of the Reign of Christ on Earth. By D. T. Taylor. Edited and published by H. L. Hastings. 6th edition. 420 pp. 12mo. Price $1.00.

This is the ablest work extant on this subject. It proves that the common notion of the world's conversion was unknown to the Church of Christ for 1500 years. [illegible] four hundred of the greatest theologians known, giving their own words. Multitudes of commentary [illegible] papers, of all kinds, might be quoted. [illegible]

Spiritualism a Satanic Delusion and a Sign of the Times. By William Ramsey, D. D. Edited by H. L. H. Price, cloth, 40 cts. Paper, 20 cts.

A masterly expose of the grand delusion of the age, which has shielded many and recovered some from the snare of Satan. [illegible]

Wayside Gleanings. By Fannie Parry. The gathered Memorials, in Prose and Verse, of one who fell asleep in early life. Elegant cloth binding, 50 cts.

Prophetical and Practical Tracts. [illegible]

Practical Gospel Tracts, for Distribution. [illegible]

Leaflets for Letters, (Envelope size.) [illegible]

Tracts on Immortality and Future Punishment. [illegible]

resurrection, blooming with immortality and eternal life.

Funeral service by Eld. Samuel Thurber, in the Methodist chapel, Hatley. Text, Isa. 25 : 19. He spoke words very comforting to believers and instructive to all present.

Yours in hope, John B. Whitcomb.

Died, in Casco, Me., June 5th, 1862, Mariam, wife of Bro. Jesse Gay, aged twenty-nine years, ten months, nine days.

Sister Gay lived in Casco as Mariam March until more than twenty years of age, when she embraced Christ by faith as the great and only Life-Giver, and, with many of her young associates, was led to look for and love his appearing. Among these was Bro. Jesse Gay, with whom she soon after united in marriage, and they came to reside in this place (West Poland.) While here for a term of years, by a virtuous life and tender regard for all around her, she won seemingly the affection of all, and in her departure from us has left many friends. Her disease was consumption. It has seemed to be preying upon her constitution quite a number of years, but did not truly develop itself until some ten months previous to her death. She clung to life quite tenaciously during most of her sickness, on account of her family and friends, but at the same time was laboring to resign all into the hands of God. A few weeks before her death she was removed to Casco, to the house of a dear sister (Bro. Gay having disposed of his Poland home), where she continued to sink until she calmly fell asleep in Jesus. I visited her three days before her death, and as I left, her last words were, "Good bye! Albert, we'll meet in the kingdom." She has left Bro. Gay in loneliness, with two little ones to care for, and also brothers and sisters, and many friends, to mourn and say—

Farewell, Mariam, now we miss thee,
Miss thy presence everywhere,
And our hearts are filled with sadness,
While thy voice no more we hear;
But our sorrow is not hopeless,
For thou dost in Jesus sleep,
And the white-robed angel watchers
Round thy grave their vigils keep.

Now we wait the promised morning
When our King shall come to reign,
When the strong man's chains are sundered,
And the captives live again;
Then with joyful hearts we'll greet thee,
Where no grief shall ever come;
Where the ransomed all are gathered
In a fair eternal home.

Remarks were made at the funeral by the writer from 1 Cor. 15 : 35.

Jas. A. Libby.

Fell asleep in Jesus, on the 24th of June, at Westminster, Mass., Jane W., wife of Bro. John G. T. Cruse, after a severe illness.

She had been a firm believer in the second coming of Christ from 1843 to the time of her death. A few days before she died she said a cord was severed from this earth, such as she never felt before, and that Christ was "all in all" to her, and with her feeble voice she sang—

"Weary pilgrim, why this sadness?
Why mid sorrow's scenes decline?
The trial strange brings joy and gladness,
For all things shall yet be thine!"

and,

"I'm a lonely trav'ler here."

Her last words were, while she had her reason, "Time is short!" The funeral was attended by Bro. Samuel Heath of Lunenburg, Mass., who delivered a faithful and comforting discourse from 1 Thess. 4 : 14. Thus in the short space of two years and eight months I have committed three dear ones to the silent grave; but I "sorrow not, even as others which have no hope." J. G. T. Cruse.

FOREIGN NEWS.

By the arrival of the Steamship Great Eastern, we have news from Liverpool July 1st, and Queenstown 2nd.

News unimportant.

Lord Brougham explained that in his speech in the House of Lords on the American question, that he merely wished, as a fellow christian, to remonstrate with the Americans on their course in the civil war. Gloss it over as they might, the war threatened fatal results to the American people.

The Daily News city article regards the latest news as portending an almost indefinite postponement of peace in America.

LATER.

The Steamer City of New York brings news from Liverpool July 2nd, Queenstown 3d.

RUSSIA.

Incendiarism still prevails, not only at St. Petersburg but in other cities of Russia. Advices from Odessa state that on the nights between the 6th and 8th of June various large conflagrations took place. Storehouses of grain and other produce were destroyed, and great consternation prevailed. These fires are attributed to political motives, and supposed to be caused by the secret societies who do not think the Imperial Government is advancing rapidly enough in the path of reform. The measures taken by the Government tend to confirm the suspicion. The governors of provinces are authorized to declare martial law against incendiaries, and sentence them without appeal to the Emperor. A special decree empowers them to punish with sentence of death any person or persons found guilty of murder, pillage, or attempt to destroy the crops.

The Imperial Library at Paris is about to open a reading-room much larger than the celebrated one at the British Museum. The Imperial Library, the largest in the whole world, is said to contain 1,800,000 volumes, on seventeen miles of shelves.

Polish Census. From the latest returns it appears that the kingdom of Poland contains 5,850,000 inhabitants. Of that number 600,000 are Jews. Warsaw has 165,000 inhabitants, 45,000 of whom are Jews. At the census of 1846, Poland contained only 213,000 Jews.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

Fortress Monroe, July 6. Gen. McClellan has advanced about seven miles up the river, but no fighting has been heard of for the last two days.

BOMBARDMENT OF VICKSBURG.

Cairo, July 8. The steamer Sunshine has arrived. The bombardment was continued. The town was deserted except by the military.

Philadelphia, July 8. The Press has a dispatch from Newbern 2d, stating that Gen. Burnside's entire army is in motion against Richmond.

New York, July 8. The Tribune Fortress Monroe letter of the 6th says: Yesterday our pickets advanced from four to five miles from the river and saw no enemy, who seem to have mysteriously retired. General McClellan has advanced his lines down to the Chickahominy and no fears are entertained of a flank movement in that direction. By noon to-day General McClellan expected to have his position so fortified as to be able to bid defiance to the enemy in any shape they might choose to come.

New York, July 9. An army letter states that a rebel captain, who was taken prisoner, confessed that the rebel loss on Friday at Gaine's Hill was 24,000, and that their total losses in the week's fighting were from 60, to 70,000.

Another letter says a number of our wounded have come in, having been ordered by the rebels to seek their own camps. Our loss, now, says this letter, is reduced to less than 10,000 men.

New York, July 10. The World has a statement from a Union man who has just reached this city from Atlanta, Georgia, respecting the position of affairs at the South. From his accounts it appears that had the recent contest before Richmond terminated in a Confederate defeat the rebellion would have been ended, as the spirit of the South is almost utterly broken by the long series of rebel defeats; that the rebel army at Richmond previous to the late battles was undoubtedly over 200,000 strong.

The Herald's Washington dispatch says it is not unlikely that the President will issue a proclamation at an early day announcing a change in the policy of the Administration, to wit: a more vigorous prosecution of the war.

The Times' Washington dispatch announces that a discovery has been made by the Government of a great rebel conspiracy, which was to have burst upon the country simultaneously with the great battles before Richmond. The rising was expected to take place in Tennessee, Kentucky and Maryland, and Jeff. Davis was, in the confusion, to march on Washington. The first part of the plan, the defeat of Gen. McClellan, failed, however, and consequently the rest was not attempted.

The Herald's Washington dispatch says the the President is satisfied that affairs on the Peninsula are in much better condition than has been represented. He gives great credit to Gen. McClellan for having in no way exaggerated facts. He has seen the necessity of reinforcing the army, and returns with the conviction that Gen. McClellan is in his proper position, that the army is devoted to him, and full of confidence in his ability, and that all he requires should and shall be done without delay.

Nashville, July 13. Between 3000 and 4000 Georgians, Texans and guerrillas, under Col. Forest, attacked the 11th Michigan and 3d Minnesota regiments in Murfreesboro' at an early hour this morning. There was desperate fighting, but at three P. M., the Michigan troops had surrendered. The Minnesotians were strongly intrenched and cut the enemy to pieces terribly with Hewett's Kentucky Battery, repulsing them with great slaughter in three charges.

Flags of truce were sent in by Colonel Forest, demanding their surrender. Colonel Leslie replied that he could hold his position a week.

The railroad track was torn up, but was replaced. An attack on Nashville is not improbable. Col. Leslie is reported falling back on Nashville.

Memphis, July 11. Arkansas refugees report that Gen. Curtis attacked and cut to pieces 500 Confederates under Col. McNiell, 30 miles east of Batesville, on the 4th.

Memphis, July 13. A Vicksburg dispatch of the 4th states that the bombardment is tremendous and increasing. It is estimated that the Federals have fired 32,000 shot and shell. The inhabitants have taken refuge in the woods.

A foraging party of 1000 of Gen. Curtis' men have been attacked and nearly all killed. But few were captured alive.

Nashville, Tenn., July 14. Three of Hewitt's battery who escaped from Murfreesboro report that their battery and the 3d Minnesota had surrendered. Col. Duffield was mortally wounded.

An escaped prisoner reports the 1st, 2d and 4th Georgia regiments, the 1st Kentucky regiment, and Texas Rangers, and 1700 mounted infantry, under command of Forest and Warner—6000 in all—advancing on Nashville.

Gen. Buell's force, estimated at 30,000 strong, have all crossed the Tennessee river. It is supposed they are making a feint movement on Chattanooga to cover movements on Rome, Georgia.

Cincinnati, July 14. The Gazette's special dispatch says that General Ward assumed command last night. The city is under martial law. No man is to appear without his musket under penalty of being shot down.

Kinderhook, N. Y. Ex-President Martin Van Buren is very low to-day, from his sufferings under throat affection. His physicians say that he cannot long survive. He is insensible, and unable to recognize friends and relatives.

Rome and Sardinia.—In one of his speeches at Naples the Robber King announced that the French Emperor and himself were in perfect accord about the Roman question, and that within a year Rome would be the capital of the Italian Kingdom. Within a year! Let the date be well marked and the words of the Robber King to be well remembered; and let a year hence tell where he and perhaps his Imperial patron will then be. Will either then wear a crown? The Church at all events can afford to wait the issue in perfect serenity and confidence.—London Register.

☞ The Mormons have had a small rebellion of their own. A fellow named Morris, who set up for the prophet Moses just returned to earth, got up a crowd of followers, established a settlement, repudiated the regular Government, and began plundering for a living. Militia were called out, a siege and fight ensued, the new Moses was whipped, and 174 of his foolish followers were sent to prison. Some lives were lost, among them that of the new prophet.

Annexation of Canada. A Canadian paper published at Red River, is out in favor of annexation to the United States. It says that Great Britain shows a perfect indifference to the settlement, and it enjoys none of the commercial or governmental advantages it has a right to expect; and that, on the other hand, American influence of every kind is operating upon it.

Tuesday, Aug. 26th, will be at the Wilbraham campmeeting, to continue through the week.

Friends who wrote me from Conn. will please write me without delay as to their wishes and plans for my labors there, after the campmeeting.

Ghostology.

The articles which have appeared under this caption, in successive numbers of the Crisis, have been revised by the author, W. Sheldon, and are now ready for delivery in the shape of a neat pamphlet of forty-eight pages. Price in glazed covers 10 cts. Single, $6 per hundred. Without covers 8 cts. $5 per hundred, post paid. Orders with cash may be addressed to Miles Grant, or H. L. Hastings, Boston, Mass., or to W. Sheldon, Merrimac, Sauk Co., Wis.

Campmeeting Notice.

According to previous appointment, there will be a campmeeting in the town of Grand Blanc, Genesee Co., Mich., on the farm of Bro. John Arable, commencing Aug. 27th, 1862. This meeting is appointed for the express purpose of calling together all such as love the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ in this State; and if brethren from other States, or from Canada, wish to attend, of course there will be no objection. Come, then, dear brethren and sisters; come with your tents and provisions; come well furnished with materials to take care of yourselves and others; come with warm hearts in the fear of God to labor for the salvation of souls, and be sure that you come at the commencement of the meeting. Our meeting last year was a blessed one, and we anticipate a more glorious one this year. Bro. and Sr. Mansfield will be there to aid in the proclamation of the gospel.

P. S. Brethren coming on the cars, from the East or West, will stop at Holly. The meeting is to be some twelve miles north of Holly. Stages run within three miles of the meeting. In behalf of the church,

A. N. Seymour.

General Meeting.

The brethren in New Hampshire, believing in gospel order, and the gifts as given to a New Testament church, feeling that in this day of unbelief and apostasy they should meet together, exhort one another, and contend earnestly "for the faith which was once delivered to the saints," that they may be able to stand against those in these last days who "resist the truth" like Jannes and Jambres, and "come behind in no gift; waiting for the coming of our Lord," that we may be found "blameless in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ;" and while we may regret any confusion (as God is not the author of confusion) or fanaticism, in this or other countries, that may have been connected with the exercise of the gifts; still we would not turn away from these, God's own appointed channels of communicating strength, comfort and blessings to his church in this day of trial, as well as the past; and, while we have our solemn conviction that, although we may hold many of the glorious truths of the gospel as very sacred and essential, still if we are destitute of its power, we shall be found with a lamp, but destitute of oil in the day of God: have concluded to commence a meeting on New Durham Ridge August 21st, and hold it over the following Sunday, for the investigation of the word, and to seek the divine blessing. Bro. J. Billings and others will be present to preach the word. All are invited. In behalf of the brethren,

J. G. Smith.

Advent Campmeeting.

A general campmeeting for Northern New York, Vermont and Canada East, will be holden in Perry's Mills, N. Y., near the depot of the Ogdensburg Railroad in that place, six miles from Rouse's Point, N. Y.

The Adventists in the entire region, with all classes and persuasions of christians, are most cordially invited to attend, and take an earnest and active part in the objects of the meeting. All who have tents will bring them. And friends in the vicinity are invited to put up cheap lumber tents, or others, for themselves and strangers. Board and lodging will be provided on reasonable terms, also pasture for horses. Every thing will be done by the brethren and friends in the vicinity to make the people comfortable. Our tried and faithful brethren, Dr. E. M. Loomis of Perry's Mills, N. Y., and Alvah Loomis of Champlain, N. Y., may be addressed by any who wish accommodation, or any further information about the meeting. The exact location of the grounds will be given in season. The meeting will commence on Friday, August 17th, at 4 o'clock, P. M., and be continued every day over two Sabbaths, to the 24th.

Ministers of God, brethren, sisters, friends, one and all, come up to the feast. There never was a time when the door was opened so wide and effectual as now, for the Adventists to speak and work for God and a doomed world. Many too among us have left their first love, and have need of help. Many in our families are out of the ark of safety, and shall we not do something to rescue them before the storm of vengeance falls? Can we endure to see the destruction of our kindred? The community too are looking to us for light on the coming kingdom. Shall we not give it? Can we withhold and be innocent in the day of the Lord? We have light on the time, and the signs of the Advent of the King of kings. Shall we not give it? Why hesitate to give the trump a certain sound? Rome is falling, the False Prophet is tottering, and Armageddon, with its strife and slaughter, is just upon us!

Come, then, ye veterans of the Advent faith; come, ye young with the old soldiers, let us shake off the dust of sloth and indolence, and gird on the armor of God. Let us seek and possess full redemption, and do what we can to multiply the number who shall stand with us on Mount Zion in the day of the Lord. Joshua V. Himes.

Boston, July 14, 1862.

Maine Conference.

The Maine Annual Advent Conference will convene Sept. 10th, at 7 P. M., and continue over the following Sunday. It is hoped that all Advent ministers in the State, who can work together in union and fellowship, in the promotion of the objects of our conferences, will be present, and as many other brethren and sisters as can well attend this yearly gathering, to work together for the spread of this gospel of the kingdom of God, that sinners may be saved, and the church strengthened and fitted for the soon coming of the Lord from heaven.

The place of the conference is not yet decided upon, but will be soon, and given.

O. R. Fassett, President.
I. C. Wellcome, Scribe.

Notice.

The Lord willing, there will be a campmeeting at Corinna, Me., (on Mr. Weston Nutter's place) commencing the first Monday in September, and continuing over the following Sabbath. We extend a cordial invitation to all the brethren in this section, and abroad, to come and worship the Lord with us. There will, we hope, be a full delegation of preaching brethren with us from abroad to dispense the word of life. Particulars hereafter.

B. C. Moore, Albert Door, Geo. H. Fisher, } Committee of Arrangements.

Special Book Notice.

In fulfillment of a long cherished purpose, I am happy to present my friends with a list of my books, at reduced prices, as follows, till further notice:—

The Voice of the Church, 75 cts.
Great Controversy, paper 25 cts; cloth (small edition) 30 cts.
Thessalonica, or The Model Church, paper 25 cts.
Spiritualism, by Ramsey, 15 cts. paper, 25 cts. cloth.
Pauline Theology, 10 cts.
Reasons for my Hope, paper, 18 cts., (ready in a few week.)
Retribution, or the Doom of the Ungodly, 18 cts., and free to all who deny the resurrection of the unjust, provided they will read it through.
Tracts from my list, 1800 pages for $1 00. A full supply nearly ready. Tracts by mail, 1200 pages for $1.00. Free to the poor. Several German tracts at 3 cents each.

The Publication Society will sell the above works from the Crisis office, at the same rates; and I intend, (D.V.) after a month or so, to keep a full assortment constantly on hand.

Let orders come in, and they shall be attended to, if the Lord will. A still further discount from these prices will be made to those who order quantities, and send the money with their order, directed to MILES GRANT, or H. L. HASTINGS, Boston, Mass.

Meeting of the Advent Christian Association.

To the brethren in Christ, and churches of the Lord who "serve the living God," and "wait for his Son from heaven," Greeting:—The Board of Managers, after due consultation, have decided to appoint the third annual meeting of the Advent Christian Association, at Wilbraham, Mass., to commence Tuesday, 4 o'clock, P. M., August 26th, 1862.

Two reasons have led them to decide upon this time in preference to October, as heretofore. First—A larger attendance can be secured; Second—Much expense can be saved. These are weighty considerations. The business to be transacted at the annual meeting of this Association is very important. The interests of every church, and every individual, "looking for the blessed hope," are involved in its proceedings. This Society controls the World's Crisis. It appoints its Editors and Managers. It decides what its character shall be, and marks out its policy, whether it shall give expression to every idea, however fanciful or absurd, which may demand its columns; or whether it shall select such only as are "meat in due season." It becomes necessary, therefore, that every church be represented, that our family paper be sustained in such a manner as to "feed the flock," that we may know whether its Editorship, eminently successful thus far, shall be changed or not.

A full representation, so desirable, can be best secured during campmeeting week. Distant churches in the South, West and East, are usually represented then, while they cannot afford six weeks afterwards to send other representatives so far to attend the Association alone. Having, for these reasons, fixed upon this time for our third annual meeting, it is hoped that we may have a large and profitable one. Lest we be disappointed, let earnest prayer be made to God daily, that whatever shall be done at that time may be done, not in the name of man, self, or party, but "in the name of the Lord Jesus."

Daniel T. Taylor, Chairman.
H. F. Carpenter, Clerk.

June 7th, 1862.

Note. The Board of the Advent Christian Association are requested to meet at Wilbraham on Tuesday, August 26th, at 8 o'clock, A. M. A prompt and punctual attendance desirable. D. T. Taylor, President. H. F. Carpenter, Clerk.

Note. Letters are solicited from churches and ministers who cannot possibly be otherwise represented. They may be directed to H. F. Carpenter, Collins Depot, Mass.

All pastors and evangelists, and delegates from churches co-operating with this Society, are members. Each church is allowed one delegate, and one additional delegate, for every fifty members above the number of twenty-five members. None can vote by letter.

Conference Notice.

The Illinois conference of Adventists will hold their quarterly meeting with the church near New Rutland, Lasalle Co., commencing Tuesday, Sept. 2d, at 2 o'clock, and continue over the Sabbath. Those coming from the East or West will take the Burlington and Quincy R. R., connecting with the Central at Menetata, or the Rock Island R R. connecting with the Central at Lasalle, stopping at New Rutland, on the Central R. R., where conveyances will be provided to the place of meeting. Preaching brethren in the conference are expected to be there. It will be held in the New England Mission Tent.

H. G. McCulloch, Sec. of Conf.

Campmeeting.

The great interest manifested at our tent meeting in New Preston, Ct., has induced us, with the advice of the brethren in that section, to appoint a campmeeting, to commence Tuesday, Sept. 2d, at 10 A. M. Some eight tents have already been counted up for the occasion, and we hope the number will be much larger. Brethren that want to work for the Lord will find here a new and interesting field.

We desire all who can, to bring provisions and tents for themselves and others. Plain food, and "all things common" is the Bible rule; let us practice it cheerfully. A daily stage from New Milford (Housatonic R. R.) at 12 will bring in all who wish. Distance eight miles. H. Pratt.

A Liberal Offer.

Being satisfied that time is short, and that what is done must be done quickly; and feeling anxious to do what we can to arouse a sleeping world and church, we make the following liberal offer:—Any one who will send three or more new subscribers to the Crisis for six months or one year, with advance pay for the same, shall receive at wholesale prices, including postage, any of our books and tracts they may select, amounting to one-third the value of the money sent. For instance, if they send three dollars, they receive one dollar's worth of books or tracts; for six dollars, we send them two dollar's worth; for twelve dollars, four dollar's worth, etc. Let every reader take hold of the work in earnest, and help scatter tracts, books and papers like autumnal leaves.

Miles Grant, per order of Publishing Committee.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brethren that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday Morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

Advent Hymn.

"A LITTLE WHILE."

"A little while," the Savior saith,
Ye shall not see my face;
But I will cheer your sorrowing hearts
With fresh supplies of grace.
Then mourn not that I go away,
But strive to do my will;
For mid your toils and trials here,
My Spirit's with you still.

"A little while," and my return
With joy ye soon shall hail;
Though heaven and earth shall pass away,
My promise shall not fail.
I'll come in clouds of dazzling light,
Your Savior and your King,
And all my ransomed ones on earth
To glory I will bring.

"A little while" my church below
Her Master's cross must bear;
Soon shall she hear the joyful call,
A crown of bliss to wear:
When she has fought the fight of faith,
And conquered in my name,
Before the assembled universe
Her victory I'll proclaim.

"A little while," and sin and death
Shall yield their scepter'd sway,
And I will give eternal life
To all who love that day.
And war and bloodshed, foul and wrong,
Shall then forever cease,
And I will come on earth to reign,
Your gracious Prince of Peace.

"A little while?" then, dearest Lord,
Do thou our strength renew,
And aid us by thy Spirit's grace
Our Master's work to do.
When weary with life's toilsome way,
We'll lean upon thy word,
And wait in patient faith and hope
Thy glorious Advent, Lord.

BERTHA.

Correspondence.

From F. H. Burbank.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS.:—Early in the morning of July 4th, a goodly number of "the household of faith" left the noise and bustle of the day, to attend the grove meeting at Tremont, distant about fourteen miles from Plymouth. The weather was delightful, and after a pleasant journey of three hours, we entered the grove singing "the songs of Zion" "with cheerful heart and voice," and were cordially received by the rest of our heavenly Father's family, many of whom we had not seen before.

We listened with delight to the bold and earnest preaching of Bro. Hastings. I was reminded of a circumstance that occurred in a certain town;—two lawyers were engaged on "a case at law." The plaintiff, who had the truth on his side, engaged a timid and conservative lawyer, while the lawyer on the other side was energetic and fearless. A verdict was given in favor of the defendant, much to the astonishment of the plaintiff and his counsel. A few days afterwards, the two lawyers met, and in answer to the question of the "counsel for plantiff," "how did you gain the case, when I had the truth on my side?" the other answered, "you told the truth as though it was a lie; and I told the lie as though it was the truth." Thus we were delighted to hear Bro. H., because he preached the truth as though it was the truth. It is too late to "mince matters." God's servants must be bold, and use "great plainness of speech," in these last days.

We were greatly edified by the "practical preaching" of Bro. Grant. "The batteries were terribly effective," and no one present escaped being wounded. I hope that no one will put on "sticking plaster" to conceal their wounds, but desire that all may apply to "the great Physician," and have a "permanent cure effected, and no scars left.

We heard with pleasure the discourses of Bro. Carpenter, and our hearts throbbed with delight, as the evidences of the nearness of "the kingdom" were presented to us. We can now "lift up (our) heads, for (our) redemption draweth nigh."

The prayer and conference meetings were blessed of the Lord. Numbers of cold and backslidden ones returned to their Father's house.

On the Lord's day we passed the time in a heavenly manner. The love-feast in the morning was attended by a goodly number, and in seventy minutes, over one hundred testimonies were given. Brother C. preached in the forenoon on "the signs of the times," and in the afternoon Bro. G. preached on "Spiritualism." Many Spiritualists were present, and among them a lecturer, who asked questions during Bro. G.'s discourse, and at its close expressed a desire to hear him again. Thus the Lord blesses his word. At half-past four, Bro. C. baptized two sisters, who came out of the water praising God. At half-past seven, we sat down to "the Lord's table" to commemorate "his dying love." The occasion was one of great solemnity, and we longed to see "the Bridegroom" and sit down to "the marriage supper of the Lamb." We can cry "Lord Jesus," "come quickly." At a quarter before nine, we bid farewell to the brethren and sisters, and arrived in Plymouth at midnight, greatly refreshed in spirit.

Our delegation of "workers" numbered thirty-two. Two of the brethren walked the entire distance to and from the camp-ground. "The work" is yet going on in P. Two new conversions lately. Six or eight will be baptized on the 13th. "Praise the Lord, for his wonderful works to the children of men."

Yours looking for Christ,
Plymouth, July 9, 1862.

From Sr. M. D. Wellcome.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—From various directions the inquiry comes to me, "Why do you not write more frequently for the Crisis?" and in connection the solicitation, "Keep your pen in motion," etc. Quite a pile of letters from friends have accumulated, and remain unanswered. So having not the time to address all who have written, I scribble a few lines for the Crisis by way of answer. I hope those dear friends who have long waited for a word of reply to their very welcome epistles, will not impute it to any lack of interest or regard for them; but I have lacked opportunity, and sometimes when a little leisure has been afforded, I have felt so wearied I had no disposition to write. I dislike writing when I am devoid of interest, for the ideas then are so flat.

You have seen my husband's change of address. Quite unexpected was our removal to Yarmouth. I hope it will be for the best. I left many friends whom I dearly loved at Richmond; but I have found kind friends here who have given me a cordial greeting, some of them long known and loved. One privilege is afforded here not enjoyed at R. without going three miles, i. e., an Advent meeting. We were the only family residing in the village who were Adventists. Here there are many. This will be very pleasant, although I do not confine my associations by any means to them. I have my friends and social intercourse with the pious in all the churches.

A new member has been recently added to our tri-circle, and our Charlie's long and oft-expressed desire has been granted by the advent of a little brother. So you will see that if my contributions are less frequent, it is because hours once given to my pen, are now occupied with new responsibilities. I hope those whose epistles now cheer us, will continue their efforts, and new ones be added to the number. Sister Kidder, I have not forgotten my indebtedness to you; will try and write soon. Do employ the talents God has given you in writing more frequently for the paper. And to all whose letters are unanswered, let me say, I want you to write again as you have opportunity. May God bless you and preserve you unto his heavenly kingdom. Your sister in Christ.

Yarmouth, Me.

From J. M. Hicks.

BRO. GRANT:—God bless you in all efforts put forth for truth through Christ. I sought the Savior and found him to be precious in the year of our Lord 1854, and believed for about seven years that any child of God had their reward at death, but not in full until the resurrection. I trust through this period of time that I was growing somewhat in grace and truth; but now I honestly think not in the further knowledge of it. I passed through a happy change when I first found Jesus; attended Advent meetings at that time. I thought while some of the brethren told me they did not expect to get their reward at death, "Well, if that is all the hope you have, I don't know as you ever will." But since this war commenced, through Jesus and the word, the truth and spirit, which agree, my eyes have been opened.

When this war commenced, I began to think deeply on the subject of fighting. I studied to know what duty was; but to sum it all up in little, it is written in the New Testament that we are not "under the law, but under grace." We are told that the law worketh wrath, and that the law never was made for a righteous man, but for the lawless. I perceive what makes the church so-called use the weapons that are carnal. It is this thinking Christ's kingdom is set up, and they think of upholding it; when we are plainly told it will be when the Savior comes the second time "without sin unto salvation." So salvation in the strict sense does not come until the Savior returns, when the seventh angel will sound and the Kingdom will be His, and Satan's Kingdom will be brought to desolation, and Spiritualism also, that raging man of Sin, will be destroyed. I believe the Savior will come quickly.

In closing I would say, your tracts awakened my attention: "The Rich Man," also the "Spirit in Man."

No. Providence, R. I.

From M. C. Whitaker.

BRO. GRANT:—I feel that we have great reason to thank God for the Bible in these last days of peril, and for all its precious promises to claim as ours. We are told to "search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life." How often I think when reading the life of Christ, that I should like to have sat at his feet and heard his sweet voice with my own ears. But I have the promise of his speedy return, and then if faithful I shall both hear and see him in all his glory. Blessed be the name of the Lord! Cheer up, brethren and sisters, our toils are almost o'er. We may never meet here, but let us meet on the other river shore, where partings never come, where no more tears are shed.

There are a few in this place who are looking for Jesus' speedy return. We have two prayer meetings weekly; not very often any preaching. I wish more preaching brethren would come this way and cheer up the waiting ones. May God bless you all, is the prayer of your unworthy sister,

Newfane, Vt.

From Sr. S. B. Daggett.

DEARLY BELOVED IN CHRIST:—On this beautiful morning, as I look abroad upon the works of creation, I feel to praise God with my whole heart for the rich blessings he so freely bestows upon me, all unworthy as I am. O! why is it we are so apt to be forgetful of the great Giver of all blessings? Let us awake, and be up and doing. Let us persuade sinners to come to Christ, that they may have a home in the coming kingdom. I feel to praise God more and more each day of my life. I have a sweet peace within my heart which the world cannot give.

To the brethren and sisters at Foster I would say, be faithful a little while longer. We shall soon get home and be at rest in God's kingdom, where none shall say, I am sick and weary; where there will be none to molest or make us afraid. "Stand up for Jesus" a little while longer; he will soon appear and gather his tired ones home. Glory to God for his rich promises which he has so freely given us! Hold out a little longer. Fear not, but be strong in the Lord. Pray for me, that my strength fail me not. Yours looking for Jesus' coming.

Fisherville, Windham Co., Ct.

From Ira Fancher.

DEARLY BELOVED IN THE LORD:—We are in duty bound to love one another fervently and God supremely, and to exhort one another and "so much the more as we see the day approaching." "But," says one, "you have seen the day just at hand for twenty years, and it don't come yet." True. But suppose I start with a good ship and captain for the city of London, with the understanding that when we run our vessel 2300 miles we shall land in London harbor. When we had counted off as we supposed 2300 miles, no London is in view. Shall we turn back and say there is no such city? No, no; we will say, "Steady, oh pilot," for

"We shall soon reach the harbor and the shore."

Yes, the blessed shores of immortality and eternal life. And another will inquire, How do you know that the day is approaching? or, What signs are there that the coming of the Lord draweth near? There are many. And I believe that the race of people that was alive when the sun was darkened (I believe supernaturally) in 1780, will not pass away (that is, die,) before that "same Jesus" will come again to redeem his people. Let us be ready and waiting. Amen.

Sandy Hill, N. Y.

From Sr. O. Morse.

BRO. GRANT:—I want to be a witness for my Master. In my distress I cried unto the Lord and he heard me. I have been a believer in the soon coming of Christ these many years. But there have been changes with us as well as with others. My husband and myself became convinced that we were living in the last days by hearing Bro. Himes and Father Miller preach in 1843 in Lockport, N. Y. Since that time we have moved to Wisconsin. When we came here there were none that believed in the signs of the times. But now there are a few who have their names cast out as evil, looking for that "blessed hope" of the "glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." We have preaching once in four weeks by Elder Gibson. The Crisis is a welcome messenger to us. I think we could not do without it. I hope it will continue till Christ comes.

Springville, Wis.

From Sr. Joanna Latham.

BRO. GRANT:—There are but few in this place who are believers in the soon coming of Christ to set up his kingdom, which shall be under the whole heavens. However, we are doing the best we can. Since I came here meetings are again set up. We procured a room and had it seated. We have no preachers, yet we feel that we are called to labor, and so let our light shine, that others seeing our good works "may glorify (our) Father which is in heaven."

Any preacher or preachers traveling in the West would receive a hearty welcome here. Why not come, Brn., since here there is quite as much wickedness, and more of the bread that is temporal, than in the East? Come and see. May God send you.

Beaver Dam, Dodge Co., Wis.

Gleanings on Prophecy.

Prophecy is history anticipated and contracted; history is prophecy accomplished and dilated. Lying oracles have been in the world; but all the wit and malice of men and devils cannot produce any such prophecies as are recorded in Scripture.—Bp. T. Newton.

God doth not use to set his people to work in the dark; they are the children of light, and they are no deeds of darkness which they have to do. Yea, he always suits their light to their labor, and gives them a clear discerning of what he is about.—Dr. J. Owen.

God travels to satisfy our comfort, but not our curiosity.—Lord John Napier.

The giving ear to the prophets is a fundamental character of the true church.—Sir. I. Newton.

The Revelation was not written without tears, (Rev. 5: 4,) neither without tears will it be understood.—J. Wesley.

A blessing is pronounced on those who hear, and read the words of this prophecy, (Rev. 1: 3,) . . . God commands the study of the book to me. Who then shall say, let it alone? . . . I cannot but think it is a sin for any minister of the gospel to say he knows nothing about it.—B. Slight, M. A.

The prophetical portions of the sacred Scriptures . . . are a beacon light, in times of storm and agitation on the great ocean of human life, thrown out to guide us as we navigate, and to warn us of the breakers on dangerous coasts.—Dr. G. Duffield.

Prophecy is equivalent to any miracle, and is of itself evidently miraculous. . . . The voice of Omnipotence alone could call the dead from the tomb,—the voice of Omniscience alone could tell all that lay hid in dark futurity, which to man is as impenetrable as the mansions of the dead,—and both are alike the voice of God.—Dr. A. Keith.

God gave us his word of prophecy, not to puzzle, mislead, or deceive, but to be a light to teach us his own purpose, and our duty and chief end.—James Scott.

No discussion on the fulfillment of prophecy must ever divert, but on the contrary, should draw our minds to the consideration of our personal safety in the sight of God. Are we hiding ourselves within the everlasting arms,—and when the last storm shall come, and the last thunder shall roar, and the last fires shall blaze, are we conscious that we shall be found resting on the rock that shall never fail?—Dr. Cumming.

In God's time, which is the best time, and in God's way, which is the best way, prophecy shall certainly be fulfilled. Every word of Christ is very pure, and therefore very sure.—Matthew Henry.

As a band to bind these gleanings together, we may take the words of the apostle: Despise not prophesyings.—Millennial News.

Higher.

Higher in the christian life,
Hasten up the steep before thee;
Far above the din of strife,
See thy Savior smiling o'er thee;
He has said, and he is sure,
Faithful servants must "endure."

Higher, christian! Tarry not,
Though the vale is fair with flowers,
Perils hide in sunny spots;
Shun the soft enchanted bowers,
Linger not by pleasure's stream,
List not to ambition's dream.

Higher, christian! climb the mount—
Mount of prayer. Thy Master climbed it
Many a night for thee, thou frail one;
His example hath sublimed it.
Plead as Jacob did of old,
Till the blessing thee enfold.

Higher! higher! weary one,
Faint not, though thy comforts perish.
Weep when night comes darkly on,
Hiding hopes thy heart did cherish.
Still, though weeping, look above,
He who rules is full of love.

Higher, christian! angels wait,
Watching all thy toilsome way;
Higher! till the golden gate
Opens to the land of day.
Blessed forever thou shalt be,
Home for all eternity.

Banner of the Covenant.

Be Easy.

Friends, be easy. Don't fret. Supposing some one does think differently from you. Supposing he does quote scripture that tends to overthrow some of your darling theories. Would you like to gag his mouth, or break his pen? Well, may be he won't fight with you. Perhaps he has something more to do than to stop and dispute, and wrangle. Perhaps all your sly thrusts, and innuendoes, and musqueto-bites won't move him away from his Master's business.

Well, what then? Why, just be easy. Don't fret. The world will roll on even if you can't get all the crotchets that are in your head into all others. The world indeed may not perish, if it should be suddenly deprived of one or two of your pet hobbies of which you think so much, and on which you doat so fondly.

Now it's best to be quiet. You can't make one hair white or black, and the most you will do will be to make yourself very uncomfortable. Come, get right yourself, so that a little Bible won't capsize your theory, and so that a little plain truth won't put you in a fret.

Come, friends, just be good natured; that face of yours is long enough for two, and judging from appearances, one would think you had been sucking lemons, or eating pickles for a month. Now the best way is to feast on something sweeter and better. If you want to love God, you must love your brother also, and that too, even if you happen to know more than he does; or even if by some marvelous chance he should happen to know more than you do! Don't knock his lantern to atoms because it gives more or less light than yours.

We think it's best to "be easy," don't you? Well, let us try, then, and behave like kind, quiet followers of Him who said,—"I am meek and lowly in heart.—Indian Arcana.

The Number Seven.

On the 7th of the 7th month a holy observance was ordained to the children of Israel, who feasted seven days and remained seven days in tents; the 7th year was directed to be the Sabbath of rest for all things, and at the end of seven times seven years commenced the grand jubilee; every 7th year there was a grand release from all debts, and bondsmen were set free. From this law might have originated the custom of binding young men to seven years apprenticeship, and punishing incorrigible offenders by transportation for seven, twice seven, or three times seven years. Anciently a child was not named before seven days, not being accounted to fully have life before that periodical day. The teeth spring out in the 7th month, and are shed in the 7th year, when infancy is changed into childhood. At thrice seven years the faculties are developed, manhood commences, and man becomes legally competent to all civil acts; at four times seven a man is in full possession of his strength; and at five times seven he is fit for the business of the world; at six times seven he becomes graver and wiser, or never; at seven times seven he is in his apogee, and from that decays; at eight times seven he is in his climacteric; at nine times seven, or sixty-three, he is in his grand climacteric, or year of danger; at ten times seven, or three-score years and ten, was by the royal prophet pronounced the period of human life.

Editorial Responsibility.

The Nashville Christian Advocate says with great truth: "To get up a fuss, an interesting squabble, is very easy. Our experience is that this could be done any week of the year. Elements are always in hand which need only to be cast into the paper to make a flare-up. Then times would be lively. The editor would be visible, marching up and down his columns commanding the peace, begging brethren to be reconciled, explaining his position, defending himself from misrepresentations, replying to personal attacks and such like. But would all this be to the edification of the church? Peace in the church, like health in the body, is not noisy, not demonstrative. There is not much self-consciousness in such a state, not much visibility; but things move along quietly, and there is solid prosperity."

DO YOUR OWN WORK.—Enlarge not thy destiny, says the oracle; endeavor not to do more than is given thee in charge; the one prudence of life is concentration; the one evil is dissipation; and it makes no difference whether our dissipations are fine or coarse. Property and its cares, friends and a social habit, or politics, or music, or feasting—everything is good which takes away one plaything and delusion more, and drives us home to add one stroke of faithful work. Friends, books, pictures, lower duties, talents, flatteries, hopes,—all are distractions which cause oscillations in our giddy balloon, and make a good poise and a straight course impossible. You must elect your work; you shall take what your brain can, and drop the rest. Only so can that amount of vital force accumulate which can make the step from knowing to doing. —Emerson.

A NEW REMEDY FOR LONG SERMONS.—A sufferer from long sermons suggested to the London Times that, after half an hour's preaching, the bottom of the pulpit should be contrived to come out on the principle of an oubliette, and project the clerical transgressor into the gulf below. Another proposes that a sounding-board or cover, in the shape of an extinguisher, made exactly to fit the pulpit, be suspended above it, and that at the expiration of twenty-five minutes from the delivery of the text it should begin to descend, so as, exactly at the half hour, to "shut up" the lengthy preacher.

BEAUTIFUL LEGEND.—There is a beautiful legend illustrating the blessedness of performing our duty at whatever cost to our own inclinations. A beautiful vision of our Savior had appeared to a monk, and in silent bliss he was gazing upon it. The hour arrived in which it was his duty to feed the poor of the convent. He lingered not in his cell to enjoy the vision, but left it to perform his humble duty. When he returned, he found the blessed vision still waiting for him, and uttering these words "Hadst thou staid, I must have fled."

THE GOLDEN RULE.—It is said of an Indian that whenever he got into a bad place in a swamp, where the ground was too soft for safety, he put up a stake to mark the place. Thus he not only avoided the danger himself, but he kept others from falling into the same snare. Might not every christian learn a lesson from this rude son of the forest, not only to guard against his own false steps, but as he prays, "Lead us not into temptation," to be careful to remove temptation out of his brother's path?

☞ TIME is the seed of eternity. At the judgment the question which will decide our destiny will be no other than this—How have you used your time? And the less there remains of this precious article the more valuable it should appear.

The Perfect Pattern.

THE HOLY CHILD JESUS.
A WORD TO OUR LITTLE READERS.

"There is no friend like Jesus,
So gentle, kind and true;
This friend is always near us,
And sees whate'er we do."

Little readers, do you want an example, beautiful, safe, heavenly? perfect as perfect can be, without spot, blemish or any such thing? a pattern to imitate in all you think, say and do—calculated to make you happy here, happy forever? Where will you find it? On earth? There have been great men, good men, wise men, very great, good and wise, from the days of Enoch till now; but where among all the sons and daughters of Adam, can we point you to one, even one that would be safe to imitate in all things? The greatest, wisest and best men on earth have nothing save what God gives, and are subject to like passions as we are, liable to err, mistake in judgment; they have nothing good or praiseworthy, save what is received; their light is a borrowed light. "Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above."

"All flesh is as grass, and all the glory of men as the flower of grass." "Verily every man at his best state is altogether vanity." "Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man in whom there is no help." "Cease ye from man whose breath is in his nostrils, for wherein is he to be accounted of?"

If the greatest, wisest and best men that ever lived are unsafe guides, where shall we look for a perfect pattern, safe to follow always, everywhere? Look to Jesus? Yes, that's it, little friends, look to Jesus, the bright image of his Father, full of grace and truth. The voice from the excellent glory said: "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." One special design in his assuming our nature, was to set us a perfect example in all things. "He was holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners." Christ was a perfect pattern from his childhood—perfect in patience, in meekness, in love, in humility, in self-denial, in doing good, and in submission. All the christian graces were in him and abounded; "love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, meekness, temperance, against which there is no law."

Is it not safe and wise to imitate Jesus in all these things? "Even hereunto were ye called; because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example that ye should follow his steps: who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth; who, when he was reviled, reviled not again: when he suffered, he threatened not; but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously." 1 Pet. 2: 21, 22, 23. Children, were you to see a little boy that did every thing just right, was meek, modest, mild, sweet-tempered, kind, affectionate, obedient, always wearing a cheerful, heavenly smile, who went about doing good, doing all he possibly could to make every body happy, would you not think such an example worthy your imitation? Well, this is Jesus—the lovely Jesus. There was not a thought in his heart, not a word in his lips, not an act of his life, save that of love, mercy and truth; his whole life from his childhood was "like apples of gold in pictures of silver."

Little folks, will you take this blessed Jesus for your example? strive to imitate him in all things? follow him through evil report and good report? He invites you freely. "I love them that love me, and they that seek me early shall find me," saith the Lord.

"Suffer the little ones to come,"
The blest Redeemer said;
"I'll take them to my heavenly home,
And give them angels' bread.
My precious blood I'll shed to save
From sin, from sorrow, and the grave."

The Boy that Wanted to Steal.

"How I should like to steal some of those nice apples; but I guess I wont," said Frank Raymond to George Leslie, as they were walking by farmer Grey's orchard.

"O Frank, you wicked boy! You are breaking one of God's commandments," replied George.

"No, I am not," said Frank, "I only said I should like to steal some. That is not breaking the commandment, is it?"

"Yes, it is just as bad to think steal, as it is to act steal," said George.

And so it is, boys. He who wishes to steal, is—in God's eyes—a thief; and has sinned against God as much as though he had stolen. And he who wants to do any wrong thing, is just as guilty, in the sight of God, as though he had done it. Never cherish wrong thoughts, children, and you will never do wrong deeds.

Boston, July, '62. AUNT MARY.

TWO LETTERS FROM SUMMIT, WIS.

Dear Bro. Grant:—I heartily give you my name for the pledge. I neither use tea, coffee, nor any thing your pledge prohibits. I am a girl sixteen years old. I will try and prove faithful to my pledge. I take great pleasure in perusing the columns of the Crisis, and have for a year past; but it has been more interesting to me since you started the Try Company than before. I hope that all my young friends will take pleasure in signing their names to the pledge.

Yours in hope of a kingdom,
FILENA M. ANDREWS.

Dear Bro. Grant:—I am glad that you have started a Try Company for us. I am a little girl twelve years old, and wish to enlist in it. I will try and prove faithful. I hope that all the little boys and girls will join the Try Company, and learn to love their Savior more than any thing else.

ADALIA F. ANDREWS.

Little children, you must be
Always loving, good, and kind;
When at play, you must agree,
And your parents always mind.

The "Try Company."

A gentleman who was riding in the cars noticed a bright little fellow, between five and six years of age and engaged in the attempt to unloose a knot in a string that bound a small parcel. The knot had become well compacted and the child's tiny fingers seemed to make no impression thereon. The patient earnestness of the little fellow was contrasted with the apparent indifference of his parents, who made no attempt to assist him. At last the gentleman, whose sympathies with children are warm, could bear the sight no longer; so partly to help the child and partly to rebuke the parents, he took out his knife and handing it to the boy said:

"Here, my little fellow, try the virtue of a sharp blade. You can't untie the knot."

Something to his surprise the knife was not taken, but instead the child answered, with a smile:

"Please, sir, father don't allow me to say I can't. I belong to the 'TRY COMPANY.'"

"Indeed!" said the gentleman, drawing back his hand. "I never heard of that company before."

"Oh, I've always belonged to it. Haven't I, father?" And the child turned with an expression of loving confidence in his face towards his father.

"He's a worthy member of that excellent association, sir," remarked the father, now speaking to the gentleman and smiling.

"Ah, I understand you!" Light was breaking in upon his mind.

"This is a part of your discipline. You never permit your little boy to say I can't."

"No, but instead, 'I'll try,' sir."

"Excellent," said the gentleman, "Excellent! Here is the way that men are made. It is the everlasting 'I can't' that is dwarfing the energies of thousands upon thousands all over the land. A feeble effort is made to overcome some difficulty and then the arms fall wearily and the attack is abandoned."

"And who is most to blame for this?" was inquired.

"Parents," was the unhesitating reply. Parents who fail to cultivate patience and perseverance in their children. Parents who carry them when they should let them walk, even though their feet may be weary. I see it all as clear as light and see my own fault at the same time. I cut the knot of difficulties for my children every day instead of requiring them to loosen it themselves. But sir, they shall join the 'Try Company' after this. I'll have no more knot cutting in my house."

How is it with you, reader, child or man? Are you a member of the "Try Company?" If not and you have any ambition to be something more than a drone in the hive, join it at once, and from that time forth never let the words "I can't" find a place on your lips.—Arthur's Home Magazine.

About Order.

Little friends, put things right back in their proper places. Never leave things all about, helter-skelter, topsy-turvy,—never. When you use any article—hoe, shovel, rake, pitchfork, axe, hammer, tongs, boots or shoes, books, slates, pencils, writing apparatus, pins, thimbles, pincushions, needles, work-baskets, kitchen furniture, every article of housewifery or husbandry, no matter what it is—the very moment you have done using it, return it to its proper place. Be sure to have a special place for everything, and everything in its place. Order, order, perfect order is the watchword, heaven's first law. How much precious time is saved (aside from vexation) by observing order, systematic regularity. And little folks should begin early to preserve order in everything—form habits of order. Those loose, slipshod, slatternly habits are formed in childhood, and habits once formed cling for life. Young friends, begin early to keep things straight in their proper place; study neatness, order, economy, sobriety, everything just, honest, pure, lovely, and of good report.

Little things—ay, little things—
Make up the sum of life;
Then let us watch these "little things,"
And so respect each other,
That not a word, or look, or tone,
May wound a friend or brother.

On the death of Dr. L. Smith, Hollowell, Me.

DEDICATED TO HIS SISTER.

The enemy conquered, though bravely he fought,
My brother, companion, and friend;
He has gone to the grave, he's returned to the dust,
O, when shall this mortal state end!

He lies low in the ground as a sinner accursed,
No mortal can save from his doom;
He's fallen! O who can now rescue him there,
For angels cannot reach the tomb.

From Zion a mighty Deliverer shall come,
Who hath trod the dark valley before him;
He pitied the lost and went down to the tomb,
And commanded the grave to restore him.

He shall come when the days of probation are o'er,
And awaken my brother from sleep;
I'll meet him again on the far distant shore,
In our home, where we never shall weep.

The Mediator.

BY H. L. HASTINGS.*

At the portals of the heavenly home Christ stands to welcome us to courts which our polluted feet would never dare to tread. We have boldness, by the blood of Jesus, to enter into the holy place. In ancient times, a lamb was slain, and his blood sprinkled became a pledge of safety, a token of deliverance. We were not redeemed with silver and gold; for us the price paid is blood; for us the ransom given is life. He gave "his life a ransom for many," "to be testified in due time." I thank God that this fact has been testified to me; and to-day, in this day of salvation, I testify this:—Christ died for our sins; and now he lives to save us. If he were dead, we might lament him as one who had done all he could for us; but yet the work would be incomplete. "It is Christ that died, yea, rather that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God" to make "intercession for us," that we adore.

We may come, now, boldly to the throne of grace. Our best friend is there to receive us. We do not come among strangers; we go to Christ. We do not go where awful majesty and kingly glory alone are seen; but we go where, veiled in humanity, Deity is incarnate. God is with us, manifest in the flesh; receiving us, weak, feeble, worthless, as we are, having been "touched with the feeling of our infirmities"; succoring us, tempted and tried as we are, having been tempted "in all points like as we are, . . . yet without sin"; saving us, helpless as we are, for he is a strong Savior, a mighty One.

The sinner need not fear to come to God, for there waits one to welcome him, who has laid down his life to save him; him "whom having not seen, (we) love; in whom, though now (we) see him not, yet believing, (we) rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory." And his work to-day is to make intercession for us. His work to-day is the work of a great High Priest, who knows how to have compassion on them that are ignorant and out of the way, seeing that he himself is compassed with infirmity. His work to-day is to stand before the golden altar, and offer up from the golden censer much incense with the prayers of all saints. His work to-day is to intercede in your behalf, and in mine. Often we say, "Brethren, pray for us." Often when fainting beneath the burdens of our lot, our hearts are greatly consoled when we know that some christian friend puts up a prayer for us; but when all earthly friends forget us, and when all earthly prayers cease, let us remember that there is one who forgetteth not to pray. Our friends that have borne with us our burdens, some of them have sunk in the sleep of death. No longer do they wrestle with strong cryings before the throne on our behalf; but "He is able to save to the uttermost them that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them." We may come, then; all may come. He is able to save to the uttermost, to the uttermost, those that are farthest off, wandering in darkness, he bids them come. From the ends of the earth, from the islands of the sea, from the heaving bosom of the mighty deep, Christ can hear prayer. To the utmost bound of the everlasting hills, to the deepest abodes of human sorrow and distress, to the farthest place of peril in all this world, his hand can reach, his arm can rescue; for the Lord is not straitened, nor is His arm shortened that He cannot save.

God has revealed what he would have us know of himself in Christ. We are not to look to Christ as representing a character essentially different from and unlike the Father. We are not to suppose that the Father is our foe, while Christ is our friend; for Christ hath said, "I and my Father are one," and "God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself." God's love shines out in Jesus' life. Christ did for us what the Father would have him do, and of the fulness of his grace we receive that mercy which shall bring us at last to be partakers of the divine nature, and inheritors of the heavenly glory. It is a great thing in this world for a man to have a friend in earthly courts. It is a great thing for a man to have a friend who is intimate in the councils and in the seats of power. But of all the friends in the universe, that can be of service to us, there is none like Jesus. We have a friend at court, we have an intercessor there; we have a kinsman that is bone of our bone, flesh of our flesh; and into our hearts he has poured the living energies of his own eternal life. We are linked to him by ties that never can be sundered. He prays for us; he waits to receive us; he shall come to save us, and in the day of his glory he shall welcome us to his rest. Among the splendors of the pilgrim's home, among the great things that shall be his joy, there is nothing like the voice of Christ saying, "Come, ye blessed." Fancy as we will all the raptures of that hour, there is no voice so sweet as that. The voice that said, "Thy sins be forgiven thee," shall speak to the forgiven then, and speak eternal blessedness. The voice that said in tenderest accents, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest," shall say, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom."

Mine ear hath heard, mine eye hath seen,
The glories of that home of song;
Though stormy billows roll between,
I go to join the angel throng.
But of the joys beyond the tide,
The welcomes on that golden strand;
The best shall be from Him who died
To bring me to the shining land.

In that day let me see Jesus, and hear him say, "Well done"; let but the Mediator who died for me, lives for me, receive me then, and I shall rejoice forever.

For the Crisis.

Resurrection of the Unjust.

As many questions are asked by our brethren, I propose to write a short piece in answer to one, which is, "Will the wicked dead have a resurrection?"

In answer to the above question, I propose to draw the attention of the readers to God's word; as no Bible question can be satisfactorily answered without coming directly to the Word. God has said,—"If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God."—1 Pet. 4: 11. I am aware that no inferential testimony, standing alone, is to be taken for proof. Therefore, we must have direct and positive testimony to answer the question before us. Have we got any? Has God said in his word that the wicked shall have a resurrection? or has he said they shall not? or is the Bible silent upon this question? To the last, I will say, the Bible is not silent upon this subject; and the testimony that says they shall not have a resurrection, I cannot find in God's word. But says one, Can you find Scripture saying they shall have a resurrection? We think we can. Observing the rule that no inferential Scripture has any weight, except it be in accordance with direct and positive testimony, we will examine the witnesses. Unless they can be impeached, we must believe what they say, when they testify positively on any subject. If we find a witness contradicting himself, his testimony is not to be taken. For example: if Paul should tell his Corinthian brethren that "We must all appear before the judgment-seat of Christ; that every one may receive the things . . . IN . . . . BODY, according to that he hath done, whether good or bad" (See 2 Cor. 5: 10, 11); and then tell the Galatians if they die in their sins that would be the end of them; that they should never have to give account for their deeds; I ask how could these statements be reconciled? But we think no such contradictory statements exist. The testimony is "yea and amen," not "yea and nay."

Our first witness is the Master himself; as recorded by John 5: 23,—"That all men should honor the Son, even as they honor the Father." How shall we honor the Son? Ans., by believing and obeying his words. Do we honor Christ if we disbelieve his words? John 5: 24,—"Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that heareth my words, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death into life." What death do we escape by believing in Christ? Do we escape the death that is passed upon all men? If so, we have eternal life now, and need not wait for a resurrection from the dead. But if the eternal life is future, then the death which we escape is also future. And when believers in Christ are raised from the dead, they will not come into condemnation, while some that are raised from the dead will come into condemnation. This is plain from the following, John 5: 28, 29,—"Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming in which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth, they that have done good unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation." The life spoken of in the 29th verse, is the same promised in the 24th verse. The resurrection is the time when one class get eternal life; the resurrection is also the time when another class get eternal death, or condemnation.

But some may say, the condemnation of the wicked consists in their being left in their graves, and that they are judged while dead, for the reason they cannot have life outside of Christ. If eternal life is meant, we admit it; for the following reasons:

First, the Savior says, "All that are in the graves shall hear his voice." We know that dead men know nothing while dead. If the dead can hear, then they may know something while dead. But God's word says, "The dead know not anything."—Eccl. 9: 5. Therefore, in order for dead men to hear and come forth, they must be reanimated. God's power will reanimate them. Mark what the Master said to the Sadducees, Mark 12: 24,—"Do ye not therefore err, because ye know not the Scriptures, neither the power of God?"

The question may be asked, if the wicked are raised to life in any sense, will it not be a reward? We think not. The Master says they will come forth to condemnation. But we will examine another scripture on this point. Matt. 10: 15; 11: 22, 24; Luke 10: 12, 14. The Master says, "It shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom and Gomorrah, in the day of judgment, than for that city." Now if those wicked Jews never have a resurrection, and are not brought to judgment, how can it be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrah than for that city? Dear reader, is there any meaning in such language? If those wicked Jews and Sodomites all got their punishment when they died, how will it be more tolerable?

Hear the Master, Matt. 11: 23; Luke 10: 13. "For if the mighty works had been done in Tyre and Sidon, which have been done in you, they had a great while ago repented, sitting in sackcloth and ashes." These scriptures point to a future day of retribution; not of a class, but of all men.

Hear the Master; Matt. 12: 36, 37,—"But I say unto you, that every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment. For by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned." We ask, do all men have judgment passed upon them when they die? Do the wicked give account for all they have said and done when they die? If so, what is the necessity of judging them in the last day? Christ says, "The word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day." John 12: 48. Is this last day when a man dies? If so, Mary and Martha were in a great error, and Christ, who loved them much, did not correct them; for they thought their brother would rise again at the last day. John 11: 24. And we think they were right, and there was no need of Christ's correcting them in their faith; for we think they understood the Master to teach a general resurrection at the last day, or day of judgment, and after men had died.

But again; Christ says, Matt. 12: 37, "By thy words thou shalt be justified." When will the righteous be justified? We answer, at the judgment. "And by thy words thou shalt be condemned." When will the wicked be condemned for their words and actions? We answer, at the same time the righteous are justified; i. e., at the day of judgment—the great reaping time, when men reap the reward of their doings. We read in Gal. 6: 8,—"For he that soweth to his flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the spirit, shall of the spirit reap life everlasting." By this scripture above we are taught that there is a great reaping day coming, in the which every man shall reap as he did sow. Now the sowing time of the righteous is in this present life. They sow to the spirit, and they shall of the spirit reap life everlasting. When do the righteous reap their crown of life? Luke 14: 14,—"For thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." Is not the sowing and the reaping time the same in both cases? If the resurrection is the time when the righteous are rewarded, is it not also the time when the wicked receive their punishment?

We think Paul teaches this very plainly in Acts 24: 14, 15, where he says, "There shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just, and unjust." I know it is thought by some that Paul simply admits that the Jews believed it, without endorsing it himself. But if we examine the 14th verse carefully, we find a very strong point. It is this: Paul says he believed "all things which are written in the law, and in the prophets." Now if we find it written in the prophets that the wicked dead will have a resurrection, then Paul believed it. He then adds, "which they themselves also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just, and unjust" If we turn to Dan. 12: 2, we read, "And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake; some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." If Daniel's people mean the saints only, then some of the saints will have a resurrection "to shame," etc. Is it not so, if the wicked are not raised?

Dear brethren, let us believe the truth, for "it is hard . . . to kick against the pricks." Stand upon the plain declaration of God's word, which says both classes "shall hear," "and they that hear shall live"; but only a part shall live eternally. John 5: 25, 28, 29. Please read Rom. 14: 10–12; Matt. 25: 31–46; Acts 10: 42; 17: 31; Rom. 2: 3, 5, 6; Jude, 14, 15; Matt. 12: 36; 1 Pet. 4: 5.

Answer of Elder Joshua V. Himes to Dr. Thomas Wardle.

DEAR BRO. WARDLE:—Your inquiry in the Herald of June 7th is now before me, dated Philadelphia, May 25, '62. You say,

"It is reported in high circles in this region, that you have changed your faith on the state of the dead, etc. I cannot give you the exact words of the report; but it is calculated, as it now goes, to mislead others and injure you. What are the facts? You have many friends who would like to know. We do not question your right to change your views, and would not esteem you the less for an honest difference of opinion. We have come out from Rome, and will not persecute for an honest difference of opinion, while we live christian lives."

1. In reply, I would first remark that this report has been extensively circulated elsewhere than in Philadelphia. It was especially used as a report to hedge up my way in my late tour in Canada West. I will give one case. One of the Elders of Messiah's church said in a sermon he gave in Belmont, C. W., that "Eld. H. had no doubt gone over to the sleep of the dead. At any rate, he associated with that class of Adventists who held to that view, and a man was known by the company he kept. The Adventists had every sort of error and evil practice among them. That he and others had come out and formed a new church, that was pure and free from all these errors and evil practices." And this was said in the town, and the very house where I was expected to preach the next week. The object was very evident. But a friend of mine present vindicated my cause and character. But such things very greatly injure the cause of Christ. They certainly savor more of the corrupt spirit of sectarian pride, than the purity or benevolence of christianity.

I am an "Adventist, and with all their faults, I love them still." And I very well know that many evil things laid to their charge are untrue, and that evil things that have been committed among us have not been done always by Adventists; but have been deplored by them, and the parties committing them condemned. This is the old spirit of the world and a worldly church, that classes us with the degraded elements of society.

2. But the sleep of the dead and the destruction of the wicked, seemed to be the great sin just at this time to hedge up my way, although my faith in the definite time of the Advent had much to do with the matter, though not made as prominent. I have felt it a duty that I owed to myself and the Advent cause to make this brief statement, that you may see and that all may see the true state of things. I wish to stand in the light, and know with whom I associate. And if no difference of opinion is to be tolerated among us on the state of the dead, or on the time of Christ's coming, then this should be distinctly understood, and all should act accordingly. The world is wide, and there is plenty of room, and enough to do, and it can be done in peace, even if we separate like Lot and Abraham. We will be brethren in the midst of a wicked world. We should seek to honor our Master by walking uprightly with each other, notwithstanding a difference of opinion.

3. My views of the state of the dead are well known to those who have read what little I have said on the subject, or have heard me speak on the question in my public discourses. But to your question.

4. On the intermediate state I have held with the christian Fathers, who, according to the best authorities, uniformly speak of the intermediate state under the scriptural names of "Paradise"—"those who have gone before us"—"in the keeping of the Lord"—"somewhere in a better place, awaiting the day of judgment"—"cherished in peaceful abodes"—"place where the souls of the righteous and the ungodly are carried, feeling the anticipations of the judgment to come." They say mostly, "that the very apostles and patriarchs are not yet crowned." They teach that they "wait for us." That the "reward is not before the resurrection." That "they are now beholding their way to immortality more clearly, as being near it,—praise God, and exult with divine joy; not now fearing that they should turn aside to evil, but well knowing that they shall have safety, and forever enjoy the good things laid up for them." Again, they say; "the heavens are not open till the earth pass away"—"see not the unchangable good as angels do"—only "see the good things through faith and hope."

The Fathers confine themselves mostly, however, to the scriptural phrases; "being with Christ." They agree that they are at rest "with the Lord"—"in his keeping"—"seeing him; (though we know not the place which the Scriptures designate as Paradise, Abraham's bosom, or the altar,) yet not seeing God as they shall see him after the resurrection, now having as yet their full reward." *

5. Thus it will be seen that the Fathers had no idea that the saints go to heaven at death, and give no countenance to the modern doctrine, so prevalent, of "death being the gate to endless joy" and the kingdom. I suppose the foregoing views of the christian Fathers were founded on such passages as the following, in the New Testament: Phil. 1: 23,—"Having a desire to depart and to be with Christ, which is far better." 2 Cor. 5: 8,—"Absent from the body and to be present with the Lord." Luke 23: 43,—"To-day shalt thou be with me in Paradise." And of the parable of the rich man and Lazarus. Luke 16: 19–31. These passages have always been clear in my mind. And when the plausible and strong arguments have been brought to prove the unconscious state, their force has always been broken by the clear and positive character of these Scriptures. Yet I have not been able to harmonize these texts with the ideas of many passages in the Old Testament, which seem to militate against them. I think I have no prejudice to blind my moral sense, or any lack of a love of light or truth, to hinder me from a full and free reception of all the truth on this subject.

I frankly confess to you that I have my difficulties with the view I hold in relation to the nature of man, and the mode of his existence in the intermediate state, as well as the true place of his residence in that state. I do not clearly comprehend in the light of reason and fact how a being, as such, can exist without substance, or organization. I have no knowledge of such being. And human philosophy does not help me. It must rest on revelation alone. And then the place of the abode of spirits is another thing I do not understand. Once I thought I did. I followed Josephus, and the Pharisees among the Jews, and Dr. Campbell and others among the Christian Doctors, locating them in "Hades"; but in a conversation with Professor N. N. Whiting of Williamsburg, N. Y., I was effectually convinced of the incorrectness of this idea. I have great confidence in his knowledge of the language. He showed me that Hades had no such meaning in the Bible as given by Josephus and others. His view is, that the soul goes to heaven at death, but is not rewarded, or perfected in its existence till the resurrection. And then the christian Fathers taught that the soul did not go to heaven at death. And Justyn Martyr went so far as to say, that those who believed the soul went to heaven at death, were not christians! Wesley and others taught that the soul did not go to heaven at death. So we have a confusion of tongues on this subject. Some send the soul to heaven at death; some to Paradise, meaning a different place from heaven; some to the New Jerusalem; others to Hades, a very different place from either; and some have the saints rewarded in heaven at death; others say they are not rewarded till the resurrection; some that they sleep in a conscious dream of rest, expecting the coming of Christ in the resurrection of the just; while others give to them wakefulness and blessedness in a higher sense. Others hold that they sleep in Jesus in the literal sense of sleep, and are absolutely dead, and will have no life till "Christ who is our life, shall appear," and then they will "appear with him in glory," at the "resurrection of the dead." Amid these conflicting opinions, I rest on the plain word of God.

1. At death, the body goes "to the earth," "and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it." Eccl. 12: 7.

2. There is no judgment or reward until the resurrection. Col. 3: 3, 4. I see no way for the saints to be "crowned," "robed," or "clothed upon," till the resurrection. 2 Cor. 5: 4. 2 Tim. 4: 8. If there is no judgment or reward between death and the resurrection, then the intermediate state is not one of positive blessedness. It is an imperfect, a negative state, in which they wait for the consummation of their hope at the resurrection, to be enjoyed in immortal bodies, in the new heavens and new earth. This is the "blessed hope." We know that "when Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory."

It will be seen, by a careful perusal of the New Testament, that Christ and the apostles said but little on the intermediate state. The burden of their preaching was on the resurrection, and the inheritance of the saints in the world to come. On these points they spoke with great freedom and plainness of speech. None can mistake their teachings. And here I am positive, while on the other I cannot feel the same positiveness, for the want of the same amount of light. If others can, I do not object to it. They are more blessed in this respect than I am.

6. The "destruction of the wicked" is another point on which much stress has been laid. And on this I will simply say, that I have ever considered the plain and positive declarations in the word of God on this awful subject, as proofs of "everlasting punishment." Still, on long reflection and a re-examination of the question of late years, I cannot say that it would not be a relief to my mind to have a harmonious exposition of the Scriptures in relation to the subject, that would give us a reasonable hope that human suffering would cease after the final judgment of the wicked. But as yet, I do not see the proof of this, and so, for the present, I refer this solemn subject to Him who will do all things well.

Accept my thanks, dear Bro. Wardle, for this mark of your confidence and esteem in calling my attention to these things. I intend to review this whole question, and shall, at a proper time, if I have any thing new, speak out whatever may be the result. Till then, believe me to be, as always, an out and out Adventist, and now, with our present light, looking for Jesus and the first resurrection about 1867–8.

Very truly yours,

JOSHUA V. HIMES.

A Supposition that the Apostle Paul is in town, and wishes to preach.

Paul. Called on a minister and requested a privilege to preach in his church four sermons.

Minister. Bro. Paul, I have no objection to your preaching in our church, if you will so teach that none of the heresies of the day may be strengthened thereby.

Paul. I will say and preach 1 Thess. 4: 16–18;—"For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words."

M. But we as a church do not want to hear that kind of preaching, for the world has got to be converted before the coming of Christ. We do not want to hear on that subject now. Certainly not, no, no, Bro. Paul.

P. I would also quote Matt. 13, where the Savior says, "Let both (wheat and tares) grow together until the harvest." Also Rom. 6: 23,—"For the wages of sin is death."

M. Bro. Paul, we as a church do not believe that those terrible wicked ones are worthy of death, but they must live eternally in misery. So I believe.

P. I would also say (2 Thess. 1: 7),—"And to you who are troubled, rest with us; when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power: when he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe (because our testimony among you was believed) in that day."

M. Why, Paul, you talk like that annihilationist that preached in our village the other day, and some of our church members are believing his doctrine of the final destruction of the wicked, and that to all eternity.

P. That is as Jesus said,—"Broad is the way that leadeth to destruction."

M. I know it reads destruction, but it means preservation in eternal misery; that is, the soul will never die, for that is naturally immortal and must live forever.

P. 1 Tim. 6: 13–16,—"I give thee charge in the sight of God, who quickeneth all things, and before Christ Jesus, who before Pontius Pilate witnessed a good confession; that thou keep this commandment without spot, unrebukeable, until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ; which in his times he shall show, who is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords; who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto."

M. Yes, but I believe every person has an immortal soul that will live eternally, and you say that God and Christ only have immortality, when every person has a never-dying soul.

P. James 5: 20,—"Let him know, that he which converteth a sinner from the error of his way, shall save a soul from death."

M. Bro. Paul, I am astonished! Save a soul from death? I tell you the soul is immortal, and can never die to all eternity!

P. Ezek. 18: 4,—"Behold! all souls are mine; as the soul of the father so also the soul of the son is mine; the soul that sinneth, it shall DIE."

M. I say, Bro. Paul, the soul is immortal and cannot die, as you and your prophets declare; consequently you cannot preach in our church; no, never. IRA FANCHER.

War.

Who can paint its horrors? What language is sufficient, that human tongue can speak, to portray its evils, so vast, so terrible? The blood recoils—the nerves quiver, and an inexpressible shudder creeps over the frame, while we contemplate it. Those dreadful implements of death, so surely fatal, created by that exalted, inventive genius, which God has bestowed upon man,—at work with all their fury. Demoniacal rage gleaming from the eye, and nerving the arm with almost supernatural strength, rushing on to blood and slaughter, stand the contending foes. Human beings, made in the image of their God, with capacities for enjoyment akin to those of the pure host that encircle the throne above, and power to impart peace and joy to all within their range, engaged in such inhuman, fiendish work! Which was pronounced by its Creator, "very good," and which drew from him and his celestial associates a song and shout of joy! Well might he vail his face, and wing his rapid flight away from such pollution and misery. Alas! the horrors of war! Thousands of dead and dying—the sick and wounded—widows and orphans made more than desolate—crime, wretchedness and woe of every description, not only on the battle-field, but through the length and breadth of the land, where the evil exists—are only a portion of its aggravated and multiplied calamities. And can it be that such is the condition of our once highly favored and happy land? Is it true that our fellow-mortals, on our own soil, are crushing each other to misery and death? Would God it were only a dream. My ear is pained, my soul is sick with every day's report of blood and carnage, death and destruction, that are deluging our heaven-favored continent. My longing heart cries out, O! come, thou holy King of kings, thou who didst come to bring peace on earth and "good will toward men," hasten thine appearing, and put an end to these evils, so offensive in the sight of a holy God, and of all those who have communion with him on the great themes of love, purity, and heaven-born peace. How long, O how long shall this blot remain upon creation? How long shall our ears be thus pained, and our hearts tremble? Glory to God! beyond these booming, breaking thunder-clouds; beyond the flash of man's artillery, we hear a voice, a heaven-tuned voice, and it brings peace to the troubled heart,—"SURELY I COME QUICKLY." "Amen and Amen," saith every begotten child of God, "even so, come, Lord Jesus."

Report of the R. I. Quar. Conference.

River Point, June 25th, 1862. Conference met, according to appointment, at 2 P. M. The weather being stormy, the gathering was small. The afternoon was spent in social worship. In the evening Bro. M. R. Phetteplace preached from Rom. 8 : 2. Thursday morning, 26th, 9.30. Bro. P. C. Rodman in the chair. The Secretary not being present, Bro. A. C. Greene was chosen Sec'y pro tem, and the report of the last conference was not called for.

Bro. Robert Rounds reported from Central Village Church, R. I. Said he had nothing very encouraging. They still had meetings as usual. Bro. Phetteplace preached once a month. Church numbered 18. As for himself, he intended to be in the Kingdom. Eld. J. D. Brown reported from Providence Church, not by any authority, but from the office he held with them. He said they made out to stick together. He thought with Sister H. B. Hastings, if they had not loved one another so well, they would have been broken up long ago. Bro. V. P. Simmons reported from Danielsonville Church. He said there were some good things among them, and some bad things. He intended to give a faithful report. He said there had been a revival the past winter; some were added to the church—some held on, and some had fallen off. Some brethren had lost their interest by not dropping tobacco, and some for not setting up a family altar,—some for one thing, and some for another. Have preaching from abroad about two-thirds of the time. Bro. Phetteplace reported from Foster Church, R. I. Said there was a coldness among them as a church, but some would stand. They did not have much taste for prayer meetings. He had labored in new and rough places, where it needed the plough of the Almighty to do much good. Had been at Gloucester, R. I. Had the pleasure of baptizing three. Church did not belong to the Conference. Bro. J. Eldridge was Pastor of this church.

Bro. Simmons reported from East Killingly, Conn. Three had been baptized. There were a few interested in having meetings. Are anxious that preaching brethren coming that way should stop. Bro. Jonah Eldridge reported from Gloucester Church. The church numbers about twenty-three. Three had been added to the church. Had tremendous opposition. Tried to do what they could. There were some professed believers that hindered the cause. Bro. Peter Noka reported the church at Westerly. Said they were in a healthy state. Was there the 22d ult. Had a good time. They requested that the Conference should meet there the next time they met. He thought they had better go,—that good might be done by so doing.

The Clerk reported the church at River Point. There were some still holding on and striving to serve the Lord. Had much to contend with. Some come in that do not belong to the church, that like to discuss the Bible. Say they want to see the church prosper, but do not want to unite with them. Sunday School not quite so large as it had been. Numbered about fifty, scholars and teachers. Bro. P. C. Rodman said he would report from the Plain Church, where he labored once a month. Said that some old veterans were left there yet, but some had fallen asleep. He talked to them about the glory, and keeping their eye on it. Said he thought there was some advance among them. Some had set up their will to have their own way, right or wrong, and they were trying to do something. Said he had been at Carolina Mills. Some were trying to serve the Lord. Been some discord sown among them. There were a few at Peacedale trying to keep along, and some at Rocky Brook. Things looked rather forbidding there, but he did not feel discouraged. Bro. Edwin Wood reported from the church in Exeter, R. I. Said he was bound to let his light shine, and to press on toward the prize. The church numbered about thirteen. Been two baptized—have not joined the church. Another one had come out—not been baptized. They were battling for the Lord.

Thursday P. M., 2.30. Eld. Peter Noka preached from Heb. 10 : 28. At 6 P. M., love-feast. The Lord was with us by his Spirit. At 8 A. M., Eld. Brown preached from Ps. 119 : 65. Friday morning, 9 A. M. Bro. Carpenter offered his resignation as Sec'y and Treasurer of the R. I. Quar. Conference. He lived so far away that he could not be with us. Bro. A. C. Greene was chosen to fill his place. The minutes of the last conference were read and accepted.

RESOLUTIONS OF THE R. I. Q. C.

Bro. H. F. Carpenter offered the following resolutions, which were adopted by this conference:—

Whereas, It devolves upon the A. C. Association to choose the Editor or Editors of the World's Crisis at its annual meeting; and, Whereas, The said Association desires a free expression of opinion and feeling upon matters which come before them from the churches scattered abroad; and inasmuch as we desire to co-operate with the A. C. A. in promoting the prosperity of our [illegible]

Resolved, That this conference express its approbation of the choice of Editor made by the A. C. A. at its last annual meeting, and its satisfaction with the general course of the Crisis during the present year.

Resolved, That, enjoying as we have reason to an interest in the present usefulness of the World's Crisis, we do request the A. C. A. to continue in office the present Editor with such assistance as he may require.

Resolved, That we shall deeply regret any change in the conduct of the World's Crisis, which shall lead to the unhappy results of 1861, or which shall give the occasion for such evils by adopting a similar course of management.

Dr. Huntington reported the Abington Church by letter. Had nothing of special interest to communicate. Religious state about the same as it was at the last conference. Meetings, both Sabbath and conference, are steadily and cheerfully maintained. Scattered as they were, it was quite an effort to get together. Have been enabled thus far to persevere, and hope to hold on to the end. Have difficulties to meet and do not expect they can be avoided altogether. Try to encounter them with christian spirit and with christian weapons. Church wished him to invite the Conference there at its next session, if agreeable.

Bro. Brown reported from Danielsonville Church. Felt encouraged about the church at D. Bro. D. A. Jones and Bro. Simmons preached to them. Collection from $4 to $6. Bro. Lewis reported the church at Carolina Mills. He said spiritual interest was not so manifest as it might be. Labored under disadvantages—somewhat scattered—living some miles apart—had to sacrifice to go to meeting. He was willing to. Had been without a place to worship. Bro. Clark had opened his Mill to worship in—seats 400. Bro. Carpenter reported his labors. Left Danielsonville soon after conference. Parted with tried friends—left for Vermont very reluctantly. Found the church at Poultney numbering 100. Had dropped some. Had adopted special prayer meeting to pray for young converts that had strayed away. It had resulted in good. Held meetings three miles south of there with good results. Trying to do good among the Methodists across the line in York State. Congregations good at Poultney. Did not know but they were as popular as some other churches, not externally, but looked up to as a church by the community generally.

Bro. H. L. Hastings was present and called upon to report his labors. Glad to be here—only conference he ever attended where they did not meddle with what did not belong to them. Thought it hard to tell how much corn there would be until the harvest. Had been preaching in various places, running at large as usual. Had moved—gone to making tracts, as usual. Had seen good results. Had spoken to the church at Lowell St., in that part of the city where there was a great chance to labor. Wished to see the cause of God revived. Was going to be constantly on the altar, anything the Lord wanted that he had, he could have,—anything he wanted him to do, he would do it.

A motion was made that the Treasurer be authorized to buy tracts and send them to different preaching brethren connected with this conference. It was adopted. Motion was made that the next meeting of the conference should be at Westerly, the last Wednesday in Sept. Adopted.

10.30. Bro. Simmons preached from 1 Thess. 1 : 5. 2 P. M. Bro. H. L. Hastings preached from Eph. 4 : 6. 6 P. M. Love-feast—a "cloud of witnesses." 8 P. M. Bro. H. F. Carpenter preached from 1 Cor. 15 : 22.

Ministers present at the conference:—P. C. Rodman, M. R. Phetteplace, Peter Noka, D. O. Hopkins, Elwin Wood, Jonah Eldridge, Varnum P. Simmons, H. L. Hastings, B. Roberts, H. F. Carpenter, J. D. Brown, Eld. Devro.

A Request.

To the members of the first Congregationalist Church in Plympton, Rev. M. A. Stevens acting Pastor, greeting:—Believing it inconsistent with my faith, founded on the word of inspiration, to remain longer in fellowship and communion with a body of professed believers in "the faith which was once delivered to the saints," yet "teaching for doctrines" the traditions of men; I apply for a letter of dismission from your communion and fellowship, choosing rather to suffer the reproach of men, than longer by passive silence to perpetuate error.

Please give me your decision soon; as I am determined, God sparing my life, soon to be baptized in the faith "once delivered to the saints," and taught by the apostles and primitive christians. Praying that you as a body, and as individuals, may make the Bible the rule of your doctrine in future; forever laying aside your old traditions as error. I remain your friend,

FANNY S. BRADFORD.

Plympton, Mass., July 10, '62.

ELDER GRANT:—The foregoing is a copy of a letter which I sent to our late church meeting. What they intend doing, I know not; probably they will set me aside. Doubtless you will remember me, as the lady who would not decide to be baptized at Tremont the other Sabbath. My faith received strength at that meeting; and I look forward with joyful anticipations to the time when I shall make a public demonstration of that faith. Yours in the faith,

F. S. BRADFORD.

Flight from Judea.

Bro. E. G. Scott inquires concerning the flight from Judea, mentioned in Matt. 24 : 15. We will quote a few verses in connection with this passage:—"When ye therefore shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place, (whoso readeth let him understand:) then let them which be in Judea flee into the mountains: Let him which is on the housetop not come down to take anything out of his house: neither let him which is in the field return back to take his clothes. And woe unto them that are with child, and to them that give suck in those days! But pray ye that your flight be not in the winter, neither on the Sabbath day: For then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be. And except those days should be shortened, there should no flesh be saved: but for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened." It will be seen that the flight is hasty, implying urgent circumstances. For some time, we have been of the opinion that this flight was from the persecuting power represented by the "little horn," mentioned by the prophet Daniel, in chap. 7 : 8, 24, 25, 26.

When speaking of the flight from the persecutions under Justinian, who was Emperor of the eastern empire from A. D. 527 to 565, Gibbon says,

"To this (Persian) standard of natural and religious freedom, myriads of fugitives resorted from all the provinces of the eastern empire; the narrow bigotry of Justinian was punished by the emigration of his most industrious subjects. . . . Their enmity to Rome could not always atone for their attachment to the gospel; a colony of three hundred thousand Jacobites, the captives of Apamea and Antioch, was permitted to erect a hostile altar in the face of the Catholic, and in the sunshine of the court. In his last treaty, Justinian introduced some conditions which tended to enlarge and fortify the toleration of christianity in Persia. The Emperor, ignorant of the rights of conscience, was incapable of pity or esteem for the heretics who denied the authority of the holy synods; but he flattered himself that they would gradually perceive the temporal benefits of union with the empire and the church of Rome."—Gibbon, Vol. 4, p. 543, Harper's edition.

When describing the events of A. D. 532, Bower says:—

While the Arian king was striving, by the most just and equitabe laws, to clear the church from all simony in the west, the Catholic Emperor, [Justinian] was employing the most unjust and unchristian means of clearing her from all heresies in the east, that of persecution, and the most cruel persecution any christian emperor had yet set on foot, or countenanced. For by an edict which he issued to unite all men in one faith, whether Jews, Gentiles, or christians, such as did not, in the term of three months, embrace and profess the Catholic faith, were declared infamous; and, as such, excluded from all employments, both civil, and military; rendered incapable of leaving any thing by will, and their estates confiscated, whether real or personal. These were convincing arguments of the truth of the Catholic faith; but many, however, withstood them; and against such as did, the imperial edict was executed with the utmost rigor. Great numbers were driven from their habitations with their wives and children, stripped and naked. Others betook themselves to flight, carrying with them what they could conceal for their support and maintenance; but they were plundered of the little they had, and many of them inhumanly massacred by the Catholic peasants who guarded the passes. . . . The Jews, who were very numerous in Samaria, openly revolted; and, ranging themselves under the banner of one Julian, a noted robber, whom they chose for their king and their leader, engaged the imperial troops in the field; but after a most obstinate and bloody dispute, were utterly defeated, with the loss, if Procopius is to be credited, of one hundred thousand men."—Bower's History of the Popes, Vol. 1, p. 334.

The foregoing extracts show a literal fulfillment of Matt. 24 : 16. Another important point should be noticed, this fulfillment was accomplished at the right time and by the right power.

We have yet to learn that there was a flight from Jerusalem, when it was taken by the Romans under Titus, in A. D. 69 to 70, that corresponds with the description in Matt. 24 : 15–22. We understand the "GREAT TRIBULATION" was upon the saints of God; and as certainly as it was, it could not have been at the destruction of Jerusalem, for then it is said all the righteous escaped—about three hundred. But when we come to the sixth century, we arrive at the period when the saints were given into the hands of the "little horn," and hence to the time for the "great tribulation," from which they fled in such haste that they were unable to take their clothes with them, as shown by the foregoing extracts.—G.

SUDDEN DEATH.—We see by the Boston Herald, of July 18th, that Dr. Joseph Turner, of Hartford, Ct., died suddenly on the 15th inst.

☞ For want of room we have been obliged to omit several book notices.

Ordination.

The following notices from the Boston Journal will show that Bro. P. B. Morgan has somewhat changed his religious associations:—G.

"An ordination will be held by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Eastburn, at St. John's Church, East Boston, on Friday, the 18th inst., at 10 o'clock, A. M., when Mr. P. B. Morgan will be admitted to the Holy Order of Deacons."

"ORDINATION OF A DEACON.—A congregation assembled at St. John's Church, East Boston, this forenoon, (July 18th), on the occasion of the ordination of Mr. P. B. Morgan (who has officiated for two years past in Chapman Hall), as a Deacon in the Episcopal Church.

Morning Prayers were read by Rev. T. R. Lambert of St. John's Church, Charlestown, and the candidate was presented for orders by Rev. Henry McClury, rector of the parish.

The Rt. Rev. Bishop Eastburn then preached a sermon, in which he set forth the responsibilities and duties of the holy office to which the candidate was about to be admitted. The discourse, which was one of marked ability, contained also much sound advice to the congregation.

The ordination service was then proceeded with, and the holy sacrament was administered by the Bishop, the services closing with the benediction. In addition to the clergy above named, Rev. Mr. Pierce of the Church of the Advent also took part in the ceremony."

Resignation.

To the President and Members of the Advent Christian Association, and all whom it may concern.

DEAR BRETHREN:—Having, by the grace of God, undertaken a path of duty thought to be incompatible with my present relation as one of the editors of your organ—The World's Crisis and Second Advent Messenger—I hereby give notice that on and after the 26th of August next, I propose to resign my appointments as the Associate Editor of the Crisis and Messenger, as Vice President of the A. C. Association, and member of the Board.

It gives me much pleasure to add that the course I have proposed does not originate in any essential change in faith, or in personal disaffection toward my former true and faithful brethren. My faith and joy in the prospect of the soon coming of the glorious Redeemer and King was never greater,—nor was my estimate of the practical importance of the Second Advent ever higher than at this present time. It is with unspeakable thankfulness I record the fact that such is to my heart the "blessed hope." And so far from having for a moment the thought of ever denying my faith, or placing the truth in abeyance, by putting myself in a new relation,—to the contrary, it is with the most express understanding that the largest conceivable liberty is guaranteed me in preaching the truth as it is in Christ. Upon the special point of the hope we in common cherish, the same and only hope is inculcated in the doctrines of this ancient and venerable body. Her precise words are (and in no instance will she contradict herself), "I look for the resurrection of the body, and the life of the world to come."

You know, brethren, I have for these many years protested against modern sectarianism; being persuaded that, true to itself, perpetual "come-out-ism" and anarchy was its unvarying tendency; and unity of faith, and the oneness of the body of Christ, so clearly taught in the New Testament, must be expunged from our creeds (if we had any), or be winked at as mere ornamental or figurative language that somehow found its way into the New Testament, but as in no sense the clear and unmistakable teachings of inspiration as it is. When a few years since I published the Economy of the Church, with a formulary for the more solemn and decent celebration of the ordinances, you clearly saw my desire to get back into what, with many of yourselves, I felt was more in harmony with apostolic teachings. I was at that time ignorant of the fact that there was on the earth (indeed by my very side) a body, older than apostate Rome, and of apostolic planting, holding the truth in its purity, granting the largest liberty of conscience, and with open arms stood ready to receive and in Christ's name bless all who would accept her benedictions. This I now believe; and believing, rejoice. The same blessing I would fain impart to all my former brethren; but this I know cannot be; yet permit me to say to all such as I have taken sweet counsel with in former years,—so long as you faithfully follow Christ, according to the light given you, you will as christians have my sympathy, and perpetually live in the tenderest affections of my heart.

I know you will be cited to instances where men have been ejected from the church. But of this, as of the spirit that possesses many minds in these times, leading men in quest of new things and new positions, instead of those that are old and apostolic, I need not remark. I need only cite your attention to Archbishop Whateley's views of a future life, and to the many published documents from the English millenarians, to show that the faith of Adventists is warmly cherished in this Protestant Episcopal Church of America.

You will hear the cry of "bigotry" and "formalism"; but of these things let those who know best judge. "Charity begins at home." If the testimony of a Fletcher, a Wesley, a Whitefield, and many of the most godly men of modern times is of any worth, then solemn forms, embodying the truth, and breathing the spirit of devotion, are not opposed to the devotions of the closet, or the most earnest christian zeal. "According to your faith be it unto you."

Perhaps I should add, that I am not insensible of the unsolicited and unexpected honors you have sought to confer upon me, in last year making me President of your Association; and in this year appointing me Vice President, Associate Editor of the Crisis, and member of the Board ex officio. But these offices you will at your next general meeting place in other, and I trust more competent hands; while similar tokens of preferment and esteem, which I fully appreciate, I shall no more expect in this world. For these kindnesses I thank you. And now, while I go forth among strangers to fulfill my mission as a minister of the cross, I have this one request to make: it is, dear brethren, that you pray for me; that with you I may put on "the armor of light now in the time of this mortal life, in which . . . Jesus Christ came to visit us in great humility: that in the last day, when He shall come again in his glorious majesty to judge both the quick and the dead, we may rise to the life immortal." And I am most sincerely and affectionately yours,

P. B. MORGAN.

A Challenge.

BRO. GRANT:—When in Canada West a short time since, I had considerable conversation with Bro. I. R. Gates, late of the Advent body, and now of Messiah's church in Pa. He said he had challenged you some time ago to discuss with him the intermediate state of the dead and the destiny of the wicked. But, for some reason, you had not accepted. He wished to renew the challenge, and sent it by me. He would like to discuss it somewhere in New England, where your views are most prevalent, say Lawrence, or Lowell, or any other place in the vicinity of Boston.

He did not give me the exact form of the question, but will arrange this when you shall accept his challenge. I have now done my duty as promised, hoping whatever is done in the matter may further the cause of truth, in which we all should be interested.

JOSHUA V. HIMES.

Boston, July 10, 1862.

We were not aware before that we ever declined to discuss the question with Eld. Gates. But we will now say to him, that his proposition to discuss the question proposed is accepted, and we will meet for this discussion as soon as it shall be convenient for him to arrange.

And we will add, that a discussion of the new creed of his church "on man," in which it is assured that "God made man immortal," etc., with other questions, might, if he wishes, come into the discussion. Or if he, as a prominent and leading man in this new denomination, does not see fit to accept this, I will discuss it with Elder Litch, who is properly the founder of this new party in the church of Christ.—G.

Novel Reading.

The following excellent article on Novel Reading, taken from the Herald of Gospel Liberty, should be read by every one. But few are aware of the sad effects of this kind of reading. They do not see that it is one of Satan's devices to destroy their love for the truth, and keep them away from Christ. We would say to all who wish to be real christians, spend no time in reading novels. Shun them as you would rum and whiskey. They intoxicate the mental powers, as alcholic drinks do the physical. Read with care what follows:—

NOVEL READING.

"'A novel was a book
Three-volumed, and once read, and oft crammed full
Of poisonous error, blackening every page;
And oftener still of trifling, second-hand
Remark, and old, diseased, putrid thought;
And miserable incident, at war
With nature, with itself, and truth at war:
Yet charming still the greedy reader on,
Till done—he tried to recollect his thoughts,
And nothing found but dreaming emptiness.'

These words of the 'sage almost inspired' are exceedingly truthful and pertinent. At the outset, we lay down the broad proposition that novels are pernicious, and pernicious only in their influence. Nor are we disposed to make exceptions to this general rule.

Novels of a certain type, it is true, are styled 'religious novels,' yet we think the term self-contradictory, and a palpable absurdity. For even these are but sweetened poison. They have just enough pious sentiment thrown in to make the dose palatable to those persons who would feel qualms of conscience at gulping down the same, devoid of the religious salt and pepper. Now we abhor the whole brood, religious and irreligious. They are an accursed race, hollow, baseless, rotten. As Sin 'a goddess armed' out of the head of Satan sprang, so these imps of darkness, ycl'ept novels, spring from the teeming brains of their authors, and go forth on a like mission to seduce and corrupt mankind. But here it may be asked, 'Do not some novels convey sound instruction, and have they not a moral tendency?' Admit it; what then? The infinitesimal good that the few accomplish is swallowed up in the gigantic evil wrought by the many. Like intoxicating liquors where they save the life of one human being, they slay ten thousand others. Could the hell-born brood of novels, together with every drop of 'fire water' be forever banished from earth's wide domain, we should think a mighty stride had been taken toward the inauguration of the wished for millennium. Nor should it be forgotten that all the instruction which novels are supposed to convey, may be transmitted infinitely better in some other way.

'Truth is stranger than fiction.' Is it not also a better medium for transmitting moral instruction? Is not a solid stick of timber a better conductor of sound than a rotten carcass?

But lest we may be accused of dealing in 'glittering generalities' we proceed to make specific charges.

First, then, the general tendency of novels is to corrupt the morals of those who read them. Exceptions to this statement are like angels' visits, 'few and far between.' An inspired writer has declared, 'Evil communications corrupt good manners.' Now it is a notorious fact that much the larger portion of the novels and romances of the present day are directly or indirectly licentious in their tendency. Of French novels, so far as our observation has extended, this is true without exception. A large portion of works of fiction abound with profanity, disguised obscenity and covert sneers at chastity and virtue. As sometimes 'Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light,' so vice in the pages of the novelist too often wears the alluring guise of virtue. . . .

We remark, further, that the reading of novels creates a distaste for sound literature. Novels are a kind of unhealthy and unnatural stimulant. A person accustomed to highly seasoned food, to sweetmeats and condiments, will very unwillingly return to simple fare. So the man addicted to the wine-cup will not relish nature's beverage, pure cold water. In like manner the admiring reader of Eugene Sue, Victor Hugo, Bolsac, Scott, Dickens, Cooper, and their thousand and one imitators, will feel an insatiable craving after something stimulating. Fancy a habitual novel reader attempting to peruse Butler's Analogy, Hamilton's Lectures, Lock, Reid, Bacon, or any works requiring deep and patient thought. The undertaking would be speedily given up in disgust. Nor would Geometry, Mental Philosophy, Chemistry fare better. The simple fact is, novel reading totally unfits the mind for the successful pursuit of sound literature. It induces a morbid and abnormal action. It causes a hot-house development of certain mental faculties to the entire neglect of the rest. It cultivates the imagination, the sensibilities, the emotional part, while the judgment and reason lie dormant. In short, novel reading fosters a craving thirst for the morbidly sentimental, the exciting, the unnatural, rather than an appreciative love of the sound, deep, healthy and substantial in literature. In consequence, it is pernicious.

Lastly, we say that novels convey false views of life. As is often remarked the novel-reader lives in an ideal world. It is a world of shadows, mirage, and illusion rather than of substance. A quaint writer two centuries since mentions the contents of the novels of his time. And the picture is true to the life at the present day. He says they contain 'strange adventures, passionate amours, unkind refusals, grand impediments, importunate addresses, miserable disappointments, wonderful surprises, unexpected encounters, castles surprised, imprisoned lovers rescued, and meetings of supposed dead ones; bloody duels, languishing voices echoing from solitary groves, overheard mournful complaints, deep-fetched sighs sent from wild deserts, intrigues managed with unheard of subtlety; and whilst all things seem at the greatest distance, then are dead people alive, enemies friends, despair turned to enjoyment, and all their impossibilities reconciled; things that never were, nor are, nor ever shall or can be, they all come to pass.' In these few, terse words, we have the quintessence of nineteen twentieths of the novels in vogue.

Well does the old author say that the effect of these tales is to 'consume men's time, effeminate their natures, debase their reason, and set them on work to reduce these things to practice and make each adventure theirs by imitation.' . . .

Now in view of these things, we deem it incumbent upon all christians, and especially upon the religious press, to discountenance the circulation and reading of works of fiction. When we have so much sound and profitable literature, why give currency to that which is pernicious, or, to say the least, unprofitable. When the field of truth lies before us, so vast and inviting, why gorge ourselves upon silly and shallow fiction. We think a reform is demanded in this matter. Look ye well to it, lest sin lie at the door."—H.

Book Notices.

"Reasons for my Hope," by H. L. Hastings; and "Thessalonica, or the Model Church," by the same author. We have just received a supply of these excellent works, very neatly bound. They are truly "BOOKS FOR THE TIMES." Every lover of truth should keep at least one copy of each to lend his neighbors. If you have not got them, do not fail to obtain them as early as possible. For price, see "special book list."—G.

A NEW TRACT.—"The Advent at hand," by Bro. P. B. Morgan, is now ready. It is a good tract to lend your neighbor who is not looking for the personal coming of Christ within a brief period. It contains 24 pp. Price 2 cts. single, postage 1 cent; 1-4th off per dozen; fifty-four copies for $1.00, postage paid; seventy-four copies for $1.00 by express. Now is the time to scatter them. Let them fly like autumn leaves.—G.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.—We learn that Bro. H. L. Hastings is preparing a work on the "Signs of the Times," which he hopes to have ready for the press before long. It will contain many valuable statistics, and other interesting matter.—G.

For the Crisis.

Prayer Requested.

BRO. GRANT:—I have a request to make. My brother-in-law has been sick some two or three years. He is very sick now. His complaint is bleeding from the stomach. I have told him that he can be healed by the prayers of God's faithful people, and he requests all of those that have any faith to pray that he may be healed. I would propose, that on Sunday evening, July 27th, at the going down of the sun, we all unite in prayer for him.

Fisherville, Ct. SARAH E. DAGGETT.

Letter from a Minister.

A minister of the Episcopal church, who loved God and his truth more than he did his salary, writes thus:—

"Yes, brother Hastings, I can trust the Lord; I have done so all my life. Early was I cast upon his care, and hitherto he hath cared for me. My course at present and for the future is not at all clear. . . . At present many ministers sympathize with me; with such I can speak kindly, and to such communicate freely my views, which are the cause of my being an outcast from the church of my choice. I have done this with, I trust, considerable success. I know, at least, that if I have advanced none, I have silenced many. This is something. The remark has been made to me by some of my brethren of the clergy, 'Well, your views don't appear to be so opposed to Scripture.' . . .

"Unless something turns up in the good providence of God to direct my thoughts otherwise, I shall commit my views to writing for the edification of my brethren,—I mean on the life and death question. I find they are for the most part in profound ignorance on the subject. Under the blessing of God I shall hope for success. Before doing so, however, I shall (D. V.) come and see you. I feel assured that you will give me all the counsel and assistance in your power to carry out my plan. This is the only way I can successfully hope to reach the majority of my brethren of the clergy. . . . To give life and popularity to the production, I have thought of putting what I had to say on the subject in the form of a theological debate, carried on by inquirers after truth, etc. What think you of this? I read the Crisis with great pleasure; expecting soon (but not fixing the date) the coming of our gracious Lord, to take to himself his great power and reign. I remain, etc."

I think the idea of a debate a good one, and, if properly executed, I think the book would be a valuable one. Let us have it when the Lord will. I shall be happy to advise or aid in any practicable way. Make a good live book, well packed, and I think it will have a general circulation. May God's blessing be with you, my brother, and lead you continually. He who has given you grace, not merely to leave your position for a larger salary, or an easier and more respectable place, but to come and stand forth at the loss of all things earthly, as a light in a benighted land, will, I trust, still lead you in green pastures and beside still waters; prepare for you a table even in the presence of your enemies, anoint your head with the oil of joy, and cause your cup of blessings to overflow. May He be with you to the end, is the prayer of your brother, H. L. HASTINGS.

Boston, July 19, 1862.

For the Crisis.

Campmeeting in Maine.

Feeling much interested in the meeting appointed at Corinna, I wish to say a few words to the brethren through the Crisis in relation to the cause in this State. I know of no field of labor that looks so encouraging as in this State. The people have ears to hear, and many are earnestly inquiring after truth. Calls come to me from different parts of the State, "Come over and help us." But few are laboring in the field to spread the truth. What shall we do, brethren? Shall we have a united effort, to gather the scattered sheep of Israel? Why not have a general rally at the campmeeting? Let the old, tried friends of the cause come up, and take their place in the ranks. You have fought many hard battles. You have raised the cry of "victory or death"; but for the last few years not much headway has been made in this State. The enemy has taken possession of some hard-fought battle fields. Will you give up now? Methinks I hear the reply from all parts, "No, never." Well, then, come to Camp Corinna. Bring up your recruits. Come armed with the whole armor. Have your feet well "shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace." Let us have a grand drill of the whole army in this State, so that when we leave the camp for actual service, we can all work in harmony with the plan of the battle—surprise the enemy—take his strong holds, and plant the standard of truth in every part of the State.

Come, brethren, begin to talk up this matter. We want reinforcements. We shall expect a good regiment from the Penobscot, all armed with tents and camp utensils. There is quite an army over on the Kennebec river. This call means you. Come on full of faith,—the Quartermaster's supplies are abundant. You may have to put up with some hard bread; but never mind, victory is ours, in the name of our Chief Captain. I know some of the old soldiers are rather poor, and some are sore-footed, some have been wounded, some under-captains have turned traitors; but never mind that, the bounty land is ahead. Come well provided with rations for a week's march. Don't depend upon your neighbors too much. Provision will be made for the needy. We don't expect any drones in the camp. If they come, they must drill. Come one, come all. We fight for the old constitution—LIBERTY AND EQUAL RIGHTS. J. HEMENWAY.

Dover, Me.

☞ The summer, in the central, northern and western parts of the State, is thus far one of the dryest on record. All kinds of crops, with the exception of corn, are greatly suffering for rain. The pastures are in many places, almost reduced to a crisis, while the meadows will hardly produce half an average crop.—Albany Journal.

Obituary Notice.

Died at Palmyra, Me., June 26th, 1862, of diphtheria, Mrs. Mary B. Osborn, daughter of Eld. Nathaniel F. and Mary H. Nason, aged twenty-six years and twenty days.

Sister Mary was on a visit to her sister in Palmyra, and was taken with this fatal disease and died about nine days after leaving her father's.

She experienced religion at a campmeeting in South China, Me., in 1852. She was soon after married and lost her interest. Her husband went to California in 1854, and left her and her child George with her parents. She was the same year reclaimed and baptized. Mary and her husband corresponded with each other between two and three years, when all at once he ceased writing to her. She wrote him many times, but never received any answer. She suffered much in her mind in consequence of her husband's desertion without any cause. Her trouble darkened her hope. In the winter of 1860 and '61 she was taken sick, and was not expected to live. She gave up all to the Lord, and in her own language, said she had "a through ticket." She bore her sickness with great patience, and regained her health better than it had been for years. She was loved by the good, had many friends, and but few enemies.

After her case was considered hopeless, her parents were sent for, but her father only got there one hour before she died, and found her insensible. The Doctor told her that if she would drink one quart of whiskey that night, she might live. She replied, "I have the spirit of Jesus Christ in me, and I will not drink the whiskey." She wrote the following letter the day before she died. It shows that she had the faith that overcomes the fear of death. Yours truly, W. Nichols.
No. Searsport, Me.

COPY OF MARY B. OSBORN'S LETTER

Dear Father and Mother:—I am about dying, but do not mourn for me. My trust is in God. Forgive me for the wrongs I have done you both. Do not reflect that I came up here. It is all right. I have got all my work done up till the judgment day. Meet me on the other shore, where parting is known no more. I long for the time to come when I shall be at rest. My dear father and mother, mourn not for me, but mourn for the living. I would write more, but I am too weak.

Good bye, dear little George (her only child) how I love you. Poor thing, how I wish I could see you once more on earth; but seek the Lord and meet me. Give my love to all in Searsport. I love them all. My love to my sister Jane, and Eben. Good bye all of you. M. B. Osborn.

FOREIGN NEWS.

By the arrival of the steamship North America, we have news from Liverpool to the 10th instant. Queenstown 11th.

Lord Palmerston, in the House Commons, confirmed the statement that Russia had recognized Italy. He also said that he believed Prussia would do the same.

The Opinione Nationale says the Russian papers revived the rumor that France, in consequence of the stubbornness of England, has invited Russia to join her in an offer of mediation to America.

The Paris correspondent of the London Herald believes that the French Government entertains very serious intentions of interfering to put an end to the American war.

FRANCE.

The walls of Paris were covered with placards announcing that there will be shortly given on the lake at Versailles a grand nautical fete representing the combat between the Merrimac and the Monitor.

The rumors respecting the Mexican expedition are contradictory—the Paris papers having been requested to be particularly reserved on the topic. The London Globe's correspondent says:—

"An impression is gaining ground that warlike measures against Mexico may be superseded by diplomacy. The expense of the war, a probable coolness with Spain, and a disagreement with England, are not without their influence."

The correspondent of the Times writes in a different strain. He says:—

"Four thousand men will be sent out at once to make their way to Gen. Lorencez, should he be seriously menaced, or cannot keep open his communication with the coast. Should there be no pressing demand, they will stay at Martinique or Guadaloupe, and be forwarded in successive detachments to Vera Cruz when the sickly season is over. Not only ten thousand, but twenty-five thousand troops will go on to Mexico. In fact, there is hardly a limit to the number, for the city must be taken at all cost, and will be occupied for an indefinite time."

RUSSIA.

According to present reports, it does not appear that the Russian grain harvest will be large this year. In the South the crops have been burnt up, and in the North they have had cold and wet. The cold at the date of the last letter was described as unprecedented at this season.

The conflagrations in Russia are spreading from St. Petersburg to the provinces. Conflagrations have also taken place at Novgorod and at Cronstadt.

The insurance companies have lost between £220,000 and £290,000 sterling, but the total destruction was much more, the amount insured having been comparatively small. It is thought, however, that a million or a million and a quarter sterling will cover all.

Terror prevails at the seat of government. The force intrusted with the care of the public safety has been increased. The losses at St. Petersburg are estimated at many hundred millions of roubles. In addition to the numerous arrests that have been made, the sudden disappearance of Col. Rostoffoff, aide-de-camp of the Emperor, has given rise to much comment. He is accused of being connected with the secret societies, and in correspondence with them.

FOUR DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

Per the Asia, we have news from Liverpool to the 12th inst., Queenstown 13th.

The London Herald treats the affair before Richmond as a decisive defeat of Gen. McClellan, and says the Confederate capital is safe. It does not, however, believe the campaign in Virginia is ended, but supposes it will go on until Europe stays the uplifted sword, and in the name of humanity enforces peace.

The Times bitterly denounces the spirit in America which regards the tariff with satisfaction, because of its injurious effect upon England in particular and America in general.

The Liverpool Post says the tariff will be looked upon in Great Britain as a measure tantamount almost to a declaration of war, and the unpopularity of the Northern States will not only be terribly aggravated, but something more than mere moral force will ensue.

Lord Palmerston has declared that there was no intention of withdrawing the British troops from Canada.

The Paris Patrie asserts that France will never treat with Juarez. When the French army has entered Mexico, the Mexicans will be consulted and their wishes scrupulously respected. France will only quit Mexico after the complete execution of a future treaty.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

Philadelphia, July 16. The Richmond Enquirer of the 12th speaks of Gen. McClellan's defensive attitude under the cover of the gunboats as fixed. His only demonstration on the Confederate lines, until he shall have become resuscitated from his late defeats, must consist of indecisive raids, to keep up the spirits of his men. "In the meantime," it says, "we must turn our eyes to the West for more startling events. The movements of Buell, and the consequent operations of our own army, are now watched with energy and confidence by the government."

Washington, July 16. The New York Post's correspondent writes as follows:

"The pressure upon the government on the emancipation question is very great. The President not only feels the universal sentiment of the free States, but there are fears of foreign intervention, which can be allayed with an emancipation policy that is real and not a sham. Even the State Department, as I hear, is fully alive to the necessity of action on the subject of slavery, to enable our friends abroad to hold their ground in defence of the national cause."

New York, July 16. The British steamer Ann arrived at noon in charge of Acting Master Partridge.

The Ann was discovered under the guns of Fort Morgan, Mobile Bay, unloading arms, gunpowder, &c., when the frigate Susquehanna and the gunboat Kanawha sailed into the Bay. The former engaged the Fort, and the latter succeeded in cutting the British neutral vessel out.

The crew of the Ann deserted and escaped after attempting to sink her. Her cargo consists of gunpowder, arms, cartridges, boxes of tea, coffee, pepper, &c.

Nashville, Tenn., July 16. The rebels are reported to have evacuated Murfreesboro. The killed on both sides is not over fifty.

Gen. Duffield is severely if not mortally wounded, but is now under good care. The citizens buried the dead of both Union and rebel soldiers. No private residences were destroyed.

Enlistments have been going on moderately. The city is beyond all danger.

Chicago, July 16. A special dispatch to the Tribune dated Memphis, says that 200 of Col. Fitch's command had an engagement with the rebels, numbering 450, on the morning of the 6th.

The Federal loss was 22 killed and wounded. The rebels had 84 killed, wounded and missing.

Another engagement took place on the night of the 7th. Col. Fitch captured all the enemy's camp equipage and provisions.

Both fights are said to have taken place within ten miles of Duvall's Bluff, where a large force of rebels are said to be stationed.

Louisville, July 16. Morgan was at Medway yesterday, and cut the telegraph line, tore up the railroad, and took everything convertible to his use. He had four twelve pound howitzers, but is said to have had only six rounds of ammunition.

He left for Georgetown last evening and encamped on Gonos Farm. He said he would visit Lexington and Frankfort before he got through with his job. Lexingtonians say they have ample force to protect the town, but not enough to take the offensive.

Our pickets are falling back on the Georgetown road. The rebels are approaching in force. Our men, with several pieces of artillery, are advancing on Georgetown to meet them. The railroad and telegraph to Medway are repaired, but the burnt bridge at Keyser's has not yet been rebuilt.

New York, July 17. The Harper's Ferry correspondent of the Tribune, under date of 15th, states: Fears are entertained that we shall soon have trouble. In consequence of the threatening appearance of matters at Winchester, the stores and all other valuables of the army have been safely removed here. It is reported that our pickets were driven in below Winchester last night.

There seems to be a general impression here that Winchester will be the scene of a fierce battle before a week. It is rumored that Jackson has returned and been reinforced by numerous guerrilla bands.

During the past ten days our vast depots of supplies at New Creek, Martinsburg and other places, have been broken up and the stores removed elsewhere.

New York, July 17. The Times' army correspondent, under date of the 15, states: the position of the main body of the army near Harrison's Landing, remains unchanged. Yesterday a squadron of the Sixth United States cavalry went a mile beyond the pickets, for the purpose of preventing the surprise of a fatigue party. The enemy's videttes were discovered half a mile in advance. For upward of two hours the two parties sat quietly on their horses watching each other, until the enemy became exceedingly restless and showed signs of hostility.

The Sixth allowed him to advance a few yards, and then gave him a volley from their carbines. A few shots were fired in return by the rebels, on which they turned about and galloped off. No one injured on our side. The enemy lost three wounded and one taken prisoner.

The main force of the rebels is not less than fifteen miles from our exterior line, which would locate them on the Trent and Gaines' Mills, the former of which is on the west and the latter on the east side of the Chickahominy.

Our new base of operations will lead to our approaching Richmond from another quarter than that of Mechanicsville or Fair Oaks. The public will readily perceive the direction most likely to be taken by the army; the only question is when will active operations be commenced.

The people of the North are as competent as myself to judge of what is required to hasten forward the auspicious moment. Give us reinforcements and we will give you Richmond. Reinforcements have already arrived, but do not fear repletion; the more men we have and the sooner they join us, the better it will be for themselves and the country and the cause.

Louisville, July 17. Indefinite rumors prevail of a fight at Cynthiana, Ky., this afternoon.

At a meeting of the City Council this evening, both branches unanimously passed an ordinance compelling the Board of School Trustees to require all professors and teachers of the public schools to take the oath of allegiance.

Mobile, 10. A special dispatch to the Advertiser, dated Jackson, to-day, says that the enemy are throwing occasional shells into Vicksburg. The crops are suffering for rain. There is no truth in the report that 1500 Yankees were captured at Baton Rouge."

Another dispatch confirms the fact that the rebels have not taken possession of Baton Rouge."

Corinth, July 16. Gen. Halleck has just issued a special field order, saying that in giving up the immediate command of the troops composing the army of the Southwest, he desires to express his appreciation of the courage, endurance, good behavior, and soldierly conduct which they have exhibited on all occasions. He expresses to the commanders of the army corps and their subordinates the warmest thanks for their cordial co-operation. He says the soldiers have nobly done their duty, and accomplished much toward crushing the wicked rebellion. If they continue to exhibit the same vigilant courage and perseverance, he believes they will bring the war soon to a close.

Philadelphia, July 18. The Inquirer says Gen. Halleck is on his way to Washington to take the position of General Commanding the armies of the United States.

New York, July 18. The Tribune has advices from Warrenton dated the 17th. The news that Gen. Hatch occupies Gordonsville has created great consternation among leading rebels in Warrenton who had [illegible] idea that Gen. Pope would reach that point without a great battle. Indeed many of them said it would be held at all hazards, and that no Yankee army would ever be allowed to take it.

Washington, July 18. The Richmond Enquirer of the 15th appears alarmed at the order of our War Department, concentrating the forces of Generals McDowell, Fremont and Banks, under Gen. Pope, and remarks of the latter that "he is notoriously one of the most dangerous of the Union commanders—an officer of great activity and daring, and is very apt to do unexpected things."

Washington, July 18. We feel at liberty to state that yesterday a portion of the army of Gen. Pope entered the important town of Gordonsville, Virginia, unopposed, and duly destroyed all the railroad paraphernalia at that point, the junction of the Orange and Alexandria and Virginia Central Railroads. Three-fourths of the troops, munitions and supplies of every description for the rebel army at Richmond, of necessity pass through Gordonsville by railroad. The blow, therefore, is a most important one, more especially as it is the first of a series, which we trust will do more to cripple the efficiency of the rebel Richmond army than aught that has yet occurred.

Washington, July 18. The following is an extract from a recent dispatch received at the War Department from Gen. Saxton, dated Beaufort, S. C., July 10:

To Hon. E. M. Stanton, Secretary of War: Sir—I have the honor to report that every thing pertaining to the special service, for which I am sent to this Department, is in a favorable condition. The negroes are working industriously. We have some 15,000 acres of corn and cotton under cultivation. It looks well. The system of voluntary labor works admirably. The people are contented and happy. When the new crop is harvested they will cease to be a burden upon the Government. By adopting a judicious system of reward for labor, almost any amount can be obtained. Its proceeds will pay the expense.

I am, with great respect, yours truly,
R. Saxton, Brig. Gen. Volunteers.

Washington, July 18. The Post Office Department is having postage stamps printed, of denominations ranging from three to ninety cents, on thick ungummed paper, to be used for general circulation as a substitute for specie.

TO ALL PATRIOTIC CITIZENS!

At a meeting of the Executive Committee of the General Recruiting Committee of one hundred and fifty, appointed at Faneuil Hall, it was voted to recommend to the people of Boston to close their places of business this day, July 18th, at 4 o'clock P. M., and meet upon Boston common. The time has arrived when every citizen should do what he can, and all can do something to advance the object of recruiting.

Come one, come all, and let there be such a gathering on the common as will show to the country that Boston is alive and awake and interested in this important matter.

An address will be read to the people by Hon. J. T. Stevenson—also a band of music and addresses from several gentlemen.

Per order of the Executive Committee,
W. W. Clapp, Jr., Secretary.

New York, July 21. The Tribune's Washington dispatch says there is reason to believe that the President will soon issue one or more rules for the general conduct of the war. It is now positively known that the President, under the advice of Gen. Scott, and with the acquiescence of Gen. McClellan, has called Major General Halleck to Washington, to act as General-in-Chief of the armies of the United States.

It is probable that a general order will soon be issued from the War Department, applying everywhere within the lines of our armies the principle that wives and children of rebels who refuse to take the oath of allegiance, will be sent to join their husbands and fathers in the South.

The Tribune's Washington correspondent has advices from Warrenton this evening, which states that Gen. Hatch had reached Charlottsville. All the rich rebels of Warrenton were placed under contribution for the support of the national army. Four churches were taken for the use of the sick.

Nashville, Tenn., July 21. Our pickets were captured on the Lebanon road this evening, five miles from Hare, by guerrillas. Only one escaped. Three bridges were burned to-day on the Chattanooga road. The enemy is in force under Forest, five miles from the city. The troops are out, and there is great excitement.

Meeting of the Advent Christian Association.

To the brethren in Christ, and churches of the Lord who "serve the living God," and "wait for his Son from heaven." Greeting.—The Board of Managers, after due consultation, have decided to appoint the third annual meeting of the Advent Christian Association, at Wilbraham, Mass., to commence Tuesday, 4 o'clock, P. M., August 26th, 1862.

Two reasons have led them to decide upon this time in preference to October, as heretofore. First—A larger attendance can be secured; Second—Much expense can be saved. These are weighty considerations. The business to be transacted at the annual meeting of this Association is very important. The interests of every church, and every individual, "looking for the blessed hope," are involved in its proceedings. This Society controls the World's Crisis. It appoints its Editors and Managers. It decides what its character shall be, and marks out its policy, whether it shall give expression to every idea, however fanciful or absurd, which may demand its columns; or whether it shall select such only as are "meat in due season." It becomes necessary, therefore, that every church be represented, that our family paper be sustained in such a manner as to "feed the flock," that we may know whether its Editorship, eminently successful thus far, shall be changed or not.

A full representation, so desirable, can be best secured during campmeeting week. Distant churches in the South, West and East, are usually represented then, while they cannot afford six weeks afterwards to send other representatives so far to attend the Association alone. Having, for these reasons, fixed upon this time for our third annual meeting, it is hoped that we may have a large and profitable one. Lest we be disappointed, let earnest prayer be made to God daily, that whatever shall be done at that time may be done, not in the name of man, self, or party, but "in the name of the Lord Jesus."

Daniel T. Taylor, Chairman.
H. F. Carpenter, Clerk.

June 7th, 1862.

Note. The Board of the Advent Christian Association are requested to meet at Wilbraham on Tuesday, August 26th, at 8 o'clock, A. M. A prompt and punctual attendance desirable.

D. T. Taylor, President.
H. F. Carpenter, Clerk.

Note. Letters are solicited from churches and ministers who cannot possibly be otherwise represented. They may be directed to H. F. Carpenter, Collins Depot, Mass.

All pastors and evangelists, and delegates from churches co-operating with this Society, are members. Each church is allowed one delegate, and one additional delegate, for every fifty members above the number of twenty-five members. None can vote by letter.

Notice.

Eld. M. Batchelor is expected to hold a grove meeting in the grove of I. A. Lawton, at Hauppauge, Islip, L. I., to begin Friday, Aug. 8th, and hold over the following Sunday. I. A. Lawton.

General Meeting.

The brethren in New Hampshire, believing in gospel order, and the gifts as given to a New Testament church, feeling that in this day of unbelief and apostasy they should meet together, exhort one another, and contend earnestly "for the faith which was once delivered to the saints," that they may be able to stand against those in these last days who "resist the truth" like Jannes and Jambres, and "come behind in no gift; waiting for the coming of our Lord," that we may be found "blameless in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ;" and while we may regret any confusion (as God is not the author of confusion) or fanaticism, in this or other countries, that may have been connected with the exercise of the gifts; still we would not turn away from these, God's own appointed channels of communicating strength, comfort and blessings to his church in this day of trial, as well as the past; and, while we have our solemn conviction that, although we may hold many of the glorious truths of the gospel as very sacred and essential, still if we are destitute of its power, we shall be found with a lamp, but destitute of oil in the day of God; have concluded to commence a meeting on New Durham Ridge August 21st, and hold it over the following Sunday, for the investigation of the word, and to seek the divine blessing. Bro. J. Billings and others will be present to preach the word. All are invited. In behalf of the brethren,

J. G. Smith.

Campmeeting Notice.

According to previous appointment, there will be a campmeeting in the town of Grand Blanc, Genesee Co., Mich., on the farm of Bro. John Arable, commencing Aug. 27th, 1862. This meeting is appointed for the express purpose of calling together all such as love the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ in this State; and if brethren from other States, or from Canada, wish to attend, of course there will be no objection. Come, then, dear brethren and sisters; come with your tents and provisions; come well furnished with materials to take care of yourselves and others; come with warm hearts in the fear of God to labor for the salvation of souls, and be sure that you come at the commencement of the meeting. Our meeting last year was a blessed one, and we anticipate a more glorious one this year. Bro. and Sr. Mansfield will be there to aid in the proclamation of the gospel.

P. S. Brethren coming on the cars, from the East or West, will stop at Holly. The meeting is to be some twelve miles north of Holly. Stages run within three miles of the meeting. In behalf of the church,

A. N. Seymour.

Notice.

There will be a conference meeting at Jonesville, Hillsdale Co., Mich., commencing Thursday evening, Aug. 21st, and continuing over the Sabbath. Bro. and Sr. Mansfield, and Bro. and Sr. Seymour, are expected to be in attendance to preach the word. We hope to see a general gathering of the lovers of Jesus within reach of this meeting. We invite you to come to this feast. Come praying. In this time of trouble, we should not forget the assembling ourselves together, but exhort "one another, and so much the more as (we) see the day approaching." Come, then, brethren and sisters, lay aside the cares of life a little time, and come up to this meeting. We will try and take care of all that will come. A. E. Babcock, for the Church.

New Preston Campmeeting.

Brethren who are intending to bring tents to this meeting, will write to H. Baldwin, giving dimensions of said tents, that poles may be furnished for the same. Brn. Ackerman, Mills, Curtis, and Teryll are requested to meet on the ground, Monday, Sept. 1st, to erect tents, and make such other arrangements as shall be deemed necessary. All other volunteers to aid in fitting up the ground at that time will be accepted.

H. Pratt, servant of the church of Christ.

P. S. Will New Lebanon, North Adams, and others on the railroad, give us a representation?

Campmeeting at Wilbraham.

It is thought best that our great annual gathering at Wilbraham commence this year Monday, Aug. 25th, and continue one week. Particulars hereafter.

F. H. Berick, Miles Grant, Geo. T. Adams, } Committee of Arrangements.

Campmeeting.

The great interest manifested at our tent meeting in New Preston, Ct., has induced us, with the advice of the brethren in that section, to appoint a campmeeting, to commence Tuesday, Sept. 2d, at 10 A. M. Some eight tents have already been counted up for the occasion, and we hope the number will be much larger. Brethren that want to work for the Lord will find here a new and interesting field.

We desire all who can, to bring provisions and tents for themselves and others. Plain food, and "all things common" is the Bible rule; let us practice it cheerfully. A daily stage from New Milford (Housatonic R. R.) at 12 will bring in all who wish. Distance eight miles. H. Pratt.

Maine Conference.

The Maine Annual Advent Conference will convene Sept. 10th, at 7 P. M., and continue over the following Sunday. It is hoped that all Advent ministers in the State, who can work together in union and fellowship, in the promotion of the objects of our conferences, will be present, and as many other brethren and sisters as can well attend this yearly gathering, to work together for the spread of this gospel of the kingdom of God, that sinners may be saved, and the church strengthened and fitted for the soon coming of the Lord from heaven.

The place of the conference is not yet decided upon, but will be soon, and given.

O. R. Fassett, President.
I. C. Wellcome, Scribe.

Notice.

The Lord willing, there will be a campmeeting at Corinna, Me., (on Mr. Weston Nutter's place) commencing the first Monday in September, and continuing over the following Sabbath. We extend a cordial invitation to all the brethren in this section, and abroad, to come and worship the Lord with us. There will, we hope, be a full delegation of preaching brethren with us from abroad to dispense the word of life. Particulars hereafter.

B. C. Moore, Albert Door, Geo. H. Fisher, } Committee of Arrangements.

Conference Notice.

The Illinois conference of Adventists will hold their quarterly meeting with the church near New Rutland, Lasalle Co., commencing Tuesday, Sept. 2d, at 2 o'clock, and continue over the Sabbath. Those coming from the East or West will take the Burlington and Quincy R. R., connecting with the Central at Menetata, or the Rock Island R. R. connecting with the Central at Lasalle, stopping at New Rutland, on the Central R. R., where conveyances will be provided to the place of meeting. Preaching brethren in the conference are expected to be there. It will be held in the New England Mission Tent.

H. G. McCulloch, Sec. of Conf.

Notice.

Bro. Grant:—I desire to inform those friends that have written and directed their letters to South Glastenbury, Conn., that I have been absent since the 1st day of May. They have been forwarded to me, and shall be attended to if the Lord permit. [illegible]

Notices of Eld. J. V. Himes.

Sabbath, July 27th, Lowell St. Chapel.
Worcester, Tuesday, July 29th, in the evening.

Wednesday, July 30th, conference and lectures in Palmer, or Three Rivers, Mass., and continue over the Sabbath. Afternoon and evening each day, and Sabbath all day, as Bro. Powell shall appoint.

Monday, Aug. 4th, Albany, N. Y., in the evening.

Wednesday, Aug. 6th, commence a meeting in Espenoe, N. Y., and continue over the Sabbath, as Bro. B. F. Brownell shall arrange; perhaps in the grove.

Tuesday, Aug. 12th, Sandy Hill, N. Y., in the evening.

Friday, Aug. 15th, commence a campmeeting at Perry's Mills, N. Y., to continue from the 15th to the 24th.

Tuesday, Aug. 26th, will be at the Wilbraham campmeeting, to continue through the week.

Friends who wrote me from Conn. will please write me without delay as to their wishes and plans for my labors there, after the campmeeting.

Notice.

The Iowa and Minnesota Christian Conference will hold their annual session in Sept. or Oct. Due notice will be given. We want to hold it to accommodate both States. If any church or community wish the meeting, they will please write soon. We hope to hear from the brethren, that we may know their wishes, and see a general turn out at the conference, both of preachers and brethren. Address Peter S. W. Deyo, Conference Clerk, Strawberry Point, Iowa.

Ghostology.

Psalms 103: 15.

"As for man, his days are as grass: as the flower of the field, so he flourisheth."

As lowly bends the fragile flower,
And folds its rich vermillion bloom,
And feels no more the fragrant shower
That yields the balmy, sweet perfume;

So the sad mourner droops and dies,
And sinks upon the lap of earth;
But not like flowers no more to rise,
And ne'er to know more beauteous birth.

For soon the mourner's hope will bud,
And blossom fair with brighter hue;
And love, in parterre of our God,
With verdure fresh its leaves renew.

Eternal life this love will give,
Immortal youth! celestial words!
In Jesus' blood washed pure we'll live,
And never feel affliction's rods.

His love divine has marked each groan,
And numbered every viewless sigh;
Forever's hushed the widow's moan,
The mother's tears and orphan's cry.

In one vast social circle all
Of richest banquet shall partake;
He hears the smallest, weakest call—
The bruised reed he will not break.

Thou tempest-tossed, afflicted one,
Lift up thy head and shout for joy;
Thou'lt ever bask in genial sun,
Where death's cold blast will ne'er destroy.

In Eden the parting smart's unknown,
The midnight groan and silent tear;
There kindred friends will meet at home,
And in the midst will God be there.

Worldly Wealth.

RICH TOWARD SELF vs. RICH TOWARD GOD.

BY S. D. BERRY.

"So is he that layeth up treasure for himself, and is not rich toward God."—Luke 12: 21.

This language was used by our Savior, at the end of a parable which he spoke to illustrate man's foolishness in supposing he can find happiness in wealthy stinginess. It appears that an individual came to Christ and requested him to speak to his brother, and persuade him to divide an inheritance with him. So silly a request as this, of course our Lord did not grant; but took occasion to give the man, and also those around him, a lesson on covetousness, telling them to "take heed, and beware of covetousness"; and, for an illustration, spoke the parable referred to.

The parable is in substance as follows: A certain rich man's farming grounds brought forth abundantly, and his barns would not contain all the produce he raised. In this emergency, he concluded to tear them down and build more capacious ones, in which he could store his produce. When this plan was conjured in the selfish man's brain, he looked forward contemplatively to a comfortable and lazy good time, when he should enjoy the effects of his prolific farm, eat fruits from his own flourishing trees, drink pure wine made from the grapes of his own vineyard, live at his ease, and be merry,—ever thoughtless of the hungry, and, it may be, starving ones around him. "And I will say to my soul," said he, "Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years: take thine EASE; eat, drink, and be merry. But God said unto him, Thou fool! this night thy soul shall be required of thee: THEN WHOSE shall these things be which thou hast provided?"

"So is he that layeth up treasure for himself," says Christ, "and is not rich toward God." How? We bring nothing into the world: we can carry nothing out of it. However much a man may lay up in this world, and congratulate himself on enjoying it, he may die in a night, in a day, when his hopes are the brightest; and all his worldly wealth, however much cherished, must be left for others to dabble in; for "so is he that layeth up treasure for himself, and is not rich toward God." Now as a man can lay up wealth for himself, and thus not be "rich toward God," the inference and probable truth is, a man can lay up riches—not for himself, but for God, or God's cause—his wealth all being consecrated to God, though it really belongs to him, for "the earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof,"—thus the man would be rich toward God. That is, he may be in possession of wealth, and be rich toward God; because it is consecrated to Him as the rightful owner, the man being nothing more nor less than God's agent for it, to use it as God wills him to. While, on the other hand, the man who possesses wealth for himself, is "not rich toward God," but rich toward himself,—just like the certain rich man in the parable, who was thus rich and was "not rich toward God." Therefore, inferring it to be true that a man may possess wealth, and yet have it consecrated to God, and be merely the agent of God, in whose charge the property is allowed to be,—the man thus being rich toward God, his wealth would be a blessing, both to himself and to God's cause. Is there any reason why it would not?

Now, I apprehend, God does not care how much wealth a man has in possession, if it is consecrated to Him,—if the possessor considers it God's property, and himself the agent for God, to use it, or such portion of it, as God directs him to, in the cause of Jesus Christ. God does not care how wealthy such a man is, if, together with other righteous deeds, he does his share towards paying the true servant of God, that serves meat in due season to the flock. In his labors, his fears, his anxieties, his watchings, to properly fulfill the office God has appointed him,—for it is a responsible position for a man to occupy in these perilous times, to stand as watchman on Zion's walls,—he needs not only the sympathy and prayers of the flock, their "God bless yous", but he needs pecuniary means for his use, as much as any other man in the world. It is good advice to tell him to live on faith; but please first set the example yourself, brother. You can live on faith just as easy as he can; and it is just as much your duty as it is his. "Faith without works is dead." He is a material being, he has to eat material food, and wear material clothing; and it costs material means to thus live. Therefore it makes a material difference whether he is paid or not. If he was an immaterial man (like the theological souls of the day), his wants would be immaterial, and it would be immaterial whether or not he got anything material for his services.

The watchman has to study, in order to be posted up in the affairs of the age and the history of the past, so that he can expound the "more sure word of prophecy," and give the signs of the kingdom at hand. Unless he does this, the flock who "know the joyful sound" of the present truth, will not be satisfied with him. They want meat as well as fruit. And, for the watchman to be posted up in these things, he must not only observe the things before his eyes, but search into the history of the past, and compare it with prophecy. Therefore he needs books. Occasionally a precious book shoots from some Bible student's spiritual mind, which may be a gem of light and truth, which should be in the possession of every one of God's watchmen. He must buy it, but it takes something to buy it with. Faith will not always buy books, and "God bless yous" will not furnish him with them. Some men are afraid of giving too much to Zion's watchmen. There never was a true one that ever got too much; for all he has is the Lord's; it is consecrated, and is used to God's glory.

God does not care how large and nice a house a christian has, or how well furnished it is, if the possessor has it consecrated to God, so that he acts only as agent. He will then take in God's poor, and use his house to the Lord's glory. But God does not allow a man, professing to follow Jesus, to own a house six times larger than he has any use for, while there are the Lord's poor around him, striving themselves almost to death to earn sufficient to pay from thirty to a hundred dollars a year rent to some rich, miserly house-owner, as ungodly as a Sodomite, who lays up or lays out the money the poor man pays him for the Devil. I knew of a christian who owned a nicely furnished large house, who lodged, and fed, and helped God's servants; and he prospered, and the more he prospered the more he blessed God and did for his cause. Wealth was a blessing in this case, until the devil stepped in; for the man's wife, getting a little backslidden, I suppose, took it into her head that they were doing a little more than their share; and told her husband that she thought "somebody else might just as well take the minister once in a while as for them to always do it." As the woman has the work to do in such cases, the husband thought she had a right to speak on the subject. He was persuaded by her, as Adam was by his wife, and so the minister was turned over to some other brethren. The man immediately began to lose his prosperity. He got out of work, got in debt, and lost money that he lent to a christian brother, who, in turn, lost the money hired.

No doubt, God often suffers a christian to become rich to try him, to see what kind of timber he is made of. If he is nothing but straw, he falls into the snare and is lost; for "the rich fall into a snare," says the apostle. Ye who prosper in this world's goods, beware! You feel glad and praise God verbally for blessing you with prosperity, but he is doing it to try you. He gives you wealth to see what you will do with it. A trial day will come for you. See to it that you have not got so attached to your wealth, that you cannot stand the trial. Look out! God's eye is upon you. He knows the thoughts of the innermost recesses of the heart.

Observation and experience show that so long as a man's wealth is consecrated to God, so long he blesses God, so long God blesses him, and so long his wealth is a blessing. But when the man begins to think he is doing more than his share,—that Bro. This, or Bro. That does not do so much as he ought to, and so begins to tie his purse-strings tighter,—then you may depend upon it that man's wealth begins to cease to be a blessing; and in nine cases in ten he by some means loses all he has, and afterwards, when he cannot do anything else, comes back humbly to God, like the prodigal son to his father; or else, like the certain rich man in the parable, to whom God said, "This night thy soul shall be required of thee," "Then whose shall those things be which thou hast provided?"—he goes on in the road to wealthy ruin, and in the day of wrath will throw his gold and silver "to the moles and to the bats," and flee into the caves and dens of the mountains, and cry in terrible dismay and despair, and can find no peace nor protection. It matters not to us whether this brother or that brother does his duty, every man should do his own. It wont do to measure ourselves by others. Cord-wood sticks are not always of a length; they nearly always come short of the lawful measure. Christ alone is the correct rule. Measure by him. If you correspond, then praise God and keep so.

I have attempted to prove that wealth may be a blessing when its possessor is God's agent over it. Let us look to the Holy Record for further proof. Abraham possessed wealth, but he bountifully served strangers, and they turned out to be angels. Job, of Uz, was very wealthy, excepting one period when Satan robbed him; and his wealth proved to be a blessing. He gave to do good. Said he, "I delivered the poor that cried, and the fatherless, and him that had none to help him. The blessing of him that was ready to perish came upon me; and I caused the widow's heart to sing for joy."—Job 29, 12, 13. Some people think that if a poor person calls on them, and they wait on him at the door, and say "How d'ye do?" and "Good bye," and "Call again," that they have strained themselves to the utmost tension,—that they have condescended to do a christian act which Mr. Stingy, or Mrs. Wealth, or neighbor Tight-purse, would never have bent their dignities to do. But Job "searched out" their residences, and showed them that he was benevolent toward the ones that were needy. Joseph of Arimathea was rich. He furnished the good tomb, and the fine linen and spices for his Lord's body. His wealth was a blessing. These are only a few of many Bible cases where wealth was a blessing. S. D. B.

"Believing and Confessing."---No. 2.

FROM DR. L. L. HAMLIN.

Extract from Dr. Hamlin's Sermon.

"What then is now required? Confession of Christ in the work of the Holy Spirit—that Comforter which he sent to 'take of the things of God, and show them unto us'—confessions from living witnesses that the Spirit reproves, regenerates, and sanctifies wholly through faith in Jesus Christ. The Jews testified of God's works in their day; the apostles of his miraculous deeds in the commencement of Christianity; and what belongs to us? We can recount no plagues like those which smote Egypt, nor delivering miracles like those of the exodus. Yet God has not withdrawn his presence from our world. He 'works a work' in our day. 'It shall come to pass in the last days that I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh.' This he now does, as we have seen and known, convincing and regenerating—'sprinkling clean water upon us' that we may 'be clean.' And of the plagues of sin within us, worse than the plagues of Egypt—of the rod, not of Aaron, but of Christ smiting our rocky hearts, and causing the waters of repentance and then of joy to gush forth, we too are witnesses. Outward miracles in our day almost cease to be disputed. Other matters are now drawn into the issues, which separate and antagonize the church and the world. Christ's Messiahship is yielded; but the Spirit's gracious work is denied and derided. Not the advent, but its aim provokes man's enmity; and this has become the issue which must next be settled, not merely with the world, but with formal christianity. This in turn is the question—the point at which persecution aims, with such annoying subtilties as her malice may employ when she dares not use force; and as faithful witnesses we must shape our course to her present modes of assault. Of what avail is testimony which does not touch existing issues?"

So much for the Doctor. Let us now glance at one or two points in this extract. He remarks that it is evident, from examples presented, that confessing one offensive feature of christianity may involve a full confession of the system. What that feature is must be determined by the state of public sentiment. Again, he says, "When popular sentiment moves men not to deny, but acknowledge Christ as the true God and risen Savior, if the disciple would bear 'the cross of true confession, he must go some steps beyond that unoffensive summary to those features which now come under the bar of public prejudice."

The Dr. very correctly reasons on this point. He admits there is a specific truth, which brings with its confession, the cross, and that what is the "present truth" has not and will not be in every age the test and cross of christianity. He might have cited many other illustrations than those given, had it been necessary.

The duty of believing and confessing the "present truth," i. e., the truth specially given to the church in its progressive stages, is emphatically enforced by the Savior to those Jews who boasted so much of being Moses' disciples; "If ye believe not that I am He (the Messiah), ye shall die in your sins." Once it had been the specific duty enforced on the Jew to be a disciple of Moses; but now that the prophet, like unto him but greater, had come, the command binding on them was, "Him shall ye hear in all things." The penalty was, "Every soul which will not hear (obey) that prophet, shall be destroyed from among the people." To confess faith in Moses, had been a cross; it had connected with it repentance, shame, persecution; and the effect produced thereby was separation from those who did not embrace the Sinaitic covenant. In Christ's day this cross had ceased, and the Jew gloried in his position. To receive Christ as the Messiah, to adopt the new system, and practice its unpretending, self-humbling teachings, was the cross of that time; and after the ascension, to confess faith in Him who was crucified as a malefactor, and declare his resurrection to life, was sufficient to doom the confessor to persecution and death. But in this age of the world, as the Dr. rightly argues, this confession, though not less obligatory, has ceased to be a cross. "Behold the world is gone after him!" the once despised Nazarene. Gorgeous temples are reared to the honor of Him who was despised and rejected of men, and had not even where to lay his head. So far as respects the name of christian, the offence of the cross has ceased.

"And," inquires the Dr., "what doctrinal test can now separate the true christian from an orthodox, guilty world?" He gives it as his belief that it is a confession of faith in the work of the Holy Spirit, respecting which he says there is much infidelity. While we admit the fact that skepticism to a great degree prevails touching this point,—that the baptism of power is frequently denied, and the inward teachings of the Spirit are rejected, even by those who profess most grace,—yet we fail to see this to be the specific truth, either from "public sentiment," or the odium connected with its confession. We are aware that those who openly confess their faith in the sanctifying influence of the Spirit, and stand forth as witnesses from personal experience of this truth, and are indeed taught thereby, are subjected to a degree of persecution by a class; but we cannot see it to be so general, or to a sufficient degree to lead us to believe this to constitute the test truth of the day. The uprisings of humanity, as manifested on the behalf of the enslaved, has called forth far more bitter persecution, and led to far more stirring results, than the confession of faith in the work of the Holy Spirit. Yet we do not believe this to be the cross of the present time.

What questions have stirred the public mind, awakened the greatest research in the christian community, caused the most complete separation between the formal and zealous—the popular pleasure-loving, and the humble, self-denying professor? Has it been those touching the office of the Holy Spirit? If so, we are in ignorance thereof. The proclamation of the message, "The kingdom of heaven is at hand!"—the cry, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh!" has aroused the present generation from its slumbers; the enforcement of the proclamation by the evidences drawn from prophetic history, with the "signs of the times," has stirred the depths of the great human heart, and the prejudices, the opposition, the hatred, the scorn and persecution of the worldly mind, have been called into action against this "present truth." It has tested the christianity and orthodoxy of the day, and shown in open light who are in sympathy with the petition continually offered, "Thy kingdom come!" It has manifested those who think more highly of the "traditions of the elders" than they do of Bible doctrine. It has brought out into a prominent position a multitude who love the Bible, and holiness, and Christ with his coming reign, and separated them from the mass of mere formalists, who love this present evil world far better than that which is to come.

Here we find the cross. This we believe to be the test truth incumbent upon the church to confess in the present day, and those who do this aright, will show that they are not ashamed of Christ and of his word. M. D. W.

"They shall be as though they had not been."

Solemn thought! to have the light of existence put out forever. To cease to be,—to be sought for and not found. To have the places that knew us know us no more. To leave our plans and purposes and performances eternally ended,—our name remembered no more! Banished from the presence of our pious friends, of angels, of God Cast out from the face of the broad earth, as worthless encumberers of the ground, consigned to flames that burn to a second and eternal death. This fire that destroys the wicked, with all their evil works, at the same time purifies, renews, cleanses and beautifies the earth, and makes it meet for the righteous.

Reader, will this be your doom? Will you be an outcast? You need not be. There is a way of escape. He that believeth on Jesus will never die. Then believe. Come, and learn his love and marvelous goodness. Enter his service. Come now. Time is short. Delay no longer. Hasten to be reconciled to God. Christ intercedes for sinners. Come as you are, a sinful creature, and he will accept in much mercy. Then all will be well. Let time end, the judgment sit, the fiery showers fall, the wicked be consumed; yet on, on, your life shall go, never ending! Jesus ever lives, and his people shall be immortal.

Reader, be wise. LIVE! Death is not beautiful that you should choose it. Life is sweet; then all the wise will seek life through its true source,—Jesus. Come to him and live. PHILIP MARSHALL.

Danville, C. E., 1862.

For the Crisis.

The following poem has been offered for publication in a religious (?) paper in this city, edited by three clergymen (?) and respectfully declined, because it is thought to savor too much of PEACE to please many of its readers. May all those ministers who fear the effect of such sentiments upon the people, ponder the fearful passage,—"If the watchman see the sword come, and blow not the trumpet, and the people be not warned; if the sword come, and take any person from among them, . . . his bl od will I require at the watchman's hand."—Ezek. 33: 6.

The Night is Dark and Dreary.

BY R. THAYER.

I.
The night is dark and dreary,
Which o'er our land doth brood;
Millions are growing weary,
Its fearful scenes who've viewed.

II.
In this—a christian (?) nation,
Of all on earth most blest,—
To see such desolation
My spirit cannot rest.

III.
When brothers, armed 'gainst brothers,
Are waging deadly strife,—
When each affection smothers
To take the others' life,—

IV.
When Jesus and his teaching
The mass of men ignore,—
When ministers are preaching
The nation is secure,—

V.
When thousands, broken-hearted,
Are weeping o'er the slain,—
While thinking how they parted,
No more to meet again,—

VI.
While households draped in mourning
Are seen on every hand,—
And thousands long for morning
To break upon the land,—

VII.
My soul cannot help hating
The evils "war" doth send,—
And anxiously I'm waiting
To see this conflict end.

VIII.
Show us, O Lord, the reason
Why such things here should be,
And may each one in season
The path of duty see.

IX.
May every "yoke" be broken,
We on the weak have laid,—
By each—THE WORD THOU'ST SPOKEN,
The "RULE OF LIFE" be made.

X.
Then in our sad condition,
Amidst "war's" dread alarm,
Thou'lt hear when we petition,
And bear for us Thine arm.

XI.
The "rod of the oppressor"
In pieces Thou wilt break,—
Our "native land"—thou'lt bless her,
And never more forsake.

XII.
O Lord, the "good time" hasten,
When "wars" on earth shall cease,
And "LOVE" all hearts shall fasten
IN THE SWEET BONDS OF PEACE.

Christian Conduct under Injury.

"Let the consideration," says Flavel, "that the day of the Lord draweth nigh, restrain you from anticipating it by acts of revenge. Why are you so hasty? Is not the Lord at hand to avenge all his abused servants? We are inclined in our shortsightedness and unbelief, to be hasty when we are injured, and use means to return the injury to the malicious bosom from which it came; but this must not be done, rather we are to return good for the inflicted evil, remembering that He who is coming to judge the world knows all about the way in which we are treated, and that He will judge righteously. "Dearly beloved, avenge not yourselves, but rather give place unto wrath: for it is written, Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord."—Hence we must not wrong ourselves by assuming his work. He will do it better than we can; and He will remember in "that day" our meek endurance here, "Therefore if thine enemy hunger, feed him: if he thirst, give him drink; for in so doing, thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head." Christ says, "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you"—"not rendering evil for evil," says Peter, "or railing for railing: but contrariwise blessing; knowing that ye are thereunto called, that ye should inherit a blessing." This grace is taught us by example as well as by precept. David says, "I have delivered him that without cause is mine enemy." It it said of David's Son and David's Lord, "When he was reviled he reviled not again, but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously."

Child of faith, "Go thou and do likewise," and spread thy case before God, and he will listen, and in due time do thee justice. "Shall not God avenge his own elect, which cry day and night unto him, though he bear long with them? I tell you that he will avenge them speedily. Nevertheless when the Son of man cometh shall he find faith on the earth?"

I will close with an exhortation of James, the reading of which suggested the above:—"Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Behold the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and latter rain. Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts: for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh. Grudge not one against another, brethren, lest ye be condemned: behold, the Judge standeth at the door."—Millenial News.

Garibaldi and the Lost Lamb.

The General got up as soon as he had finished the bowl of milk, lighted a lantern, and, without saying a word, started off again to seek the missing lamb. We ran after him, following him over the crags and through the thorny brushwood—and, from time to time, we heard the bleating of the deserted creature; but again the cry ceased, and the light of the lantern failed to show us where the poor little lamb lay. It was nine o'clock, and raining, and we were very tired; so we once more returned to the house, and went to bed. About midnight we were roused by a voice: [illegible] the boys returning, joyfully carrying the lost lamb in his arms. He took the little creature to his bed, and lay down with it, giving it a bit of sponge dipped in milk to suck, to keep it quiet, so that no one should know the kind act he had done. At five o'clock in the morning we found him planting potatoes in the garden. We took our spades and began to work also. Not a word was said of the lamb, although every body was thinking of it. How like the good Shepherd, seeking the lost!—English Letter.

COURTESY AT HOME.—We trust that few of our readers need the hint suggested in the following extract:

Almost any one can be courteous in a neighbor's house. If anything goes wrong or is out of time, or is disagreeable, there it is made the best of, not the worst; even efforts are made to excuse, and show that it is not felt, it is attributable to accident, not to design, and this is not only easy but natural in the house of a friend. I will not, therefore, believe that what is so natural in the house of another is impossible at home, but maintain without fear, that all the courtesies of social life may be upheld in domestic society. A husband as willing to be pleased at home as he is anxious to be pleased in a neighbor's house, and a wife as intent on making things comfortable every day to her family as on set days to her guest, could not fail to make home happy."

WHAT A PHILOSOPHER SAID.—When a stranger treats me with want of respect, said a poor philosopher, I comfort myself with the reflection, that it is not myself he slights but my old shabby coat and hat, which to say the truth, have no particular claim for admiration. So if my hat and coat choose to fret about it, let them, but it is nothing to me.

☞ "I would have no one criticise a sermon," said Samuel Drew, "till he had attempted to preach one. After you have attempted to address a congregation, you will better understand a preacher's sensations and difficulties. And remember this in all your criticisms: the hand that cannot build a hovel may demolish a palace."

"THIS IS FOR YOUR HEALTH."—Paul.

Our Home.

Dr. Jackson's justly celebrated health institution, at Dansville, N. Y., well known by the name of "OUR HOME," has been recently visited by Dr. Day, a graduate of the Hygeio Therepeutic College. After a careful examination, he speaks of "Our Home" as follows:—G.

"Having long had a curiosity to see Our Home and to make the acquaintance of its managers, and having a few days that I could spare for a visit, on Saturday last I came to Dansville, and accepted the hearty, generous hospitality of Our Home for a few days. Right glad am I that I did so. I needed rest; and of all the places on earth I ever saw for obtaining that precious boon, absolute rest, Our Home is the best. Whether it be the feeble invalid or the weary traveler, if he cannot rest himself to the best advantage at Our Home he must be lacking in his disposition; and I feel positive that good rest is one of the blessings we too little prize. I have no time now to mention in detail all those excellencies of position, convenience, beauty, and adaptation to the law of fitness, which so pre-eminently characterize Our Home and make it beyond doubt, the Model Hygienic Establishment of the world. I can only say that so far as purity of water, beauty of surroundings, hygienic conveniences, and social life are concerned, I have not seen its equal. There is another thing, however, that has done more to win my admiration than any of these. I allude to the executive management of the Physician-in-Chief—Dr. Jackson. Such strict punctuality, regularity and order are seldom seen in Water Cures. This great family is controlled with as much care, foresight, and precision, and apparently with as much ease as a man could drive a span of smart horses. Our Home is evidently a great success; and if any man knows how to "keep a Health Institution," it is Dr. Jackson. These are my sentiments after a thorough personal examination, and I most cheerfully hand them to you."

Yours truly, DR. DAY.

How to Eat.

Before a man becomes hungry, watchful nature has calculated, in her way, how much nutriment the body needs, and provides as much of a liquid substance as will be necessary to prepare from the food which may be eaten, that amount of sustenance which the system may require. When this is stored up, and all is ready, the sensation of hunger commences, and increases with the steadily increasing amount of the digesting material just referred to, and the very instant the first mouthful of food is swallowed, this "gastric juice" is poured out into the stomach through a thousand sluices; but no more has been prepared than was necessary, for nature does nothing in vain; so that if a single mouthful more of food has been swallowed than the untempted or unstimulated appetite would have called for, there is no gastric juice for its solution, and it remains but to fret and worry and irritate for hours together. If the amount eaten is much in excess, the stomach, as if in utter discouragement at the magnitude of its task, ceases its attempts at digestion, and forthwith commences the process of ejecting the unnatural load by means of nausea and vomiting in some cases; in others, it remains for an hour or more like a weight, a hard round ball, or a lump of lead, an uneasy heaviness; then it begins to "sour," that is, decompose, to rot, and the disgusting gas or liquid comes up into the throat, causing more or less of a scalding sensation from the pit of the stomach to the throat; this is called "heartburn." At length, the half-rotted mixture is forced out of the mouth by the outraged stomach with that horrible odor and taste with which every glutton is familiar. In some cases the stenchy mass is passed out of the stomach downwards, causing, in its progress, a gush of liquid from all parts of the intestinal canal, to wash it, with a flood, out of the system; this is the "Diarrhea" which surprises the gourmand at midnight or in the early morning hours, when a late or over-hearty meal has been eaten. When sufficient food has been taken for the amount of gastric juice supplied, hunger ceases, and every mouthful swallowed after that, no gastric juice having been prepared for its dissolution, remains without any healthful change, inflaming, and irritating, and exhausting the stomach by its efforts to get rid of it, and this is the first step towards forming "dyspepsia," which becomes more and more deeply fixed by every repeated outrage, until at length it remains a life-time worry to the mind, filling it with horrible imaginings, and a wearing wasting torture to the body, until it passes into the grave.

The moral of the article is, that the man who "forces" his food, he who eats without an inclination, and he who strives by tonics, or bitters, or wine, or other alcoholic liquors, to "get up" an appetite, is a sinner against body and soul—a virtual suicide!—Hall's Journal of Health.

The Shape of our Bodies.

Symmetry is one of the conditions of good health. God knows the best form. He created man upright in his own image. The vital organs in the chest and abdomen are fitted to an erect spine. If the upper portion of the spine bends forward, as in drooping shoulders, not only is the great nerve marrow of the spine itself distorted, and its circulation crippled, (which is a serious matter, resulting in certain common affections,) but the lungs, heart, liver, and stomach lose their natural place, and perform all their duties disadvantageously. A very large proportion of our many affections of these vital organs take their rise in such displacement.

What shall be done? First, improve the desks in our schools, so that instead of compelling our young to sit hours every day in a stooping position, they shall be compelled to sit erect, with head and shoulders drawn well back. This is very easily accomplished. Such a change in our school furniture would prove a priceless national blessing. Second: Remove every ounce of pressure from the waist. Pants worn without suspenders, and drawn close about the body, skirts or dresses pressing at the waist, must produce round shoulders, for when the organs of the abdomen are pushed downward, the shoulders must droop in order to maintain the relations between the thoracic and abdominal viscera. Third: The back legs of our chairs must be sawn off two inches shorter than the front ones. The front edge of the seat must not be more than fourteen inches high for women, and sixteen for men. This arrangement will immediately relieve the back while sitting, and secure a good position of the shoulders. Fourth: The habit of walking erect, with the air of a soldier, must be generally cultivated. Fifth: Gymnastic culture of the shoulders.

With such means the nation will become upright and vigorous.—Dr. Dio Lewis.

Out-of-Door Exercise.

There is probably not another people to be found that take so little exercise out of doors, as those living in the cities and large towns of the Northern States. This in-door confinement is the direct occasion of two great evils:—impaired health and a destruction of vivacity. To be beautiful and cheerful, much time must be passed in the sun-light, where oxygen may be inhaled without stint. Stay in the house, shop, store, office, study, sanctum, or other confinement, where carbonic acid gas, and other impurities are breathed and breathed again, and it would be very extraordinary if such persons always maintained cheerful spirits, and enjoyed good health. . . . If not accustomed to walking, begin by exercising moderately, increasing a little every day, until you are able to walk three, six or twelve miles a day.

The pleasure of life will be greatly enhanced by exercising as now indicated, or in some other not less efficient way. It is no unusual thing for girls to begin to lose the freshness and beauty of girlhood, that delightful period of life, before they get out of their teens. Take our advice, provided it meets the approval of your mothers, and you will preserve and magnify the priceless graces of girlhood as of womanhood, health, beauty, and cheerfulness, and secure that which everybody desires, a long, healthful, happy and useful life.—Boston Transcript.

CURE FOR EAR ACHE.—After having several times proved on different members of our family the efficacy of the following in relieving that distracting pain, ear ache, we are induced to give publicity to the simple remedy. Take a small piece of the white of a hard boiled egg, wrapped in a portion of its outer skin, and apply it while warm in the ear.—Carlton Sentinel, N. B.

"Who may abide the day of His coming?"

When mercy's last tones shall have died on the air,
And her tearful entreaties are past;
When arises that deep anguished wail of despair,
That shall echo the last trumpet's blast;
When the hypocrite's hope, like a gossamer thread,
In that terrible hour shall fail;
When trembles the earth 'neath the archangel's tread,
And nature affrighted grows pale;
When the grave shall refuse any longer to hide
The forms we have laid in the dust;
And the pitiless ocean, forgetting his pride,
Shall tremblingly yield up his trust;
When the North shall give up, and the South bring her sons,
Long exiled in regions of night;
And all of earth's pure and her beautiful ones
Shall have entered the portals of light:
Where then, oh my soul! will thy portion be found?
Oh! where will thy lot then be cast?
When the wheat in "the bundle of life" is all bound,
And the angel-reaped harvest is past?
Oh! deep in my heart let this question sink down,
While yet for the erring there's hope;
And mercy still points to the beautiful crown,
For each overcomer laid up!

Worldly Wealth.

RICH TOWARD SELF vs. RICH TOWARD GOD.

BY S. D. BERRY.

"So is he that layeth up treasure for himself, and is not rich toward God."—Luke 12: 21.

(Concluded.)

It matters not how much or how little one has,—his wealth must be consecrated to God; and not only his wealth, but he himself must be wholly consecrated, wholly converted to God. Many are the professors of religion who are but half converted, even themselves. And it is quite sure, that if their wealth is converted or consecrated to God, they will be also. Some consecrate all but their body, and that they reserve to clothe in eight dollar broadcloth; or silks and flounces, ribbons and gewgaws, laces and embroideries, at a cost that would make a poor man rich. That is, they consecrate about all but their pride, and that they keep free from the stings of conscience by continually thinking on their rich attire—their ornament. Is this the "ornament of a meek and quiet spirit"? See 1 Tim 2: 8–10. Some consecrate all but one finger, and that they keep in reserve to ornament with a ring or two. Do gold rings look like the christian ornament? 1 Pet. 3: 3, 4. Some keep back just their ears from God, and those they use to hang more value on than there is within the head between those ears. Some say that the eyes are benefited by gold ear-rings. Well, then put rings in; but what is the use of hanging heavy danglers on them merely for ornament? Is it the christian "ornament of a meek and quiet spirit"? Many seem to consecrate all but a little spot right here on the bosom, and here they hang out the sign of what is within—PRIDE. Is this "outward adorning .... of wearing of gold .... the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price"?—1 Pet. 3: 3, 4. Not a few imagine that God has nothing to do with their heads. They get pretty well converted—all but the head, and that they reserve to decorate in King Fashion's gorgeous array.

I have left off calling such persons christians. It is not the name for them. Professors they are, and nothing but professors; for unless one is converted—wholly converted, he cannot claim the righteous appellation of Christian, which means a follower of Christ. Christian—follower of Christ, and do the very things he forbids? Inconsistency! A Christian—follower of Christ who is the Son of God, whose Father is the Eternal, the "only true," the "only wise God," professing to be this, and yet following the world, whose God is the Devil! Professing christianity, and yet following Satan! Is there not something here nearly akin to either blind or open hypocrisy?

The inspired word spoken by St. Paul says, "I will .... that women ADORN themselves in modest apparel, with shamefacedness (modest countenance) and sobriety (seriousness); not with broidered hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array; but (which becometh women professing godliness) WITH GOOD WORKS."—1 Tim. 2: 8–10. St. Peter says a word on the subject of adornments: "Let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel; but let it be the . . . ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of GOD of great price."—1 Pet. 3: 3, 4.

Some men, and women too, consecrate about all but their mouth, and that they keep for tobacco, or spirituous liquor, or both. Some reserve their teeth to hold a pipe in, that they may burn incense to Baal, and fill their lungs full of the poisonous fumes from their pipely altar. Some keep from God their nasal organ, and use it to cap the climax of their pleasurable habits, by snuffingsnuff up into it, to stupefy themselves. Some reserve their stomach, to stuff full of rich viands, to make gluttons of themselves, which deadens the natural and healthful action of all the sensibilities, rendering them incapable of enjoying or doing much in God's service. Some allow all to become converted but their brain, and that they keep for their own use, to think and plan with—may be on Sunday, and in meeting, too—how they can cheat and deceive, so that it will not be called cheating. Some try to consecrate all but the tongue, and that is reserved to tell the black, white and gray lies, or to slander and backbite. Some consecrate most all but their eyes, and those are kept in reserve, to look lustfully or enviously at others. Many such, who profess godliness, and think it so wicked a thing that other professors dress gorgeously, would do the very same themselves if they had the means.

Some professors keep from God their farm, some their houses, some their produce, and not a few their money. They think the preacher ought to get along with less money. The rich man says that poor unfortunate brother, whose family is suffering in want, had as good a chance as he to get something laid up for a rainy day. You cannot get him to squeeze more than his regular dime into the contribution box; and if he has an odd piece that wont pass current easily, the contribution box affords a means of his showing his benevolence, by dropping the coin into it. Ask him for a dollar for some christian purpose, and he complains of "big taxes," "had sickness in the family," "have got a note to pay in a few days," "money is hard just now," "got to build in the spring," etc. If, perchance, he is constrained to give the dollar, he expects the whole region round about will hear of it, and think he is a "very benevolent citizen." Some men consecrate all but their horse and buggy, and that they keep going so much that there is no time left it for the Lord's use. This is lent to go to the theatre, or to the circus, or off to farmer Rich's evening party, or to the ball over here in Uncommonville. If a worthy brother wishes to use the team to attend meeting a few miles off, it is—"O, no,—well, my horse works hard now-a-days, and he wants shoeing, and the wagon tires are loose," etc. Some men consecrate some of the things they possess, and some all; and some none. Such men are but half converted.

Although wealth may be, and sometimes is, a blessing, yet it is most generally a curse, for "the rich fall into a snare," the Apostle says; for if one loves it more than he does Christ, he is snared already, and he is prepared only for the day of wrath; and wrath will be showered upon his head in the day when the rich shall flee into the dens of the earth, unless he turns from his "idols to serve the living and true God, and to wait for his Son from heaven." The rich are often the wicked, for it is hard to find God through wealth. Gold—even gold-leaf is thin—but they cannot see God through it. It forms a thick wall between them and God; but if its possessor has it consecrated to him, then it is God's, for he uses it in the cause of Christ, and he can come to God, although he possesses much.

Wealth is a curse when it leads to pride, and vanity, and show. Then it makes people think they are above their less wealthy neighbors. They strut along the streets as though there was nothing good enough for them to look at; and they crowd the poor up against the fence or off the walk into the street; they must have the most conspicuous seat in church, and will not sit with the poor widow who makes their clothes; they roll along in their splendid carriages, as if they governed the State; their sons can make disturbances in meetings, and the sexton must not notice it, because their father is a respectable and influential member of the church; but if those poor people's boys make the least noise,—put them out! out with them!

Many will be the rich men, when the Lord shall bow the heavens and come down in flaming fire, who will throw their gold and their silver to the moles and the bats, and will cry for the rocks and mountains to fall on them, and hide them from the face of Him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb. For so will it be "who layeth up treasure for himself, and is not rich toward God." S. D. B.

Consecration.

Accept, dear Lord, this heart of mine,
I give to thee my all;
Forever more I will be thine,
I now renounce the world.

Farewell, vain world, an exile now,
I leave dear friends and home;
A weary pilgrim round the earth,
A stranger here I'll roam.

The Groundwork.

By transgressing the law of God, the curse of God was incurred by the human family. That curse was the penalty for sin, contained in the Divine law, as given to man by Jehovah himself. Whatever that penalty may have been, without an equivalent rendered to the demand of the law, there could be no redemption from the curse of the law. That equivalent man could not render, otherwise man could have redeemed himself. The demand of the law was obedience; this, man failed to render, because of his inability. This inability lay, or rested, in his nature; hence "by the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified," and hence also help was to be laid upon one who was able, consequently, whose nature somehow in some respect differed from ours.

This help, the Scriptures inform us, was laid upon JESUS OF NAZARETH, THE CHRIST. But to be able to redeem, he must first acquire a legal ability; this he did by obedience to the law. Having then fulfilled the law, he was free from the law. Being then free from any legal demand on or against him, he was prepared for a mediatorship and also to begin the redemption of the human race from the curse or penalty of the law, under which they had all passed by transgression.

But in order to redeem, he must pay the price stipulated in the law, as the penalty affixed for its violation, otherwise there is no redemption. In other words, unless Christ suffered the same penalty that man by sin justly incurred, and that guilty man would have been eternally subject to without redemption; then, in that case, Christ has wrought no redemption. But he has wrought redemption for the race. Admitted. But did Christ ever suffer; or was he ever "spiritually dead," "morally dead," or "dead in trespasses and sins"? Denied by all. Then "spiritual or moral death," or "dead in trespasses and sins," constitutes no part nor parcel of the penalty of the law; else, in so far as either, any, or all of them constitute that penalty, man is not redeemed from them, inasmuch as Christ has never suffered any such penalty, or paid such redeeming price. But Christ has wrought redemption. True. But has Christ ever suffered eternal torment? Never. Then, eternal torment, or conscious misery in eternal hell-fire, is not the penalty or curse of God's transgressed law; else, Christ has wrought no redemption for man, inasmuch as he has never paid any such price to any such demand of any such law.

If then, the penalty of the law cannot be found in (so called) "spiritual death," "moral death," "dead in trespasses and sins," nor in "eternal torment," where can it be found? I answer, it may be found just where God himself placed it, and that was in literal death,—Gen. 2: 17, and the undeniable, incontrovertible fact of this being true is found first, in God's own explanation of what Gen. 2: 17 means, when he says, in Gen. 3: 17–19,—"Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, and hast eaten of the tree, of which I commanded thee, saying, Thou shalt not eat of it; cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life; thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee: and thou shalt eat the herb of the field; in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." If any further proof be required, showing that this was the penalty of the law, as announced in Gen. 2: 17,—"For in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die," it may be found in Christ's work of redemption, as clearly demonstrated as any problem in Euclid; not only once, but many times.

Let us see what Paul, by the Spirit, says on this subject, 1 Cor. 15: 3,—"For I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received (first of all), how that Christ DIED for (on account, in consequence of) our sins according to the Scriptures; and that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the Scriptures." 2 Cor. 5: 21,—"For he hath made him to be sin for (on account of) us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness (right doing) of God in (or by) him." Gal. 3: 10–13, "For as many as are of the works of the law, are under the curse. . . . But that no man is justified by the law in the sight of God, it is evident; for the just shall live by faith. And the law is not of faith; but the man that doeth them shall live in (or by) them. Christ hath redeemed us from the curse (or penalty) of the law, being made a curse (or penalty) for us (on account of us); for it is written, cursed is every one (or suffers the penalty does every one) that hangeth on a tree." This hanging on a tree is only a synonym for death by crucifixion, dying for our sins, etc.

Rom. 14: 9,—"For to this end Christ both died, and rose, and revived, that he might be Lord both of the dead and living." Rom. 6: 10,—"For in that he died, he died unto (on account of) sin once; but in that he liveth, he liveth unto God." Ver. 9,—"Knowing that Christ, being raised from the dead, dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him." Now there is no question raised as to what kind of death Jesus died. All admit that he died a literal death—the death of a "malefactor." "He was numbered with the transgressors," "cut off out of the land of the living," and "he made his grave with the wicked, and with the rich in his death."—Isa. 53. This being true, and admitted as such, it necessarily and unavoidably follows that literal death is the curse, or penalty of God's law to the wicked; because Christ, by suffering literal death on account of our sins, has by that means wrought redemption for us.

But some man will say that was only the death of the body; then it follows that only the body sinned; and the law requires "an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth." If, as that same man will say, it was my soul that sinned, then it was my soul that incurred the curse, and was to die, and necessarily involves the death of Christ's soul, in order to work redemption for my soul, as without an equivalent to the full satisfaction of the law, there is no redemption wrought, hence we find it written, Isa. 53: 10,—"When thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin"; or, as the margin reads, "when his soul shall make an offering for sin." 53: 12,—"He hath poured out his soul unto death." John 6: 51,—"The bread that I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world." 10: 11,—"I am the good shepherd: the good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep." 17th,—"Therefore doth my Father love me, because I lay down my life." 18th,—"No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. This commandment have I received of my Father." Lev. 17: 10,—"I have set my face against that soul that eateth blood, and will cut him off from among his people. For the life of the flesh is in the blood; and I have given it to you upon the altar, to make an atonement for your souls, for it is the blood that maketh an atonement for the soul." And why? Simply because man in failing to keep the law of God forfeited his life as a penalty to the divine law for its transgression; and when that forfeiture was demanded, man died and passed into the dominion of death, where he must have eternally remained, had not Christ kept the law, and voluntarily paid the same price demanded of the law, by sacrificing his own life, that he might go down into the dominion of death, and bring them out upon whom the sentence had been executed. Thus God is just and the justifier of them that believe.

Olena, Ohio. G. W. STETSON.

Call for Soldiers.

Now that the government, in which we have our pilgrimage, is calling for soldiers to defend their country and laws; it is a good time for the friends of Christ to show their loyalty. There is a chance to let the world see, by a PRACTICAL course of action, that what we have so often told of being "pilgrims and strangers," can be lived out, by faith in Jesus Christ. Soldiers are called to fight. Men are being enrolled as members of the government service, if needed. The question comes up with many a christian, what course shall I pursue? Shall I respond to the call of the roll? Shall I drill? Shall I go to war, if drafted? We have been so often inquired of as to what christian duty is, and what is most expedient, we wish to answer publicly.

First, christians do not properly belong to the governments of earth. They have pledged themselves to Christ's government.

Second, they cannot obey both; consequently, should live out the principles of the gospel, and should not respond to the call of governments to which they do not belong. If you take the first step, you should the second, or you meet the penalty of law, and it is better to stop before you start. "But we shall be fined." Well, do not pay a fine you do not owe. "Then they will put us in jail." Go to jail then, but go as christians, in meekness and in faith, not as traitors or rebels, or law-breakers, or wilful persons; but submit to "the powers that be," suffer for Christ's sake.

"But we need our time to earn support for ourselves and families." While in jail government must support you, and if there for Christ, God will see that your families are cared for, and the government will soon be glad to let you return home, rather than feed and clothe you, when they learn that it is for conscience' sake that you cannot fight, and that you are subject to the powers, and are not rebels. Thus you will preach Christ louder than ever before, as the Apostles and many of the early church did. This will cost a struggle, and the cross will be heavy; but God will give us grace to bear it.

The times are here when we must begin on this effort, or be carried down the whirlpool of war to destruction, with the nations of earth which God is about to drive out, to make place for the kingdom of his dear Son. We say nothing against the men of the world who enlist, nor the government which calls for its subjects to sustain its laws; neither would I refuse to pay tribute to the government to aid them in keeping order and peace; but I am talking to the members of Christ's government, what I believe Christ's constitution requires of them; that they may stand up for Jesus in these perilous times.

An Idle Word.—Matt. 12: 36.

It passed away, it passed away,
Thou canst not hear the sound to-day;
'Twas water lost upon the ground,
Or wind that vanisheth in sound;
O who shall gather it, or tell
How idly from the lip it fell?

'Tis written with an iron pen,
And thou shalt hear it yet again,
A solemn thing it then shall seem
To trifle with a holy theme.
O! let our lightest accents be
Uttered as for eternity.

Keep Cool.

By all means keep cool. It will be for your own success, the prosperity of the church, and the peace of the community. Experience has often proved it. We have no reason to fear, if we have the truth. Let the people know that they are to use their own judgments, then hold up the right way and let them choose. They will generally choose the best, if properly presented. "But he preaches different." Yes, we know it, but what of all that? "Why he must be stopped." But see here, brother; perhaps he is in the right, and you are in the wrong. Suppose he is wrong, and you right; it is best to keep cool. "But he does not believe in the Spirit." Well, tell him he can have all the comfort he can get from the word, and you will have the same, and the addition of the Holy Comforter. "But he will preach against the influence of the Spirit." Then certainly you can keep cool, for you have early prejudices in your favor, and the witness, which is better than man's testimony. "He preaches baptism too strong." Perhaps he does, but the duty of obedience had better be pressed a little, than a word dropped to lull men to sleep, and keep them in the sin of omission.

This matter may be carried to extremes; but we should consider that many have formerly been connected with other organizations, which may have stamped some of their features upon them. Perhaps they had better look again at their chart and compass, and see if all is right.

But we have two other classes of preachers. The first may be improved, and do much good, while the other is past reform. The first I compare to thunder and lightning. I know this is a singular expression, but let me explain. When it lightens very brightly, it always dazzles the eye, and produces partial blindness, then the thunder startles them. Now these men can see all things clearly themselves, think they must speak all things faithfully, must not round off the corners of the word, so they blaze away, forgetting that the wise man said, there is "a time to speak" and "a time to keep silence." Paul delivered the gospel privately to them which were of reputation; (Gal. 2: 2) while he fed others "with milk and not with meat," (1 Cor. 3: 2.) Then they throw so much light at first, it dims the sight; then they thunder at them for not seeing. No wonder congregations are not held but a few times, and the preacher left to preach to the walls. No wonder friends of truth fear that something will be said that will shut the eyes and ears to light.

These men make me think of a teacher coming into a dark room with a brilliant lamp, which is held to his scholar with the command to read, without giving him time to gain his sight. The scholar delays; then he thunders away at him because he does not see as quick as he did. When will men learn to be kind in their manners, and careful how they put forth the last dispensational truth? If done in the manner of the reckless when fishing, who slash their pole into the water with a bait much too large, they will be the means of causing many to go to perdition.

The second class is composed of men whose continual delight is to sow discord among brethren; get up neighborhood and church broils, ramble far and wide, sowing poison, death and destruction on all sides. Like the scape-goat, they should be marked, that no more should be deceived. May we keep in the love of God, and be preserved blameless until the coming of the Lord, is the prayer of your Bro.,

Trial Precious.

"Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you."

How affectionately the apostle addresses the tried church; not the slightest impatience manifest, but the utmost tenderness and sympathy during their trials. In the chapter but one previous, he considers the great heaviness and depression of spirit these trials occasion, and administers comfort by telling them trials will prove precious by their purifying and refining effect, which will be evident not only here but at the appearing of Jesus. I was led to appreciate more fully this Christ-like spirit a few days since by a circumstance (not at all uncommon) coming under notice. One professing the spirit of Jesus, was enumerating the faults of a brother. A sister present remarks, "O! poor Bro. S. has been passing through severe trials of late, I think we ought to exercise all the faith in prayer we can, that the enemy's power may be broken, and that the trial may be unto the praise of God finally. The former very heartlessly remarked, "Trials? he's always in trial. If he enjoyed more religion, he might not have as many trials."

As I looked at her, I thought, if you enjoyed more pure religion, there might not exist this lack of sympathy; you might possess more of the spirit Jesus manifested, as he beheld the Jews, that rebellious nation, and exclaimed as he wept—"If thou hadst known, .... the things which belong to thy peace!" O Spirit of my Master! I revere thee. Almighty Father! fill thy people with this spirit, that they be instrumental in showing some what belongs to their peace before it is hidden from them.

I cannot understand why love and sympathy do not voluntarily flow from the heart of a christian, one who cannot be ignorant of Satan's devices, one who knows the coldness and wickedness all have to contend against in order to be christians. To the tried pilgrim I would use the apostle's language, "Beloved." Perhaps the term was only meant to express this love for them, but it expresses a much more exalted love. The Father loves, Jesus loves, all the good love. I repeat it—Beloved, (by so many,) think it "not strange" concerning your "fiery" trials; only remember in the midst of them you are still beloved; only recognize the hand of a kind Father beneath every chastening stroke, and, though the chastening may not seem pleasant, it will lose a vast amount of unpleasantness in the recognition.

We cannot think it "strange" concerning our trials if we consider how long the warfare we are engaged in has existed, and that the scene of conflict is about closing. It is not strange the enemy now arrays his strongest forces. He knows his time is short. He is constantly on the watch. Shall we be less so? As with the enemy, so with us; if we are conquered now, we are liable to eternal loss. Victories achieved now will tell in the coming kingdom. Shall not the language of our hearts be—"Henceforth it matters not whether storm or sunshine be my earthly lot, I only pray God make me holy, and nerve my spirit for the stern hour of strife?" I pray that we may prove ourselves faithful soldiers of the cross, and endure all things soldier-like, as seeing that which is seen only by an eye of faith.

Affectionately yours in the gospel,

"Be of good cheer."

Thus spake the beloved Jesus to his faithful followers, who, on intimation of his death, were filled with sorrow. He sees the deep afflictions through which they were to pass by his being taken from them, and kindly says, as a faithful monitor, "Ye shall weep and lament, but the world shall rejoice, . . . and ye shall be sorrowful, but your sorrow shall be turned into joy." None could appreciate these sayings save those who loved him. He had borne their afflictions, he had fed them when famishing, he had healed their sick, yea more, had raised their dead to life; and as they had read in their law how Christ "abideth forever," well might they suppose that there would be no more sorrow for them. Healing their sick, raising their dead, had filled them with joy, but, alas! the glowing light of that memorable day of his ministration, as the son of Mary, was soon to go out,—the shades of evening were lengthening, and gloomy night was about to shroud in darkness that land where shepherds had adored, and priest and people had rejected him.

While the bridegroom was with them they might not fast, but he is to be taken away from them. "A little while and ye shall not see me" had filled them with anguish,—the bitter words had been spoken, and sorrow filled their hearts. Where now is the consolation for the heart-stricken bride? Can it be in the pomp and splendor in that land cursed by her heavenly Father because of sin? Can it be among that people who with one accord said, "Away with him"? Will splendid mansion or costly attire give comfort then? Will riches or honor satisfy or make her happy now? "Ye shall be sorrowful, but your sorrow shall be turned into joy." Well did the bridegroom know the only consolation when he had uttered such words of sorrow; and while the tears were yet falling and their hearts throbbing with grief, touched with their sadness the beloved Jesus opens his heart to the sorrowing bride, and in words sweeter than the waters of Autumn, or the odor of vines with their tender grapes, says, "But I will see you again."

But such words, under such circumstances must oft be repeated to those who love, and then consolation only comes in part; "again a little while, and ye shall see me." "Let not your heart be troubled. . . . I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also." Even after he goes away his attendants return to give them still further assurance. "This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Is it any wonder that the bride should ask, "What shall be the sign of thy coming?" And when she is assured from these signs that he will come quickly, is it strange that she should say, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus," "come quickly"?

And yet the world rejoice. The father, the son, the mother, or wife, or husband, that falls in love with this Jesus so as to love his appearing, knows well how truthful the saying, "In the world ye shall have tribulation." But, says the Master, "Be of good cheer, for I have overcome the world," and we can get the good cheer if we like him overcome.

Down-trodden, lonely, tried and tempted ones, the muttering thunders will not be long. Old earth is reeling to her fall. Tyranny and oppression will soon be past, and ungodly preachers will no longer [illegible] or entice our sons to go into the bloody fight, and thereby jeopardize their present as well as their future life, and our own happiness besides. Never, thank God. No wonder they put far off that day. No wonder they oppose those that are looking for and loving his appearing. They virtually say, "We have no king but Cæsar."

They may cast you out, but their doom is written. Isa. 66: 5,—"Hear the word of the Lord, ye that tremble at his word; your brethren that hated you, that cast you out for my name's sake, said, Let the Lord be glorified; but he shall appear to your joy, and they shall be ashamed." "Ye now therefore have sorrow; but I will see you again, and your heart shall rejoice, and your joy no man taketh from you." "Be of good cheer."

"Christian, cheer thee, land is nearing,
Still be hopeful, nothing fearing,
Soon in majesty appearing,
You'll behold the Lamb once slain.
O! how joyful then to hear him,
While all nations shall revere him,
Saying to his flock who fear him,
'I have come on earth to reign.'"

Maine State Mission.

Since my last I have visited the towns of Belgrade, Rome, Starks, Wayne, Livermore, Hollis, Lyman, Kennebunk, Richmond, Litchfield, Gardner, Sidney, etc., etc. My labors, constant as in the winter, I find wear upon me in this warm season; yet my health, strength and spirits are good. The Lord be praised. In Belgrade, I preached at Rockwell's Corner,—attending one Quarterly Conference held at that place, of which a report has been given by another; and at the Depot, Belgrade Hill, and Belgrade Mills. The people on the Hill are hospitable, kind, and generous, and I think favorable to the truth we preach. I was kindly entertained by them. It was in this place I attended a funeral last winter which I noticed at the time, and the people were ready to welcome my return among them. The Friends or Quakers showed us no little kindness, and I tarried most of my time under the hospitable roof of Mr. Lombard, and by request took tea with Eld. Taylor, an Elder among the Friends. I visited the district generally, and found most ready to converse upon the subject of religion. Some were cold and distant, and some were enemies to us and our faith. I think a Quarterly Conf. would do good on Belgrade Hill, and that the people would be glad to have one held among them. Mr. Eldridge could be consulted, a citizen of the town.

In Rome, I preached in Mr. Fifield's neighborhood and at the Town-House. The people came out generally in the former place, though a threatened storm gathered and broke upon us while at service, and continued afterward. Our meeting was solemn and profitable. Eld. Howard has lately moved to Rome and has charge of the church in this region, and has enlarged his field of usefulness by the change in his location. He also preaches in Starks a part of the time. My visit in Starks was exceedingly interesting to me. I was happy to see the friends there who had so recently embraced our faith and hope, and who were so steadfast. There are several good and substantial brethren and sisters in Starks who mean to gain the kingdom. Satan rages there, and cold-hearted professors of religion oppose; but the Lord reigns, and victory will yet come to all his people.

At Livermore I preached two evenings; and dined with Bro. Haggett's family upon the summit of Bear's Mountain, the place of his residence. This visit, in so novel a place, and where like Moses upon Pisgah's summit I could almost see the "Sweet fields beyond the swelling flood,"

was one of much profit to me. I prayed alone, and wrestled with the Lord, to finally take me over into the goodly land, of which I felt the earnest. I also had a blessed season of prayer with Eld. Haggett's family before leaving. I regretted not seeing my brother in the ministry in this his romantic, retired, and heaven-elevated home, above a low and sordid world. May we meet on "the sun-lit hills of Zion," when God shall "renew the face of the earth."

By earnest solicitation, and a standing request for months, to which I had given promise, I gave appointment for Wayne Village in the Free-will-Baptist church the second Sabbath after our Quarterly Conference at Belgrade. It will be remembered that this was the place referred us last winter, when request was made for the house by Mr. Sawyer, a member of the church and their Sabbath School superintendent, who was my friend, but knew but little of our faith and hope. When the refusal of the trustees of the church became known, some of the pew-holders rebelled, and were determined that I should have the privilege of preaching my faith in the house. They awaited patiently the day of my appointment, and when they had the news of the date, an individual of influence in town, and who gave the church the pulpit, a pew-holder, etc., and yet no believer in our faith, went to the pastor, giving him notice that Eld. Fassett would preach in the chapel the next Lord's day, and requested him to notify the congregation, which was done. Though the pastor of the church was absent on the day of my appointment, there was no rebellion manifest on the occasion. The choir were in their accustomed places, with representatives of others in town, who performed their duty in the worship creditably, and apparently (some of them) in the spirit of true worship. The members of the church were in their pews; and large additions from other denominations, and citizens generally from a region of five and ten miles, made up our congregation.

Thus against Satan's device in closing the door against the Advent doctrine for more than a year in the village of Wayne, where brethren have been desirous to enter, the Lord has now thrown open a wide and effectual door to His truth. The people are now desirous to hear more concerning the things of the Kingdom of God. A dozen lectures or discourses would be heard and do good in that town.

The storm prevented my doing much at Hollis. The brethren are steadfast. Found my surgical knowledge some advantage while here. Bro. Clark's father fell beneath a cart-wheel, fracturing some four ribs. Though I did not see him till the next day, and after two physicians had [illegible] set his bones and bandaged the old gentleman, leaving him more comfortable though dangerously ill. In Kennebunkport I preached for Bro. Mitchell on Sabbath, July 6th, the warmest day of the season. I found his congregation doing well; Sabbath School prosperous, numbering some sixty scholars. Bro. M. is pastor of the church, leader of Bible class, S. S. superintendent, etc., etc.,—a worker indeed in the Lord's vineyard. I found his mother better, and patient in hope. Capt. Elisha Mitchell, who has long been afflicted with sore eyes, has now lost his sight irrecoverably, but waits the advent of his Lord and Redeemer, when he shall "see him as he is."

Thursday eve, July 10th, I preached in the Methodist chapel, near to Morrison, where I had made promise to leave an appointment last winter by request. Notice was given on Sabbath, and at sun-down on this evening I had a large audience for this season of the year to hear me. A solemn meeting—left a good impression upon the minds of the people. An appointment for a Sabbath would be acceptable to the people here.

At Richmond and Litchfield our audiences were good, and we had an attentive hearing. In the parts of West Gardner I visited, the people were ready to welcome the word of life among them. The school-house near Bro. Smith's I found decorated with green branches, and the table wreathed with leaves, and a beautiful boquet in the centre, and the school-house neatly cleaned for the occasion of our meeting. The young people were in attendance generally, and listened to the invitations of love and mercy from above. I visited the neighborhood, circulating tracts and conversing with the people as I had time. They are anxious for my return among them.

At West Gardner proper, where Bro. Shelburne Smith resides, I held a meeting in the Academy, and the citizens generally attended and listened with earnestness to the signs of the times. The door is open for the preaching of the truth in all this region.

Truly, everywhere the harvest is great and the laborers are few. Now is the heat of the season, and after the fatigues of the day the people are ready to hear on the subjects pertaining to our hope, and will often go miles to listen to the truth. This is the Lord's doing, and it is marvelous in our eyes. May the Lord give the famishing people the "bread of life." O Lord! here am I; still send me to feed the flock of God, and save my perishing fellow men from death. O. R. Fassett.

Fourth of July Celebration.

Dear Bro. Grant:—I celebrated the fourth of July at West Lovell, in company with Bro. A. A. C. Abbott, of Hartford. We had a good meeting. Six happy souls were baptized. I attended a meeting at the same place one year ago, on the 4th, in company with Bro. Wellcome, when we baptized five happy converts, whom we found steadfast in the faith of the gospel, after the lapse of a year. Most of them are young; yet possessing more gospel truth than many of riper years. They are intelligent believers, and active members of the body of Christ. The good seed was sown there, and in East Stoneham, by Brn. I. K. Lombard, and I. C. Wellcome; and has lodged in some good and honest hearts, which we hope will bring forth fruit unto life eternal. We spent the next Sunday with the brethren at East Stoneham, and had an interesting day with them. Some of them are doing well, and seem to be striving for the coming kingdom. They are doing something for the spread of the truth, and are looking for the Lord's soon coming to give his people eternal life. They have established a Sabbath School, and occupy the house half the time for meetings of worship. They need, and much desire, the labors of faithful gospel ministers, who can give the message of the coming kingdom. E. M. Haggett.

Ordination.

On Sunday, July 20th, we attended a meeting in Hartford, Me., to preach the message of the coming kingdom of Christ; and to assist in ordaining Bro. A. A. C. Abbott, who has been preaching the good news in that section, in connection with Brn. Haggett and Hanscomb, to good acceptance. He bids fair to be an auxiliary in the work, and a blessing to the cause, with the Lord's help. The attendance was very large, and generally they were attentive hearers of the word. Bro. Howard and myself gave them three discourses. Bro. Abbott was set apart at the close of the P. M. discourse. Prayer by Eld. L. L. Howard; charge by the writer; right hand of fellowship by Eld. E. M. Haggett. We felt that it was good to be the servants of the Lord in these evil times, and to be out in the highways and hedges with enlisting orders, to muster soldiers into the service of Christ. It was a good time, as the blessing of God was with us.

I. C. Wellcome.

The Future of Spiritualism.

We often hear the remark, "Spiritualism is dying out." Whenever we hear one make such a statement, we are led to think at once, did you know what it is doing, you would take back that saying, and stand aghast at its gigantic strides. He might as well have said, Popery was dying out in the thirteenth century, because very little noise was made about it. The reason was, there were scarcely any left to oppose, hence all was comparatively quiet. Spiritualism has already planted its sentiments so firmly, and generally, in church and state, that the victory is nearly complete. The opposition is now very feeble, like that of a dying man, in his last moments.

We do not say that the great body of church and state are yet avowed Spiritualists; but that the sentiments of Spiritualists, more or less, are being adopted by the masses. As poison, from the bite of the rattlesnake, taken into the smallest vein soon affects the whole system, causing subsequent death; so is Spiritualism poisoning the whole world. Like drugged liquors, the doctrines may exhilarate at first, but delirium and death are sure to follow.

But we are to speak of its future. Its past and present are partially known to the world, while its future history is yet unwritten, except on the prophetic page of inspiration. It is a well known fact that false systems of religion, existing in the past, have sought political power. The Pagan, Mohammedan, Catholic, and some others, have succeeded more or less. We have now arrived at a period in the world's history when we may expect the last development of Satanic power, for the purpose of overthrowing the doctrine of Christ and the apostles, and establishing the great lie to man in Eden, that he is now immortal, and hence cannot die. In order to make this fable triumphant, it needs to be woven into politics among Protestants, as it has been by Pagans and Catholics. In the new system of government, about to arise, the doctrine of the immortality of the soul is denominated the first of the eternal principles,—the foundation stone.

The Spiritualists, by the advice of the spirits of demons, now begin to talk freely about "organization." The following extracts from an article in the Banner of Light, July 19th, 1862, headed, "Principles of organization," will give a glimpse of coming events. Referring to a previous article the writer says:—

"I have heretofore shown, at considerable length, the method by which the two essential, yet opposite principles of the sovereignty of the individual on the one hand, and of implicit obedience to the commands of a chief on the other, can be harmoniously balanced and adjusted in practical organization or government."

The government proposed is called, "new system," composed of two elements combined,—Monarchy and Republicanism. This explains the sentence just quoted.

The writer next goes on to speak of the different departments of the new government, as follows:—

"The Legislature will consist, therefore, of the entire body of Scientists, or Thinkers, denizens of the so-called scientific world, who may choose to organize or embody themselves in the new order, for the purpose of furnishing to the world at large the rational law of deportment or conduct in every field of human activity, without constraint or the arbitrary enforcement of their decrees. While this Legislative body will not arbitrarily enact laws, it not only promulgates laws, but announces penalties by virtue of the power which it has of prevision, or the fore-knowledge of the consequences which must, by scientific or logical necessity, result from one or another mode of procedure. It differs from the law-making power of the old-style arbitrary governments precisely as modern physiology in discovering and announcing the laws of life and health, leaving individuals free to apply them (or not to apply them) for their own benefit, differs from the usage of the ancient Egyptian priesthood, who arbitrarily, and without the aid of science even, prescribed what each caste or class of persons in the community should be permitted to eat and drink.

The executive department of a State resulting from the scientific harmonization of the two opposite principles, the divergent individuality of isolated or separate personal freedom, and the convergent individuality which centers upon a chief, or head, voluntarily, for the purpose of securing greater good, will have for its office to devise, to organize, and to conduct those institutions, or instituted forms of the collective life of man, which shall best embody, express, and represent the laws of life promulgated by the legislature, and best subserve the collective wants of all individuals in all spheres; not again, as arbitrary forms to be imposed upon any one, but as simple means of accommodation to all.

This executive department is the temporal as distinguished from the Spiritual government. It superintends the industrial the commercial and the financial relations of mankind. . . . The true temporal governors will achieve for themselves positions of great eminence, as a body, in just subordination to that individual, who, by virtue of his organization, training and great capacity to serve in such position, shall be recognized as the supreme leader, or thinking head of the world so far as relates to temporal affairs. . . . The judicial department of the New State will consist as now, of the courts of judicature, which will be organized for the decision, as umpires, of all vexed questions in practical life, in accordance with the laws promulgated by the legislature, that is to say, in accordance with natural right.

The State, by virtue of its legislative function as the discoverer, interpreter, and promulgator of intellectual laws or truths, is not only the civic government of the world at large, but is the governor, in respect to such truths, of the church as well, while the church is, in turn, represented in the State, by the Theological Bishops and Clergy. . . .

The executive of the State is, however, represented in the Deaconarchy of the church, a body of practical and executive men, who devote themselves to the administration of the temporalities of that body. The church and the state thus interlock with and embrace each other. . . .

The Legislative body must interpret for the church the symbolical significance and the profound scientific correspondences of the dogmas and rites which she has instinctively adopted, and hitherto mystically held and taught; must translate her intuitional aspirations and obscure faith into the language of pure reason; must learn of her to feel experimentally the substance of which science thus supplies the form; and so act as temporal guardian and instructor, without damage, still, to the spirituality or the devotion of the church.

The head of the New State, representing the monarchical principle, or individuality of lead, is the individual, self-elected but powerless except as he is voluntarily acknowledged and obeyed, who is most conscious of power to devise, constitute, and direct a just, harmonious, and triumphant social organization, adapted to the wants of all mankind—power to lead in—through science, and the revival of faith, and the co-operation of the spirit world, and the divine guidance back of all—the period of the reconciliation of all conflicts; the harmonial or millennial age; the golden age of the future. . . .

Justified, therefore, by science, the court of the New State will ultimately exceed in magnificence all the royal splendors of the past. All the refinements of nature and science and art and religion, will be cultured there, and go forth, as from a spiritual focus, radiating gracefulness, and beauty, and charm, to the remotest portions of the earth. . . .

The theatre vieing with the church and the church with the theatre, in the purity and the elevation of their influences; these and other similar thoughts inspire the design of a pantarchal and paternal government; a spiritual co-ordination of the whole human family in accordance with harmonic laws, rising in the midst of and above all national and sectarian differences, and commanding, by its own superior tendencies, the veneration, the acceptance, and, finally the allegiance of all.

To conduct the world to such a result must obviously demand the services of the highest order of socialogical talent, aided by new discovery and the co-operative sympathy of great numbers. The democratic idea alone is not equal to the task. . . .

The head of the New State will be, therefore, the most dependent of men. He is monarch only by virtue of his daily and hourly re-election by the people, in consideration of the continuation of popular benefits which he, in a higher degree than other men, is able, by their co-operation, to confer. The doctrine of checks and balances in government is here, therefore, carried to its highest perfection; absolute democracy and a beneficent despotism co-working harmoniously with each other, supplying the benefits and neutralizing the evils of each; the tormenting problem of human government scientifically solved. . . .

It should, therefore, be well understood, that the New State will not place itself in hostile attitude to any of the existing governments of the earth. It will tender its services as the friend and counsellor and helper, as well of the governments as of the people, aided in its counsel by the newly discovered science of universology, and all the influences at his command. It will become, by voluntary selection, the umpire between kings, emperors, and republics, and between rulers and their revolting subjects, and so will supply that great international tribunal of which there is a felt and growing want in the world, and for which a Congress of Nations has been suggested. . . .

The New State will, therefore, send ambassadors to every court, to explain the nature of its own constitution and purposes, to satisfy the governments of its peaceable and co-operative intentions; to commend to them a study of its principles of government; to tender its mediatorial services; to negotiate for a unitary system of weights and measures, coinage, finance, &c., and for the introduction of science, and a unitary policy for the race in all practicable ways, to take the place of arbitrary regulations and narrow and restrictive systems of legislation now and heretofore prevalent among them.

Among the less immediate and more permanent functions of the new government will be to maintain the true teachers and pioneers of the progress of the race, while at their work, in the place of maintaining an army of useless politicians and sinecure place men in church and state, and elsewhere. . . . Beginning with the world lying in poverty, oppression and wretchedness, the New State will be able through new science, the science of organization, aided by all benign spiritual revelations and influx, to conduct society to its true harmonial destiny on earth; . . . until all human affairs shall be radiant with a true millennial glory."

A few points in the foregoing should not be passed over in silence. The Legislature of this "New Order" are to furnish to the world at large the rational law of deportment or conduct," which is one without "arbitrary enforcement."

"The Executive Department" also is to have no "arbitrary forms to be imposed upon any one, but as simple means of accommodation to all." In short, as expressed by the spirits, each one is his own lawgiver and judge. This sentiment is embodied in defining the powers of "the Judicial department" by the words "natural right," as explained by the Legislature.

It will be seen the State is to be "the governor . . . of the church," thus establishing a union of church and state, or making an image to the leopard beast of Rev. 13. To use their language,—"The church and the State thus interlock with and embrace each other." "The Legislative body must interpret for the church the symbolical significance, and the profound scientific correspondences of the Dogmas and Rites" which she has held, and "translate . . . her obscure faith into the language of pure reason." This last is one of the great principles that the demons taught to Swedenborg, by means of which he turned almost the whole Bible into fables, and overthrew the faith of many. Observe, this whole system is to be conducted by "the co-operation of the Spirit World."

"The head of the New State," in this world, is a "Monarch," we are told, who "shall be recognized as the Supreme Leader, or Thinking Head, of the World, so far as relates to temporal affairs." It follows from what has been said, that he must be a Spiritualist. We shall leave the reader to select this person of "wonder," and "count the number of the . . . man."—o.

"Watch and flight and slay."

The war clouds hanging over our country look more terrible than ever, and threaten a heavier storm than we have yet experienced. Says the Boston Journal of July 23d, "It is impossible to note the military signs and wants of the day without feeling that this is the critical stage of the war." When speaking of our army, it says, "We are terribly short-handed, and the occasion is critical. But there is no sense in giving away to despondency." Those who have expected a clear political sky before this time, resulting from an end of the rebellion, now confess that the future looks very dark. There seems to be as much trouble among the wheels of our nation, as among those of Pharaoh's chariots when crossing the Red Sea. They drag heavily. There is some hindering power. But few see the cause, and they hardly dare venture to tell the whole truth. The time seems to have fully come to wind up the wicked governments of earth, and establish the everlasting kingdom of God, for which the saints have been wearily waiting, while centuries have moved their slow rounds. As we are now evidently on the crumbling verge of the christian dispensation, when, in the language of the prophet, it may be said of the inhabitants of this world, "their wickedness is great," then it follows that it is too late to undertake to hold up what the Lord has decided to throw down. The following from Isaiah seems to have a fit application to our time:—"Come near, ye nations, to hear; and hearken, ye people; let the earth hear, and all that is therein; the world, and all things that come forth of it; for the indignation of the Lord is upon all nations, and his fury upon all their armies; he hath utterly delivered them to the slaughter."

When speaking of the war, and the manner of conducting it in the future, the New York World says:—

"Heretofore our object has been—Heaven only knows what. Henceforth it must be success. We must employ whatever man or means will assist us in attaining it—negroes, Jim Lane, Jennison, and all. We must meet cavalry with cavalry, raid with raid, black man with black man, little army with big army, big with bigger. We must watch and fight and slay."

The advice to christians from their instructor is quite different:—"The end of all things is at hand; be ye therefore sober, and watch unto prayer."

While others "watch, and fight and slay,"
Let christian men all watch and pray.

It seems as though our nation had forgotten the great Ruler of the universe, and was trusting alone in the strength of the human arm. Instead of humiliation and prayer, we behold an increase of wicked boasting. The government has evidently forgotten that "Pride goeth before destruction, and an haughty spirit before a fall." It is apparent that the Lord will no longer bear with this highly favored, but proud, slave-holding nation. "Mene, mene, tekel, upharsin," is upon its banners, and will soon blaze forth to spread a deep alarm to all but the children of the King of kings, whose second visit to our planet is close at hand. —o.

Well Said.

Bro. C. H. Cotton, New Boston, Mass., when urging us to attend a meeting in his neighborhood, says:—

"While our neighbors are spending their time and money to procure volunteers to imbrue their hands in the blood of their brothers, we would do something to procure volunteers in Jesus' army."

The foregoing sounds like christianity; but, alas! how little of its spirit do we see manifested at the present day. The wickedness and infidelity of these days are truly awful; and they are still increasing, and marching forward with a bolder front. Christians, be firm. The Lord is at hand. —o.

Thanks for the Aurora Beacon, containing articles from "Gleaner," on the question, "Will the material body rise again?"

For the Crisis.

Notes by the Way.

After spending the winter in cities and villages, and having many good times with the brethren, and rejoicing with converts, I felt anxious to visit the mountain flocks of Vt. again; for "variety is the spice of life." The first flock was at Vernon. Found my appointment was out at 5 o'clock. The brethren left their work and came out to meeting. Found Bro. G. Champlin there. He had been feeding this flock a few weeks. We had a good time together. Next day called on George and Hannah, on my way to Keene. Caught George a fine mess of trout before he got home from work at noon. He is yet at work with his hands, that he may not be burdensome to the flock.

In Keene, N. H., found the few in trial on account of the unwillingness of the people to hear the truth, and some that had heard and believed dared not speak or come out and show their colors. This threw all the burden on a few, and they gave up their hall for the present; but we had a meeting at Bro. Hall's house, and a very good time. Some were convinced of sin and wept,—others of the truth we presented. Stayed with Bro. Walker's family. A good home for a pilgrim.

At Springfield, Vt., found that most of the flock were dissatisfied with the former administration, and had built a new chapel in two weeks. Got it ready for me to dedicate, although not quite finished. There was a general turnout. The sheep flocked together from all around, some ten, fifteen, twenty, and twenty-five miles to attend this meeting. I had good help—three preaching brethren, Cook, Kimball, and Gibson. We had an old fashioned, good salvation time all day. The flock seemed to eat, and lots were left.

At Dinsmore Hill had a meeting at ten and one o'clock. The people here had been so nearly winter-killed, they left their work this busy time of year, and attended meeting all day, coming from eight to sixteen miles. This looks like holding on to God's truth. Here we had a good time. One man broke down—got up and said he was a sinner and wanted prayers, which was attended to on the spot, and God pardoned him. He came out clear. This fed the flock. We had a good atmosphere, temporally and spiritually. The hills were so steep and high we had to go up hill on foot, and feared to ride down; but we were in Vt., among good friends and good air. I thought I would like to have some of our city people out here and enjoy the good breezes from these mountains, and ride up these hills in a cart instead of horse-cars. I think their dinners would be acceptable at twelve o'clock.

At Rutland found Bro. Batchelor at the depot waiting for me. He is the same old friend as in '43, and his house a pilgrim's home. The church have their trials in common with all others in these days of perils; but some good and faithful souls are left, still looking for those things that are coming on the earth. Some of them have got one thousand years ahead or behind the rest, which always roils up the water if kept stirring, but I think if let alone will settle again.

At Castleton found Bro. Sherman's house my home. It was lonely without Sister Sherman, who was gone for her health. Bro. Taylor was visiting, and Doct. Smith off setting teeth; but as I expected a variety when I started, I got over it after retiring to the "prophet's chamber" in Bro. Sherman's house. Here I found a church with a good foundation to stand upon, i. e., a principle to endure something for their faith, and go to all the meetings and take hold and say and do something. They are well broken—for three year olds—to the yoke of Christ. I had an easy time preaching to them—after Bro. Sherman told me at the table while eating sweet cake they expected "hash" from me—which I took as a liberty to give them a variety the last Sabbath, which some thought was too hot of pepper, especially the immortal-soulists and rappers; as one said, "It was good, but very peppery for some present." I suppose there always will be some that eat their food without either salt or pepper, and such will find fault with a sensation created in their stomach at good seasoned food, as some did in the evening at Hydeville, where we held our last meeting; but Abraham's seed liked it well seasoned, and those I went to feed.

In Poultney found a church built upon a rock in every sense of the word. It is built of rocks cemented together and set on a solid rock, and brethren are united in the doctrine of Christ's second coming and its attendant doctrines, which puts them on "The Rock," and these times of shaking of nations do not move their hope in the least. They, like the Castleton church, overlook all these incidental family differences that will appear, as not worth contention in these times of perils. I had a good time with them preaching,—a large meeting and good attention; but few of the rebel pickets appeared on Sunday, and one of our pickets took the wind out of his sails, and he left to talk with the spirits more congenial to his faith than these union soldiers had.

In Sandy Hill found Bro. Austin at the depot. He took me to Eld. Parry's house, where I found a pilgrim's home indeed. The loss of their daughter was a heavy stroke of affliction to them all, especially to Bro. Austin. Here I found Bro. Mathewson and wife, which made me think of the good old days of Adam and Eve, when we talked over about old '43 times. I find but few of these old Revolutionary soldiers left, and when I do we enjoy talking about our old battles. Bro. Mathewson commenced a siege operation three years ago, and kept steady at his work; the result of which has opened the eyes of many to see the difference between an adopted belief and an investigated belief, and all but a few have had the moral courage to take a stand on the truth and hold it. I found a good church there able to defend their position. I had a good time in their fort using my old shot gun. Some thought I hit the mark every time; at any rate, the gun did not kick, nor the shot bound back, as it did in some other places.

In Hebron, twenty-seven miles over a mountain,—rode with Bro. Parry. Found them in a low state—few holding on amid the confused elements that surround them, and the different message peddlers that float in where there is a door not shut so close that it cannot be kicked open. Some preach all water and no fire; others all word and no spirit; others all the promises one thousand years ahead. I thought this was like all dough and no salt; but as I had come, there was no other way than to form into line for a battle, and no one to depend upon but Bro. Parry to cover my retreat, if I got defeated. One Bro. told me that many generally left at noon, and I should have a smaller congregation in the afternoon. My arrangements for this siege were, first, Paul's Parrott gun, which went the first soap. The bomb burst in the right place. It was evident some got hit. After forty minutes for breath and refreshments, seeing the congregation had increased instead of leaving as was anticipated, this seemed to call for Peter's big bore mortar that would stand any load of canister shot. This turned the victory in our favor. There was such an interest to hear in the evening, I consented to speak at 7 o'clock. The Lord's dagger, found in Matt. 16:4, and Paul's columbiads loaded with grape, found in 2 Tim. 3, finished up the work for the day. One man said, after the last meeting, he would pay $10 to have the meeting continue through the week. Such things ought to be thought of before the meeting is out. On returning to my boarding place to get my usual half pint of milk, on finding over two barrels of good new milk in one cistern, almost discouraged me from taking any; but having eaten little through the day I was faint and took it, and seeing the ocean left, reminded me of the fulness of the gospel, and how little I had dipped out of the great fountain during the day.

Next morning started for Addison, Vt.; got within a few rods of the depot, and that great iron horse commenced snorting, and I commenced running, and the people all looking. It was a tight pull for twenty rods, but his lungs were the strongest, and I caved in, and felt—you know how. Now to wait seven hours, or to go up a steep hill over a mile, was the subject for debate. Decided on the latter, and I am here, with nothing to do but to write this item. I expected a variety when I started, and I am getting it.

At 2 o'clock I got into the express train and reached my appointment at Addison. Found Bro. Morgan and wife. Had a good time with Bro. D. T. Ross' church. One young woman gave good evidence of conversion. The fourth eve had a good time in a pleasant locality of the best land in Vt., on the east side of Lake Champlain. On Saturday started for my next appointment at Hoosic Falls, one hundred and twenty miles. Here I knew not a soul. This is the first place where all were strangers; but I found a good consistent church. Had a large gathering and a good time preaching to them on Sunday. They put a high estimate on the preaching, double that I ever got before for one Sunday's preaching. I feel very grateful to them, for I needed it at that time.

Started Monday morning for home; was jerked along in a freight train to Pittsfield; waited four hours for the Albany train; got into Springfield after our last train had left; had to foot it five miles—got about half a mile, when a thunder shower overtook me and lasted till midnight. I traveled four and a half miles in the hardest rain I was ever out in,—some of the time in the ditch full of water and mud, rain pouring in torrents. No house near except two small ones where colored people lived, and they were all in bed. When I got out of the road I had to wait for a flash of lightning to see it again. I expected a variety, but this last extra touch was a little too much. Tired out, wet and faint, I got home late. After rapping several times, my family let me in, by making myself known. I was received, badly as I looked.

I am now at home after an absence of forty-two days. Have traveled five hundred miles by land, one hundred in open wagons, twenty on foot in the brush fishing, preached fifty-four sermons, caught any quantity of fish and some men, drafted two water-wheels, planned one dam, fixed one mill, hoed one garden, and mowed some grass. Am in a good condition for an old man who has eaten meat of all kinds we salted for over fifty years, and hasn't been to Dansville to soak out the salt nor to take out the scrofula, for I never had it. I am now preparing to cut hay to keep a cow next winter, and then will try to fill other appointments so long waited for. [illegible]

Correspondence.

From L. P. Hastings.

Dear Brn. and Srs. :—I am a lone pilgrim, with you looking forward to the time when the pilgrim's journeyings will end, and eternal rest be enjoyed by all who have kept their eye fixed on the mark, continually pressing forward for the prize. It is not a phantom that we have been following. All things attest the truth of the near approach of the time when earth's kingdoms shall be broken in pieces and become "like the chaff of the summer threshing floors; when the God of heaven (shall) set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed," but "shall stand forever."

We see the nations angry. Soon the wrath of God will be poured out, and then the "time of the dead that they should be judged,"—and what next? Reward shall be given to whom? "Thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great."

"There the loved of earth shall meet,
Whom death has sundered here."

O! will not eternity be long enough to enjoy the society of the loved and lost? Here our friends waste away by disease, and no power of ours can stay its progress; but there the beauty and vigor of youth shall never fade, the lustre of the eye shall never grow dim, nor the ear dull. Here, many of us toil and labor until frail nature sinks under the burden of cares that crowd upon us day after day and year after year, and we almost feel life itself to be a burden; but there, what delight in employment, and with what ease will it be performed! and so peaceful and harmonious will the days and years glide away, that length of time will not be realized, much less its end ever be desired. The blighting curse that now seems to be devouring the earth will be gone forever. The horrors and devastations of war, such as now hang like the pall of death over a great portion of this country of boasted peace and freedom, will have forever passed away. The "Prince of Peace" is the title given to the rightful owner, and he will soon appear to reign upon the "throne of his Father David, when all enemies shall be put under his feet. Is not God's plan a perfect one? and is there not an antidote in heaven's arrangement for all the ills of mortal life? Is there not a plan devised by Infinite Wisdom to meet man's wants in every form?

Dear brothers and sisters in the Lord, let us not be faithless nor faint-hearted. Although the enemy is trying every art to seduce all from the word of God, and setting his snares so subtly, let us watch and give heed to the "sure word of prophecy," that we may not be "ignorant of his devices." The time has come when the teachings of the spirits are thought to be by many more reliable than the plain word of the Lord. By them they are taught "progress and reform" are to renovate the earth, and bring about a state of unity, harmony and happiness, in which the race of mankind will reach the high aspirations of its better nature. Let me give a few sentences, written by one who was but lately one of the most devoted christians, and for many years unwavering in the faith of the speedy coming of Jesus.

"When the race that now inhabits this nether sphere shall have progressed far enough to be elevated on a plain where they will not wish to tyrannize and enslave each other, to rob and murder each other, either by wholesale or retail, it is then that peace will extend from the 'river to the ends of the earth,' and the 'glory of God will cover the earth,' or be more manifest to every child of humanity throughout the earth, than it can possibly be in the present state of undeveloped society. * * * It can hardly be admitted that one can be holy and happy until all are, but we can continually approach toward perfect health, perfect wealth, and consequently perfect freedom. Individual health is spiritual wealth, which can be coined into material wealth. The great need of the world is, freedom for the affections. Love is power, is God, is good."

I wish no injury to the author by quoting the above, but I would have others see the snare and avoid it.

Should any of the Lord's watchmen be passing through Michigan on the Central R. R. this season, and feel it a duty or privilege to call on us, they will find our place forty-five miles south-west of Galesburg, which is the first depot east of Kalamazoo. Inquire for Horace Thayer, or David Hastings.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. Geo. Dillabaugh, Seneca Falls, N. Y., writes:—"I would like to encourage the faithful, truth-loving ones to watchfulness, holy living, entire consecration to God, and to separate themselves from all the unholy fashions and practices of professed christians, even though they may profess the 'blessed hope.' Deliverance is very near, and those who wish to partake of 'the marriage supper' must see to it now that they have on the wedding dress which the King will acknowledge as the only one that will give the guests an admittance. We are about entering the sifting time, and we may yet see that the good wheat is not as plenty as we have thought. We need not be mistaken that the time of harvesting is very near, unless we close our eyes to facts that are taking place daily, [illegible] I believe with you that the time is not far distant when this government will lose their independence, and will have to submit to the rule of him who is seeking to be Monarch of all he surveys, and thinks his right there is none that can dispute. He is dreaded by the world, and well he may be. If such should prove to be the truth of the matter, then Spiritualism will be developed in its last form, and they only who are abiding in Christ, who have laid hold of the hope set before them in the gospel, and are living worthy of the gospel, purifying themselves, even as Christ was pure, will be able to stand in the evil time, that is just upon us.

Oh! for more men of clean hands and pure hearts, to go forth with a pure gospel, who do not count their lives dear to them; that are willing to endure hardness as good soldiers, and sound the last note of warning to perishing mortals that are hastening to the judgment."

A Brother and Sister from Cohoes, N. Y., write:—"We inclose to you one dollar, which you will please put into the C. P. S. tract fund; having denied ourselves the pleasure of a sleigh ride to give this to the Lord. And may he grant that, through its influence, somebody may be induced to ride into the kingdom of our Father on the car of eternal salvation."

We think the money was well saved and well spent; and there is a strong probability their good wishes may be realized.—G.

Bro. P. A. Smith, Rochester, N. Y., when referring to his field of labor, writes:—"We are having glorious times. I am to baptize ten or twelve to-morrow."

Press the battle, Dear Bro. Conquer or die.—G.

The New German Tract.

I have read Bro. Reimer's tract on "Das Zukunftige Schicksal der Gottlosen," The Future Destiny of the Wicked, with great interest. It is as full of matter as an egg is of meat. Beginning with some considerations on the practical bearing of the question, the author shows by many direct proofs that the penalty of God's law is strictly death, and that the passages supposed to prove a deathless death, mean no such thing. In conclusion, the matter is reasoned with regard to the divine justice. So far as I can judge, the whole is said in the very best German. Those who cannot "read and circulate," may very profitably circulate among those who can read.

Christ our Life. The Scriptural Argument for Immortality through Christ alone. By C. F. Hudson. Second edition. Boston: J. Munroe & Co. New York: Carleton. 1861. 12mo. pp. 160.

This is an elaborate deduction of the author's belief in the doctrine of the annihilation of the wicked, from Scripture, by a textual, verbal, and etymological exegesis. Something far more deeply founded and broadly based is requisite for the discussion and determination of the question of the immortality of the soul, even if it is to be admitted that it is a subject of discussion, which would not by any means be always the case.—*N. ## Obituary Notice.

Died in Granville, (Phiney Mountain) May 15th, Mrs. Matilda A., wife of Benjamin Farnsworth, aged fifty-five years.

I was sent for, and went some twenty miles to attend the funeral. Quite a large number were present for the place. I tried to comfort the friends from Luke 19: 10,—"For the Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." Sister Muzzey took part in the services, composed and sung a hymn at the grave. Sister Farnsworth professed religion a number of years ago, and joined the Baptists. She was quite low in her mind last spring when we visited the place. She requested us to have a meeting at her house. We had two, and she became quite revived in her mind. The last few days of her life she was very happy,—said it would not be long before Jesus would come to raise the dead. Thus she died in the triumphs of faith, in hope of victory over death at the resurrection.

May this affliction be sanctified to her companion, who has lost a kind wife; and to the seven children, who are bereaved of a good mother.

FOREIGN NEWS.

By the arrival of the Steamship Etna, we have advices from Liverpool to July 16th, Queenstown 17th.

The important interview between Napoleon, the Emperor of Russia and the King of Prussia, has been appointed, it is rumored, in September.

The increasing distress in the manufacturing districts in England drew the attention of Parliament.

Turin, July 12. The extraordinary Italian Mission is on the point of setting out for St. Petersburg. It is presumed that the mission will be under the direction of Gen. Cialdini.

Palermo, July 12. Garibaldi has returned to this city. He will continue his tour of the island next week.

ONE DAY LATER.

The Steamship Edinburgh brings advices from Liverpool 17th.

In the absence of further news from America, the papers have little to say upon the war question.

A French provincial journal, which had attacked the Russian Czar for his recognition of Italy has received a warning for having insulted a sovereign friendly to France.

A treaty of peace between France and Cochin China, signed the 31st of May, is expected. [illegible]

DOMESTIC NEWS.

New York, July 22. A Fortress Monroe letter of the 20th says the rebels are said to be concentrating in some force between City Point and Richmond, on the south bank of the river, for the purpose of covering the flanks of the forts on the river. Beauregard is said to be in command and to have in the neighborhood of 30,000 men under him.

The Times' Washington correspondent has information received from several States, showing that under the last call upward of 30,000 men have enlisted. Only two or three full regiments, however, are ready, the majority being the nucleus of companies and regiments forming. It is believed that a sufficient force for the present emergency will soon be in the field.

It is ascertained that Gen. Ewell with three brigades now occupies Gordonsville; for not taking which position, last week, Gen. Hatch was severely censured.

Gen. Pope is still in the city of Washington, awaiting, by the desire of the President, the arrival of Gen. Halleck. Since Gen. Pope was placed in his present command, military matters in Virginia and in the West have assumed a somewhat different aspect, and now important changes are again deemed necessary.

To-day an extraordinary meeting of the Cabinet was held, at which several Generals were present. Military affairs and military changes were discussed at length, but no result was attained, the President wishing to consult Gen. Halleck.

A Newbern (N. C.) letter of the 15th gives the particulars of the capture of Hamilton by the gunboats Perry, Ceres and Shawsheen, and a company of Hawkins' Zouaves. It was a dashing affair. The rebel force consisted of a regiment of cavalry, a strong force of infantry, artillery, a fort and one steamer. The latter was captured by the fleet, while the Zouaves took the fort and town. John H. Bridges, of Danvers, Mass., seaman, was killed, and a number of others on board the Ceres were wounded. Several were wounded on the other vessels, and some of the Zouaves received slight wounds. The rebels are said to have left forty or fifty dead on the field. The victory clears the way to Weldon.

New York, July 23. A letter from Gen. McClellan's army dated the 20th inst., in the Times, says: Two deserters from the 5th Virginia cavalry came into camp yesterday. They were detailed to perform picket duty in White Oak Swamp. From the deserters we learn that the main force of the rebel army is located on a bluff near the old tavern on Trent Hill and on the opposite side of the Chickahominy on Gaines' Hill. They estimate the rebel force about Richmond, including troops under Beauregard brought from the West, at 190,000 men. The rebels do not anticipate any demonstration from us on this side of James river, but are making preparations to resist any attack upon Petersburg or Richmond from the south side.

Advices state that Jackson, with 70,000 men, is opposing Gen. Pope. Magruder has gone to East Tennessee to take command of the rebel force there against Gen. Buell. The Enquirer still claims that the rebels took 9000 prisoners. Beauregard's wife is not dead.

Cincinnati, July 22. Reports via Maysville state that our cavalry had overtaken Morgan's band on the road to Owensville from Mount Sterling. After an hour and a half of hard fighting, Morgan's forces were completely scattered, and the cannon and horses captured by Morgan at Cynthiana retaken, as was also a large portion of the stolen property. The rebels lost 25 killed. The Federal loss is 20 killed.

Executive Mansion,
Washington, July 11th.

Ordered that Major General Henry W. Halleck be assigned to the command of the whole land forces of the United States as General-in-Chief, and that he repair to this capital as soon as he can with safety to the positions and operations within the department now under his special charge.

Abraham Lincoln.

New York, July 23. A copy of the Mobile Advertiser of the 11th, has been received. It makes a flattering allusion to a portion of the population of Louisiana. It says the loss of New Orleans has aroused the Southern cities. The word has gone forth that there will be no more surrenders of southern towns except in ashes. Butler's rule has intensified the southern hatred of Yankee rule. We mean to fight for our independence with such means as God and nature have put into our hands, just as if intervention were out of the question of hope.

The Grog Ration has been abolished by Congress, much to the annoyance of Jack, who complains bitterly of the proposed change, with five cents a day substituted. Inasmuch as John Bull pays $1,400,000 for grog in the British navy, and gives two drinks a day, and the French sailor is allowed three (of wine,) it is not deemed wise, just now, to make this innovation here, upon long established custom. So thought the Senate, but the House insisted and carried its point, and the law forbids the use of grog. As a war measure, the Secretary of the Navy may deem it wise not to execute the order at present.

The insecurity felt in Kentucky is shown by the reception at one of the banks in New York city on Monday of no less than $1,500,000 in specie, sent from banking institutions in Kentucky for safe keeping. Thousands of peaceable families retire at night, feeling that before dawn every inmate of the house may be slaughtered by the prowling guerrilla bands.

New York, July 24. The Herald's Washington dispatch says rebel sympathizers in Baltimore give the following:

"Stonewall Jackson, with a moderate force, is to be sent to the valley of the Shenandoah to keep Gen. Pope occupied. A small force under Magruder is to push down the Peninsula to threaten Newport News, and prevent the removal of troops from that point, and about 50,000 men are to be pushed to James river below Gen. McClellan's position, while the rest of the army at Richmond is to march rapidly on Washington."

The Washington correspondent of the New York Post makes some important statements, if true, as follows:

The President yesterday stated, in the hearing of several gentlemen, that he had done with "throwing grass," with mild measures, and that henceforth should conduct the war with severity. Rumors have been floating in the street for several days, to the effect that the President was about to issue formal instructions to his generals, demanding a more vigorous prosecution of the war.

New York, July 25. Special dispatches from Washington say that Senator Jim Lane has been commissioned by the government to raise and organize an army in Kansas, in his own way and upon his own principles.

The Post Office Department will continue after the first of August to issue stamps for currency. Those intended for this purpose will be without gluten, and will be redeemable at the United States Treasuries, or exchanged at the post office for postage.

A Baltimore letter in the Herald gives a list of twenty-eight rebel fortifications around Richmond.

New York, July 25. Resolutions were adopted yesterday at a meeting of the Committees representing the New York Chamber of Commerce, Union Defense Committee and the Common Council, to the effect that every person in the community of doubtful loyalty should be regarded as disloyal, and no one should be trusted who is not willing to sacrifice property, life and opinion for the public good; that the time has come when we must strike for the national life with every weapon that God has given us; that delay strengthens the rebels and wastes us; that it is better that every rebel should perish than one more loyal soldier should die; and therefore it is earnestly urged that it is best to immediately issue the order which, while it will take from the rebels their great source of strength, will diminish their army by calling to the defense of their homes large numbers of rebel officers and men.

The World publishes a dispatch from Washington which says: "I learn from pretty accurate private sources that Ewell's, Hill's, Longstreet's and Jackson's divisions of the rebel army have left Richmond gradually during the past fortnight, most of them going over the Virginia Central Railroad, and that they are now concentrating near Gordonsville, constituting an army 60,000 strong. Undoubtedly an attempt is to be made on Maryland or Washington."

Washington, July 26. The President, in an official order, announces the death of Ex-President Van Buren, and says the event will occasion mourning in the nation for the loss of a citizen and public servant, whose memory will be gratefully cherished.

Memphis, Tenn., July 22. Vicksburg advices to Sunday night have been received. Our mortars have been shelling the rebel batteries several hours without getting a reply. Farragut's fleet silenced all their guns while running down last night.

New York, July 26. A letter from Norfolk states that there have been several cases of yellow fever there.

New York, July 28. The steamer Marion from New Orleans has arrived. The health of the city was good, 20,000 men were employed in cleaning the streets.

The Mobile papers report Beauregard as being very sick.

Fortress Monroe, July 26. It is stated that a large rebel force is being concentrated on James river above the junction of the Appamattox and the James rivers. They come down from Richmond by the Richmond and Petersburg Railroad. It is believed that they already number from 50,000 to 70,000. It is believed that the rebels are now making a bold stand at the above named place, and are bringing all their forces there that they can spare from Richmond, and it is thought that Suffolk will soon be attacked. It is stated that Jackson is in command, notwithstanding the rumor that he is in pursuit of Gen. Pope.

A man who obtained a pass in Norfolk to go to North Carolina was watched by one of our officers, who arrested him as he was taking the road to Richmond. He had some 2000 letters, and confessed that he was paid two dollars for each letter for conveying them between Norfolk and Richmond.

☞ Certain parties in New York having been found discouraging enlistments, Secretary Seward has ordered United States Marshal Murray to arrest every one in the disloyal work and place them in Fort Lafayette. Marshal Murray gives notice that he shall enforce the order at once and vigorously. There are a few—very few—here in Boston who would like to throw cold water on enlistments, but they are not men of influence in any shape. One of this sort, as will be seen by our local columns, was treated to an involuntary bath in the Frog Pond last night.—Boston Journal.

ITEMS.

☞ The distress in the manufacturing districts of England increases. In Lancashire there were at the end of May 108,000 depending on Poor Law relief, and the number increases at the rate of a thousand a week. The whole stock of cotton in England was only about 480,000 bales, and the prospect of an increased supply was more gloomy than ever. Little hopes are now entertained that the American war will be brought to an end this year.—Carlton Sentinel, N. B.

☞ At the Great Exhibition, as a specimen of fine type and printing, there is a copy of the entire New Testament printed upon a single sheet of paper. It was printed by Collins, of Glasgow, the celebrated publisher of rare books and beautiful editions of the classics. Although so small, the type is stated to be very clear.

☞ There appears to be a very large emigration to the Mormon country this season. As many as six thousand wagons started a few days ago to cross the plains. A great part of these emigrants are from England and Scotland.

☞ Among other celebrities in London is Baron Steiglitz, the great Petersburg banker, who is declared to be the richest individual in the world. His annual income is estimated at over two and a half millions of dollars.

☞ The quantity of cotton burned by the Southerners to prevent its falling into the hands of the Federalists, is estimated at 1,650,000 bales, and its present value at $165,000,000.

☞ Miss Laura Bridgman, the celebrated deaf, dumb and blind girl, was baptized by immersion at Hanover, N. H., a few days ago.

Meeting of the Advent Christian Association.

To the brethren in Christ, and churches of the Lord who "serve the living God," and "wait for his Son from heaven," Greeting:—The Board of Managers, after due consultation, have decided to appoint the third annual meeting of the Advent Christian Association, at Wilbraham, Mass., to commence Tuesday, 4 o'clock, P. M., August 26th, 1862.

Two reasons have led them to decide upon this time in preference to October, as heretofore. First—A larger attendance can be secured; Second—Much expense can be saved. These are weighty considerations. The business to be transacted at the annual meeting of this Association is very important. The interests of every church, and every individual, "looking for the blessed hope," are involved in its proceedings. This Society controls the World's Crisis. It appoints its Editors and Managers. It decides what its character shall be, and marks out its policy, whether it shall give expression to every idea, however fanciful or absurd, which may demand its columns; or whether it shall select such only as are "meat in due season." It becomes necessary, therefore, that every church be represented, that our family paper be sustained in such a manner as to "feed the flock," that we may know whether its Editorship, eminently successful thus far, shall be changed or not.

A full representation, so desirable, can be best secured during campmeeting week. Distant churches in the South, West and East, are usually represented then, while they cannot afford six weeks afterwards to send other representatives so far to attend the Association alone. Having, for these reasons, fixed upon this time for our third annual meeting, it is hoped that we may have a large and profitable one. Lest we be disappointed, let earnest prayer be made to God daily, that whatever shall be done at that time may be done, not in the name of man, self, or party, but "in the name of the Lord Jesus."

Daniel T. Taylor, Chairman.
H. F. Carpenter, Clerk.

June 7th, 1862.

Note. The Board of the Advent Christian Association are requested to meet at Wilbraham on Tuesday, August 26th, at 8 o'clock, A. M. A prompt and punctual attendance desirable.

D. T. Taylor, President.
H. F. Carpenter, Clerk.

Note. Letters are solicited from churches and ministers who cannot possibly be otherwise represented. They may be directed to H. F. Carpenter, Poultney, Vt., till Aug. 18th, after that to Collins Depot, Mass.

All pastors and evangelists, and delegates from churches co-operating with this Society, are members. Each church is allowed one delegate, and one additional delegate, for every fifty members above the number of twenty-five members. None can vote by letter.

Advent Campmeeting.

A general campmeeting for Northern New York, Vermont and Canada East, will be holden in Perry's Mills, N. Y., near the depot of the Ogdensburg Railroad in that place, six miles from Rouse's Point, N. Y.

The Adventists in the entire region, with all classes and persuasions of christians, are most cordially invited to attend, and take an earnest and active part in the objects of the meeting. All who have tents will bring them. And friends in the vicinity are invited to put up cheap lumber tents, or others, for themselves and strangers. Board and lodging will be provided on reasonable terms, also pasture for horses. Every thing will be done by the brethren and friends in the vicinity to make the people comfortable. Our tried and faithful brethren, Dr. E. M. Loomis of Perry's Mills, N. Y., and Alvah Loomis of Champlain, N. Y., may be addressed by any who wish accommodation, or any further information about the meeting. The meeting will commence on Friday, August 15th, at 4 o'clock, P. M., and be continued every day over two Sabbaths, to the 24th. The meeting is located in a grove, on the farm of Fay Clark, one-fourth of a mile from the depot at Perry's Mills. Water for man and beast, and lumber for tents in close proximity.

Ministers of God, brethren, sisters, friends, one and all, come up to the feast. There never was a time when the door was opened so wide and effectual as now, for the Adventists to speak and work for God and a doomed world. Many too among us have left their first love, and have need of help. Many in our families are out of the ark of safety, and shall we not do something to rescue them before the storm of vengeance falls? Can we endure to see the destruction of our kindred? The community too are looking to us for light on the coming kingdom. Shall we not give it? Can we withhold and be innocent in the day of the Lord? We have light on the time, and the signs of the Advent of the King of kings. Shall we not give it? Why hesitate to give the trump a certain sound? Rome is falling, the False Prophet is tottering, and Armageddon, with its strife and slaughter, is just upon us!

Come, then, ye veterans of the Advent faith; come, ye young with the old soldiers, let us shake off the dust of sloth and indolence, and gird on the armor of God. Let us seek and possess full redemption, and do what we can to multiply the number who shall stand with us on Mount Zion in the day of the Lord.

Joshua V. Himes.

Boston, July 14, 1862.

New Hampshire Tent for the Wilbraham Campmeeting.

Brn. and Srs. of N. H., what say to getting a tent, and raising a company to go to the Wilbraham campmeeting, so as to furnish our own bedding, provisions, etc? This will make it much cheaper than to hire our board. Several have already spoken to me about this. If a suitable number can go, so as to make it an object, I think I can get the fare reduced to half price from this place (Concord), if I can only know it in season to make the arrangements. Do any of our brethren own a tent? or does any one know of a tent that can be hired for the occasion? All those who would like to go as already proposed, or know of a tent that can be had, please write to me immediately, so that we can have time to make proper arrangements. If any would wish me to return an answer to their communications, please don't forget to enclose a postage stamp. We must move lively, brethren, if we bring this matter to perfection; as we have only about four weeks before the meeting commences. The devil, with all his family, are doing all they can to destroy men, let us do what we can to save them. The Lord is near at hand.

T. M. Preble.

Concord, N. H., July 24th, '62

General Meeting.

The brethren in New Hampshire, believing in gospel order, and the gifts as given to a New Testament church, feeling that in this day of unbelief and apostasy they should meet together, exhort one another, and contend earnestly "for the faith which was once delivered to the saints," that they may be able to stand against those in these last days who "resist the truth" like Jannes and Jambres, and "come behind in no gift; waiting for the coming of our Lord," that we may be found "blameless in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ;" and while we may regret any confusion (as God is not the author of confusion) or fanaticism, in this or other countries, that may have been connected with the exercise of the gifts; still we would not turn away from these, God's own appointed channels of communicating strength, comfort and blessings to his church in this day of trial, as well as the past; and, while we have our solemn conviction that, although we may hold many of the glorious truths of the gospel as very sacred and essential, still if we are destitute of its power, we shall be found with a lamp, but destitute of oil in the day of God, have concluded to commence a meeting on New Durham Ridge August 21st, and hold it over the following Sunday, for the investigation of the word, and to seek the divine blessing. Bro. J. Billings and others will be present to preach the word. All are invited. In behalf of the brethren,

J. G. Smith.

Campmeeting Notice.

According to previous appointment, there will be a campmeeting in the town of Grand Blanc, Genesee Co., Mich., on the farm of Bro. John Arable, commencing Aug. 27th, 1862. This meeting is appointed for the express purpose of calling together all such as love the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ in this State; and if brethren from other States, or from Canada, wish to attend, of course there will be no objection. Come, then, dear brethren and sisters; come with your tents and provisions; come well furnished with materials to take care of yourselves and others; come with warm hearts in the fear of God to labor for the salvation of souls, and be sure that you come at the commencement of the meeting. Our meeting last year was a blessed one, and we anticipate a more glorious one this year. Bro. and Sr. Mansfield will be there to aid in the proclamation of the gospel.

P. S. Brethren coming on the cars, from the East or West, will stop at Holly. The meeting is to be some twelve miles north of Holly. Stages run within three miles of the meeting. In behalf of the church,

A. N. Seymour.

Notices of Eld. J. V. Himes.

Worcester, Tuesday, July 29th, in the evening.

Wednesday, July 30th, conference and lectures in Palmer, or Three Rivers, Mass., and continue over the Sabbath. Afternoon and evening each day, and Sabbath all day, as Bro. Powell shall appoint.

Monday, Aug. 4th, Albany, N. Y., in the evening.

Wednesday, Aug. 6th, commence a meeting in Esperence, N. Y., and continue over the Sabbath, as Bro. B. F. Brownell shall arrange; perhaps in the grove.

Tuesday, Aug. 12th, Sandy Hill, N. Y., in the evening.

Friday, Aug. 15th, commence a campmeeting at Perry's Mills, N. Y., to continue from the 15th to the 24th.

Tuesday, Aug. 26th, will be at the Wilbraham campmeeting, to continue through the week.

Notice.

Eld. M. Batchelor is expected to hold a grove meeting in the grove of L. A. Lawton, at Hauppauge, Islip, L. I., to begin Friday, Aug. 8th, and hold over the following Sunday.

T. A. Lawton.

Notice.

There will be a conference meeting at Jonesville, Hillsdale Co., Mich., commencing Thursday evening, Aug. 21st, and continuing over the Sabbath. Bro. and Sr. Mansfield, and Bro. and Sr. Seymour, are expected to be in attendance to preach the word. We hope to see a general gathering of the lovers of Jesus within reach of this meeting. We invite you to come to this feast. Come praying. In this time of trouble, we should not forget the assembling ourselves together, but exhort "one another, and so much the more as (we) see the day approaching." Come, then, brethren and sisters, lay aside the cares of life a little time, and come up to this meeting. We will try and take care of all that will come.

A. E. Babcock, for the Church.

Campmeeting.

The great interest manifested at our tent meeting in New Preston, Ct., has induced us, with the advice of the brethren in that section, to appoint a campmeeting, to commence Tuesday, Sept. 2d, at 10 A. M. Some eight tents have already been counted up for the occasion, and we hope the number will be much larger. Brethren that want to work for the Lord will find here a new and interesting field.

We desire all who can, to bring provisions and tents for themselves and others. Plain food, and "all things common" is the Bible rule; let us practice it cheerfully. A daily stage from New Milford (Housatonic R. R.) at 12 will bring in all who wish. Distance eight miles.

H. Pratt.

Conference Notice.

The Illinois conference of Adventists will hold their quarterly meeting with the church near New Rutland, Lasalle Co., commencing Tuesday, Sept. 2d, at 2 o'clock, and continue over the Sabbath. Those coming from the East or West will take the Burlington and Quincy R. R., connecting with the Central at Menetata, or the Rock Island R. R. connecting with the Central at Lasalle, stopping at New Rutland, on the Central R. R., where conveyances will be provided to the place of meeting. Preaching brethren in the conference are expected to be there. It will be held in the New England Mission Tent.

H. G. McCulloch, Sec. of Conf.

Notice.

The Lord willing, there will be a campmeeting at Corinna, Me., (on Mr. Weston Nutter's place) commencing the first Monday in September, and continuing over the following Sabbath. We extend a cordial invitation to all the brethren in this section, and abroad, to come and worship the Lord with us. There will, we hope, be a full delegation of preaching brethren with us from abroad to dispense the word of life. Particulars hereafter.

B. C. Moore, Albert Door, Geo. H. Fisher, } Committee of Arrangements.

Campmeeting at Wilbraham.

It is thought best that our great annual gathering at Wilbraham commence this year Monday, Aug. 25th, and continue one week. Particulars hereafter.

F. H. Berick, Miles Grant, Geo. T. Adams, } Committee of Arrangements.

"I will come again!"

Our Savior once more upon earth shall appear,
A person as literal as when he was here;
The clouds are his chariot, and glory his throne,
While myriads of angels his majesty own.

Ten thousand bright saints with the Lord shall descend,
Their strains of hosannas the heavens shall rend;
Whilst the angels who sung the glad song of his birth,
Shall gather his saints from the ends of the earth.

The kingdom shall come, and the graves shall give way,
And his saints be redeemed from their prison of clay;
For the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall come forth,
From the east, from the west, from the south to the north.

Each eye shall behold him in awful attire;
The saints shall be glad and their Savior admire;
Whilst those who condemned him to die on the tree,
Shall wail when that glorious Messiah they see.

'Twill comfort the saints to reflect on that day,
When sorrow and sighing shall vanish away;
These bodies, though vile, shall be fashioned aright,
And robed in rare garments of glory and light.

But the wicked will sink into darkness and gloom,
Everlasting destruction their sentence and doom;
From the presence of God and the Lamb they shall flee,
And the glorious kingdom they never shall see.

J. W. Goodwin.

Correspondence.

From Sr. S. G. Hazelton.

Dear Bro. and Srs.:—It is good to stir our pure minds by way of remembrance, and to exhort one another, and "so much the more as (we) see the day approaching." Thank the Lord that it is near, even at the doors. Shall we not lift up our heads and rejoice? Our redemption draws near! They that have this hope in them purify themselves "even as he (Christ) is pure." How? By obeying the truth; for we have the promise that all things shall "work together for good to them that love the Lord." By this we may know we love him, if we "keep his commandments." How truly do we find in this time that the Word is a lamp to our feet and a light to our path. And while we see that our journeyings are almost ended, may the Lord help us to walk in the light, as he is in the light, and then we shall have "fellowship one with another," and the blood of Christ will "cleanse" us from "all sin." We need not to "commend ourselves," nor do we need "letters of commendation" from others; but as the apostle Paul says, "Ye are our epistle, written in our hearts, known and read of all men."

It is evident that God's people are one, and they know one another. May the Lord help us to keep ourselves in the love of God, and in the "patient waiting" for his coming; that we may be children of faithful Abraham, then we shall be heirs according to the promise. Let us strive to enter in, "for many shall seek to enter in, but shall not be able." It is not all that say "Lord, Lord," that shall enter in, but it is those that "do the will of (our) Father which is in heaven." Let us live so that our hearts will not condemn us, then we shall have confidence before God, and he will hear us pray. It is good to trust in the Lord. It will lead us to watch and pray that we enter not into temptation. Blessed is he that endures temptation. If we stand the trial and come off conquerors, we shall have a crown that never will be taken from us and given to another. May the Lord give us wisdom, that we may have light in our dwellings, that we may neither stumble nor fall here amid the perils of the last days. Truly, perilous times have come. Lord, help thy people.

We have been blessed of the Lord. Thank his dear name! He had mercy on us when we were strangers to him; therefore let us double our diligence and make our calling and election sure. Soon it will be said—

"Child, your Father calls, come home!"

Goffstown Centre, N. H.

From Bro. Benj. Spaulding.

Dear Bro. Grant:—I find myself much improved in health and spirits, and propose taking a tour to Aroostook River. Shall go as I have done before, visiting families and scattering tracts. Aroostook is an interesting field for labor, for there are few churches, and less ministers; therefore, but little sectarianism. People are more ready to hear and to read on subjects connected with the advent of Jesus, than in more populous places. I want to inquire whether there is not some fund from which I can draw a few thousand pages of tracts on the Advent, the sleep of the dead, immortality through Christ only, and the destruction of the wicked?—[Yes. Ed.] I give my own time, pay my own expenses, and should be glad to receive some tracts from a fund or some source. But if not, I will pay for ten dollars' worth. I want them mostly with few pages, so that I can circulate the more numbers. I shall endeavor to put the tracts right into the hands of each individual, and add a few words of exhortation in every case. In this way I find out how to adapt them to the wants and circumstances of the people. I also carry children' papers and little books for children. This introduces me into every family. [illegible] praised be the Lord, my heart is in the work. "O yes, I want to go." I am more than willing. God has been with me in former tours, has blessed me, given me access to the minds of the people, and I believe he will still be with me. I can trust myself in his hands. I am a feeble worm of the dust, but he has "chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty," the foolish "to confound the wise," "that no flesh should glory."

I propose going about the first of Aug. If you have some of the back numbers of the Crisis, or any little cards for children, I should like them; or second hand tracts would do. Please let me know what can be done.

From Eld. S. A. Chaplin.

Bro. Grant:—As all who are looking for the return of the "Holy and Just One" are interested in hearing from all parts of the great vineyard, I will briefly communicate a statement as to this part in the western field. It was thought best, at the State Conference last year, to sub-divide the State into four distiicts, so that a quarterly meeting might be held in each, which brethren might attend who could not go to the yearly Conference. We held two quarterly Conferences in the northern part of the State, which proved the wisdom and expediency of the arrangement. Brethren and sisters met in holy convocation, and were abundantly blessed and edified; and the Lord blessed his truth to the convincing of some out of Christ, who embraced the truth, and obeyed the requirements of the gospel. At these meetings and some others immediately following, sixteen persons were baptized into Christ, and thus "obeyed . . . that form of doctrine which was delivered them." I learn that some others have also submitted at meetings held more recently by different ministering brethren. I believe twenty-two persons have been baptized in different localities since the first of June, when we held our first conference. To the Lord be all the praise.

The church has but a little time more to labor till this dispensation will close. We are living in the Virgin Generation, and it is half gone. God wrought wonders with a generation that came out of Egypt, before he brought them into the promised land. Before he brought desolation on his chosen city and dispersed the rebellious Jews, he wrought signs and miracles by his Son and apostles before them, and gave warning of the coming doom. And in these last days he has shown signs and wonders and warned the world of impending judgment. The time of trouble is now coming. The nations are becoming angry, and soon the judgment will set, and the books be opened. May we be found of Him in peace, without spot and blameless.

From Sr. Celia.

Bro. Grant:—Paul says, "Rejoice evermore." Such exhortations sometimes trouble those weak in faith. We are ready to exclaim, Does he mean never, amid the cares and trials of life, to feel sorrowful? If so, I cannot comply with that request. He says again, "Sorrowful, yet always rejoicing." Sometimes we are led to inquire, Can he mean when passing through the furnace heated seven times hotter than it is wont to be heated, to be just as cheerful and happy as in prosperity? He says again, "No chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous"; nevertheless afterward, it yieldeth the peaceable fruits of righteousness to them who are exercised thereby." As it regards my own experience, there are times when weak in body and mind, at the same time beset with powerful temptations, such a struggle going on within in order to keep my head above the waters, so exceedingly depressed in spirit, it seems impossible, for a time, to be cheerful. I can hardly bear to be even spoken to, the contest within is so severe. The members of our family being unacquainted with heart-work, may look upon us as being displeased about something, set it down as a defect in our piety, condemn us; but does our heavenly Father who knows our hearts condemn us? Does not Paul mean, while exceedingly sorrowful in the things of this world, at the same time we are to be exceedingly happy in prospect of that land of rest when this mortal shall have put on immortality? exceedingly happy when we think soon the last wave of sorrow will roll o'er us, and if faithful only a few days longer the last tear will be wiped from off our faces?

From Sr. E. A. Wait.

Bro. Grant:—As this is not our abiding city, and we are pilgrims and strangers seeking one that "hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God"; I am striving, by the grace of God, to be an inhabitant of the new and renovated earth, to share in that rich inheritance which belongeth to the children of our heavenly Father. What a precious promise to those who obey the commandments of our Master. Who would not sacrifice the pleasures of this life, to become an heir to eternal life? For one, I am willing to give up all for a home with my Savior. This would be a beautiful earth were it not for the curse resting upon it. The enemy death is abroad in the land; therefore all our happiness here is blighted by his poisonous breath. How encouraging to the poor, weary, careworn pilgrim, to know that they have a mansion prepared for them, where sorrow and death can never enter; where peace and happiness will reign forever. O blessed thought! I long to be there. And by the help of the Lord I will be there. I feel to praise him for his goodness and mercy toward me. I can say with the patriarch David, "The Lord . . . is my refuge and my fortress; my God, in him will I trust."

Bakers Falls, N. Y.

From Bro. L. Wotherell.

Bro. Grant:—I take this opportunity to let you know how we are getting along in Melbourne. There are a few here striving to serve God, and be ready for the kingdom. Bro. Himes was with us five or six days, and tried to comfort our hearts, by presenting the evidence that God is soon to set up his blessed kingdom on the earth. I trust we have renewed our covenant with the Lord, and feel determined to hope on to the end. O what hath God prepared for those that love and serve him! Eye hath not seen it, nor ear heard; but the Spirit has revealed it unto us.

O Lord, help us to live holy, that we may receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away, when Jesus comes. Is it possible that God's everlasting kingdom is to be set up so soon? O Lord, help thy church to be ready, and pity the world and cold-hearted professors. What a day for those that are out of Christ! What a doom—eternal death! But God will be the hope of his people. May he keep us all in these days of peril, and give us light, wisdom, and grace, to do his will in all things.

For the Crisis.

"The Mote and Beam."

Since meridian light commenced, purer love revealed to some,
If there still should be offences, wo to him by whom they come;
Judge not that ye be not judged, was the counsel Christ did give,
And the measure that you've given, just the same you must receive.

Jesus says, be meek and lowly, for 'tis wrong to be a judge;
If I would be pure and holy, I must love without a grudge.
It requires a constant labor all his precepts to obey;
If I truly love my neighbor, then I'm in the holy way.

If I say unto my neighbor, in thine eye there is a mote,
If thou art a friend or brother, hold, and I will pull it out:
But I could not get it safely, for my sight was very dim;
When I came to see more clearly, in my eye there was a beam.

If I love my brother dearly, and his mote I would erase,
Then my sight must shine more clearly, for the eye's a tender place;
Others I have oft reproved for a little single mote,
Now I wish the beam removed—O! that love would work it out.

Charity or love is healing; it will give a purer sight;
When I saw my brother's failing, I was not exactly right;
Now I'll take no further trouble, since Christ's love is all my theme,
Little motes are but a bubble when I think upon the beam.

In sweet union let us travel, pilgrims through this world of woe,
All upon one christian level, none but Jesus may we know;
Farewell, then, to disputation—firm, united let us be,
In love's highest dispensation live with Christ eternally.

H. W.

Hoag's Vision.

Bro. E. S. Willard, Hammonton, N. J., sends us the following vision of Joseph Hoag, and says it is "well attested to by persons in Western New York, with whom we are well acquainted." Republished by request.—G.

This article was published shortly after the date of the vision, but at that time was only regarded as the mere chimera of an excited brain; since its striking fulfillment in many important particulars, it is generally viewed as evidence that the author was gifted with prescience bordering on the supernatural:—

VISION OF JOSEPH HOAG.

In the year 1803, probably in the eighth month, I was one day in the field, and observed the sun shone clear, but a mist eclipsed the brightness of its shining. As I reflected on the singularity of the event, my mind was clothed with silence the most solemn I have ever witnessed, for all my faculties were laid low and unusually brought into silence. I said to myself, what can all this mean? I do not remember ever before to have been sensible of such feelings; and I heard a voice from heaven, saying:

"This that thou see'st that dims the brightness of the sun is a sign of the present and future times. I took the fathers of this country from the land of oppression; I planted them here among the forest; I blessed and sustained them, and while they were humble I fed them, and they became a numerous people. But they have become proud and lifted up, and forgot me who nourished them in the wilderness, and are running into every abomination and evil practice of which the old country was guilty, and have taken quietude from the land and suffered a dividing spirit to come amongst them. Lift up thine eyes and behold."

I saw them dividing in great heat. This division in the churches was on point of doctrine. It commenced in the Presbyterian society and went through the various religious denominations, and in its progress and close, its effects were nearly the same. Those who dissented went off with high heads and taunting language, and those who kept to their original sentiments appeared exercised and sorrowful. And when the dividing spirit entered the Society of Friends, it raged in as high a degree as any I had before discovered; and as before, those who separated went with lofty looks and taunting, censuring language; those who kept to their ancient principles retired by themselves.

It then appeared in the Lodges of the Freemasons, and set the country in an uproar for a length of time. Then it entered politics throughout the United States, and it did not stop until it produced a civil war, and an abundance of blood was shed in the course of the contest. The Southern States lost their power, and slavery was annihilated from their borders. Then a monarchial government arose and established a National Religion, and made all societies tributary to support its expenses. I saw them take property from Friends to a large amount. I was amazed at beholding all this, and I heard a voice proclaim:

"This power shall not always stand, but with this power will I chastise my churches until they return to the faithfulness of their forefathers. Thou see'st what is coming on thy native land for their iniquities, and the blood of Africa, the remembrance of which is come before me."

This vision is for many days. I had no intention of writing it for many years, until it became such a burden that for my own relief I have so written.

Joseph Hoag.

Selections.

The Mystery of Editing.

The world at large do not understand the mystery of a new newspaper; and as in a watch the hands that are seen are but the passive instruments of the spring, which is never seen; so in a newspaper the most worthy cause of its prospering is often least observed and known. Who suspects the benefit which a paper derives from the enterprise, vigilance and watchful care of the publishers? Who pauses to think how much of the pleasure of reading is derived from the care and skill of the printer? We feel the blemishes of printing if they exist, but seldom observe the excellencies. We eat a hearty dinner, but do not think of the farmer who raises the materials thereof, or the cook that prepares them with infinite pains and skill. But a cook of vegetables, meats, pastries and bones, has a paradisacal office in comparison with the editor! Before him passes in review all the exchange newspapers. He is to know all their contents—to mark for others the matter that requires attention. His scissors are to be alert, and clip with incessant industry all the little items that together form so large an interest in the news department. He passes in review each week every section of his country, through the newspaper lens—he looks across the ocean, and sees strange lands, and following the sun, he searches over all the world for material.

It will require but one second's time for the readers to take in what two hours produces. By him are read the manuscripts that swarm the office like flies in July. It is his frown that dooms them. His hand that condenses a whole page into a line. It is his discreet sternness that resists sentimental obituaries, and gives our young poets a twig on which to sit and sing their first lays.

The power behind the throne, in newspapers as in higher places, is sometimes as important as the throne. Correspondents, occasional and regular, stand in awe at that silent power which has the last chance at an article, and who sends it forth in glory of humility. In short, as the body depends upon good digestion, so the health of a paper depends upon the vigorous digestion which goes on by means of the editor.—Henry Ward Beecher.

Keep Boys at Home.

Boys will learn more bad habits, say we, in being on the streets one night a week, than all the daylight the week round. If you want your young son to learn to drink, turn him loose nights: if you want him to acquire a taste for gambling, let him run with the other boys at night; if you want him to learn everything vile and unmentionable, give him the freedom of the streets after dark. Too much restraint upon boys will react, as the proverb concerning minister's sons would indicate; but whatever other liberty you give your son, let his evenings be devoted to study, light work, or some innocent home amusement. Seven years is a tender age to give a child the privilege of choosing his companion after dark, but this place affords instances of such precocity in boyhood, and such a recklessness in parents.

To make a boy stay at home willingly at night, or indeed to stay at all, he must be made to love his home. Have it made as agreeable to him as possible, without being profitless to him or you, or both. Drop your dignity, and join in a game with him; assist him in his studies, and depend upon it, you will be paid a thousand fold, after your boy reaches manhood, for the pains you take. But depend upon it, darkness and crime go together, so far at least, as boys are concerned.—Dubuque Times.

How to break ones-self of Bad Habits.

Understand clearly the reasons, and all the reasons, why the habit is injurious. Study the subject till there is no lingering doubts in your mind.

Avoid the places, the persons and thoughts that lead to the temptation.

Frequent the places, associate with the persons, indulge in the thoughts that lead away from the temptation.

Keep busy. Idleness is the strength of bad habits.

Do not give up the struggle when you have broken your resolution once, twice, ten times. That only shows how much need there is for you to strive.

When you have broken your resolution, just think the matter over, and endeavor to understand why it was you failed, so that you may be upon your guard against a recurrence of the same circumstances.

Do not think it a little or easy thing that you have undertaken. It is folly to expect to break off a bad habit in a day, which may have been gathering strength in you for years.

A Hasty Temper.—Fight hard against a hasty temper. Anger will come, but resist it instantly. A spark will set a house on fire. A fit of passion may give you cause to mourn all the days of your life.

☞ To suppress the truth may now and then be our duty to others; not to utter a falsehood must always be our duty to ourselves.

How to choose a good Potatoe.—Mr. Jas. Anderson recommends the following as an infallible rule:—"The finest, mealiest, and most nutritious potatoes are always denser and heavier than the soft and waxy. By taking advantage of this difference in their specific gravity, the light and inferior potatoes are made to swim on the surface of a solution of salt, while the heavy and good sink to the bottom. By this simple contrivance the dry and mealy potatoes are separated from the soft and waxy in the most effectual manner with the most scientific exactness, and by a process that cannot err." Let the potatoes be first washed clean in fresh water; and as all vegetables should be washed in salt and water for the dislodgment of slugs or insects, a tub of salt and water ought to be kept in readiness in every garden for the purpose, and in this the potatoes can be proved.—Scottish Farmer.

All Sinners but ourselves.—Old parson W. of Bristol county, Mass., related the following anecdote of himself. He wished to address every portion of his flock in a manner to impress them deeply, and accordingly gave notice that he would preach separate sermons, to the old, to young men, to young women, and to sinners. At his first sermon his house was full—but not one aged person was there. At the second, to young men, every lady of the parish was present, and but few of those for whom it was intended. At the third, few young ladies attended, but the aisles were crowded with young men. At the fourth, address to sinners, not a solitary individual was there, except the sexton and organist. "So," said the parson, "I found that everybody came to church to hear his neighbor scolded, but no one cared to be spoken of himself."

Liberty to be Damned.

Frederick the II. of Prussia received a petition from one of his districts praying that a certain clergyman be suspended from preaching because he held that the punishment of the wicked would come to an end. The king took his pen and wrote the following:

I have considered the above petition, and do hereby give my royal permission to all my loyal subjects to be damned to all eternity if they choose it. But I do positively forbid their quarreling with their neighbors who are not willing to keep them company so long.

Pledge OF THE TRY COMPANY.

WE, THE UNDERSIGNED, HEREBY PLEDGE OURSELVES TO ABSTAIN FROM TEA, COFFEE, TOBACCO, AND ALL INTOXICATING DRINKS AS A BEVERAGE.

NAMES TO PLEDGE.

Edwin Cheney, Carrie L. Dikeman, Fayette R. Dikeman, Olive E. Hastings, Susie Eliza Pettingill.

Georgianna Safford, Sarah W. Tandy, Mary E. Goodwin, Ella B. Safford, Aurilla M. Saltmarsh, Mary L. Safford, Emma A. Garfield, Clara H. Safford, Eunice C Hook, Carrie M. Saltmarsh, Hannah Bean, Addie G. Little, Mary E. Cushman, Abbie E. Buzzell, Jennie L. Paul, Almira H. Dadmon, Henry G. Buzzell, Willie H. Little, Eddie L. Kimbal, Eddie Tucker, Jothan T. Tamblyn, Eugene Cushman, Mary V. Saltmarsh, Annie G. Robins.

The above twenty-four names all reside in Concord, N. H., and half of them have lately given their hearts to the Lord, been baptized, and are trying to be good. Will not all the members of the Try Company, TRY to be christians, living holy lives, that they may meet together in the kingdom of God? Come, begin now.—G.

The "Try Company."

A word to the Try Company. Dear children, we are rejoiced to see your names coming in for membership in the "Try Company." We would say to you who have joined, well done. When you resolve to use no tea, coffee, tobacco, or intoxicating liquors, and put the resolution into effect, you have done nobly. Let no one persuade you to break your pledge. Be true to your word. Always do as you agree. We have used none of these poisonous things for about nineteen years, and we feel much better than when we had these bad habits upon us.

Remember, "I will try has done wonders; but I can't never did any thing." Let every little boy and girl join the Try Company. We intend to keep a list of your names. Let us have a long string of them.—G.

For the Crisis

A Word to the Children.

Dear Children:—Do you ever think, as you with healthful glee engage in your pleasant sports, that perhaps ere another day shall dawn, you may be lying cold and motionless in death? That those active limbs will be quiet forever? That then the eye, so full of light and joy, will be closed in that sleep, which knows no waking until the morning of the resurrection? That the tongue, so often employed in uttering words of joy or sorrow, will then be silent? That parent's hearts would then be filled with grief? That your destiny would be forever sealed?

Perhaps you think these things are far in the future,—that you are so young, and so strong, and well, death cannot come to you, until your youthful days have passed, and the seeds of disease have sprung up into life, and you forewarned of the approach of the "last enemy," by days, and perhaps weeks of languor and pain.

I will tell you why I am led to write you respecting this matter, so sad and uninviting, instead of telling you an amusing story.

Last Friday, there was a little girl at school, as full of life and joy as any who are reading this letter. On Saturday afternoon she was carried to the churchyard and laid away in the cold grave. Every night she was accustomed to go past our door, leading the cow home by a rope. Friday night, she went as usual after her, and instead of going directly home, she went into a boat that was fastened to the shore, and there amused herself for a time; it is not known how long, but she was seen there by two or three persons. When her absence caused anxiety, her mother went in search of her; and then, as the shades of night came on, others assisted; and O, who can tell the sorrow of that fond heart, as darkness closed around, and the dear child was still unfound! About half past nine o'clock, her body was drawn from the water, a few feet from the boat where she had played, all unconscious of danger.

And now, dear children, be warned by this incident, and prepare for that hour when you too may die, and all unwarned as she was. Be good children; never speak wicked nor untruthful words,—be kind to all, and especially "obey your parents in the Lord." In order to be all this, you will need help from God. You must ask him in Jesus' name to give you a "new heart," one filled with the spirit of love and obedience to him and your parents.

Be also warned of the danger of playing near the water. Many have been drowned by venturing in for play, or to bathe. Two little boys—brothers—were drowned in this town, two or three years ago, by so doing. Never go into boats to play. Now you will think over what I have said to you, won't you? and that you may be thereby profited, is the prayer of your friend,

M. D. Wellcome.

"Pray without Ceasing."

Fear not to pray though scoffers sneer,
And bring reproach upon thy name;
Pray, for the day of Christ is near,
When the saints shall live again.

Pray with a heart that is sincere,
With faith believing in the Lord;
Pray, fearing Him who will soon appear,
His gentle hand controls the rod.

Pray, pilgrim, pray, and trust in God;
Pray for his kingdom to appear;
Fear not to pray, but read his word,
And teach poor sinners the Lord to fear.

Providence, R. I. Charles H. Sweet.

Dick Tardy.

Dear children, have you ever heard of Dick Tardy—the boy who is always behind-hand? What a troublesome boy he is! He is never up in season in the morning; keeps breakfast waiting an hour or two, for him; gets to school and Sunday School long after it commences; never has his lessons in time; and, in fact, is always behind in every thing.

One day Dick's little sister was very sick with the scarlet fever, and his mother told him to run with all his might for the doctor, for his sister must have some medicine. Dick started, but on his way he met some playmates, with whom he went on the ice, and staid till noon, before he did his errand. When he got nearly home, he thought every thing seemed very still about the house, and saw that the windows were darkened.

He went in with a fearful heart, and his mother met him, weeping, and led him to the bed of his poor little sister, who lay with purple and swollen face, gasping for breath; and in a few moments she breathed her last. Thus Dick's dear and only sister died, when, if he had not loitered on the way, and neglected to get the doctor, she might have lived to be his playmate and companion for many, many years.

Poor Dick felt very badly, but it did not cure him of his habit of tardiness. I hope none of the young readers of the Crisis are like tardy Dick. If they are, may they reform, before as sad a misfortune befals them. Aunt Mary.

One of God's Birdies.

You would love little May Warren, if you knew her, I am sure. She is such a sweet little thing, that I believe I speak the truth in saying that everybody loves her who has had the pleasure of looking into her bright face.

"Please, mother, let me go to scool with cousin Willie this morning," said she, one day, running into the room where her mother sat with her baby brother; "please do, mother, I will be real good."

"Let you go to school, dear?" answered her mother, kissing the rosy lips held up to her; "and where is Willie?"

"Here, auntie," said he, coming in at the open door, with his satchel of books on his arm, his black eyes sparkling with mischief, as usual, and his cheeks glowing like the roses that peeped in at the window.

"Yes, little May may go to school this morning, if she will be very good, and cousin Willie will promise to take care of her."

"Oh! you are so good," said May, throwing her arms around her mother's neck, and giving a half-dozen kisses; and then she danced off for her sun-bonnet, and soon she and Willie were racing down the broad graveled path to the gate.

It was a beautiful morning. The dew-drops sparkled on the grass and trees by the roadside, and the dandelions and butter-cups in the meadow looked up to the blue sky with a bright smile on their yellow faces, as if it were a joy to live, while the birds were doing their best to put their happiness to music.

Just as the children came to the bridge over the little brook that went dancing merrily along in the golden sunlight, Willie's bright eyes caught a glimpse of a robin hopping along by the roadside, with a bit of dried grass in his bill—probably building material for his nest.

"Keep still, May," whispered Willie quickly. "Don't say a word;" and he stooped to pick up a stone that lay at his feet. But May caught hold of his arm just as he raised it to throw.

"Don't, Willie!" she cried; "it's one of God's birdies. Don't hurt it, please."

Willie stopped, and looked at her a moment in astonishment, then said:—

"What a queer girl you are, May! Well, I won't hit him now, just to please you, and I couldn't any way, for see! he has flown away;" and the children hurried on to school.

A day or two after, Willie was going on an errand for his mother, when he saw a little kitten running along the road, and his first thought was to look for a stone to throw; but his next one was:—

"I suppose May would say that was one of God's kitties. What a funny girl she is!" and the kitten was not hurt that time.

Willie is a big boy now, but when he is tempted to hurt any innocent animal, he always thinks of little May's words, "one of God's creatures," and they are never harmed by him.—Child at Home.

Terms of Subscription, Payable in Advance.

| | |
|---|---|
| A single copy one year | $2.00 |
| A single copy six months | 1.00 |
| A single copy three months | .50 |
| Five copies to one address for six months | 4.50 |
| Ten copies to one address for six months | 8.00 |
| Twenty copies to one address for six months | 15.00 |
| Thirty copies to one address for six months | 22.00 |

These terms, allowing a subscription of 50 cents for three months, place the paper within reach of all who are able to pay any thing. The reduction in price, where five or more papers are sent to one address, enables subscribers, by combining, to receive a large number at reduced rates; thus supplying the poor in their neighborhood.

We propose that those who have ability, when sending their own subscriptions, also send what they are willing to give to aid in circulating the Crisis among the poor, who we have always with us.

Postage on the Crisis when prepaid, quarterly, or yearly, at the office where it is received, is 13 cts. a year in any part of Massachusetts, and 26 cts. to any other part of the United States.

Papers for subscribers in Canada and the British Provinces must be prepaid in Boston, 26 cents per year, in addition to the subscription price. Hence one dollar will pay for 22 papers, or $2.25 for one year.

Rules for Correspondents.

Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private.

Over all business matters, write Business.

Over all articles for the paper, write For the Crisis.

All articles should be accompanied by the writer's name, for the Editors' information, even if it is not published.

When the names of new subscribers are sent, please say they are new, and it will save us much labor.

Private Letters. Those wishing to address the Editor on matters not connected with the office, will please write the word Private on the outside of the envelope.

All persons writing to the office should give their [illegible] State [illegible]

"How long, O Lord!"

BY R. THAYER.

I.

How long, O Lord, how long
Ere we that day shall see,
When men shall to thy temple throng,
There to be taught by thee?

II.

How long ere men will learn,
If they in peace would live,—
That others' rights they should not spurn,
Should others' faults forgive.

III.

How long, O Lord, shall war
Our fairest prospects blight?
And men, regardless of thy law,
Refuse to do the right?

IV.

How long on Afric's sons
Shall we the fetters bind,
When Thou hast said "the same blood runs Alike in all mankind"? *

V.

O give our rulers, Lord,
The wisdom from above,
That they may hearken to thy word,
And soon this curse remove.

VI.

Then shall the "clouds" disperse,
When men thy will shall do,
And thou no more our land wilt curse,
WHEN MAN TO MAN IS TRUE.

Boston, July 28th, 1862.

* Acts 17: 26.

Popular Preaching and its Effects.

Truly the condition of this world is omnific. There is a combination of evidences, taking into consideration the moral, political, natural and religious elements, that should inspire this generation with fear for looking for those things that are coming on the earth. To say nothing at present on the exhausted condition of the chronological page, the feverish, unsettled, swaying to and fro, and mighty upheaving of the political elements,—the morbific taint in the atmosphere, stunting, blasting, and breathing blight and mildew on vegetation, and every species of disease upon the human family, undefinable to sanctified men,—the immorality of the present day, without a parallel on the pages of history, in the language of the North American some few years since—"From the terrible evidences of human depravity which develop themselves from time to time and from day to day, we begin to think that our cities are rapidly descending to the level of Sodom and Gomorrah."

The religious elements at the present day are a living, standing, preaching evidence of the nearness of the judgment. Look at the haughty, Pharisaical indifference manifest in almost the entire body of the ministry, except it be in respect to some national or social evil. The demands of the gospel in point and fact are, if ever touched, done with silken gloves of the finest texture; so that the sensual, proud, haughty, money-griping, cold, formal, dead, twice dead, plucked up by the roots, stagnant, hymn-singing, Laodicean church, are never disturbed by their sweet, sugar-coated, weekly effigies of the gospel.
